SECRETARY STODDARD continues to write thrilling letters of the encouragement he has at Washington, where Mrs. Stoddard is soon to join him; and if prevailing prayer is offered and "the Spirit poured upon us from on high," those stupendous revivals, which Albert Barnes says are what we are to pray for and expect, will sweep away those ancient idolatrous mysteries in their modern forms and names; and Prof. Bailey's "Central Union Mission" and Gospel wagon will be a part of the work at No. 215 4½ street, lit by the same fire from heaven.

REV. A. J. BAILEY of Ogden, Utah, writes that six Christian denominations have held a Christian Convention at Salt Lake and gives a vivid description of the evils of Mormonism and a cheering account of the labors of ministers and churches in Utah for its overthrow. Mr. Bailey was an active and ardent young member of the Aurora (Ill.) convention, Oct. 31st, 1867. We should have been glad if some notice had been taken of the fact that the prophet Joseph Smith was a Freemason in New York, where Mormonism started, and that a Mormon lodge existed at Nauvoo, but its charter was taken away by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, because Smith instituted a stop degree to keep out Masons from Mormon lodges while Mormons could go into theirs; and that the endowment houses are the Masonic temples of Utah. But the late ministerial convention at Salt Lake as reported by Mr. Bailey takes no note of Mormon Masonry. This gives us fear lest some of the Utah ministers are themselves Masons. The first Christian minister who preached at Salt Lake was a Congregationalist, Norman McLeod, a Royal Arch Mason. Of course Mormons despise a minister who preaches against Mormonism and practices Masonry. They are the same thing with different names and forms; and, what is more, God and angels abhor him. Will our good brother Bailey give us some light on this subject?

SOURCE OF FREEMASONRY.

The Christian Conservator has an interesting and able letter from Rev. H. J. Becker, who writes from Egypt, March 24th last, and gives the following graphic description of the state of society there, from facts of many years of which he was an eye-witness:

"Polygamy is in practice everywhere in Egypt. Four wives is the limit. When the man becomes tired of one, he casts her off, and buys another. The four favorites are often seen riding together on a two-wheeled cart, and the poor cast off creature, barefooted and but half clad, with head uncovered (chastity no longer protected) walking in the rear to serve the younger wives. "Four," say they, "Mohammed taught is all they can love at one time." The woman has no choice. The man and the father of the woman consummate the contract, and at midnight she is carried to his "harem," not knowing who it is till she enters the den in which every vestige of womanhood is hopelessly destroyed."

Our readers know that all standard Masonic writers derive "the mysteries" from Egypt through Greece and Rome down to the Freemasonry of the present day. Its baptism particularly, the Scottish Rite vaunts, is derived from the religion which existed before the pyramids. The above quotation from Rev. Mr. Becker's letter to the Conservator shows how foul the fountain from which Freemasonry flows; and the stream is not clearer than its fountain. The present deluge of secretism now flooding the United States is a moral copy and transcript of the mysteries in the time of our Saviour and his apostles, named Eleusinian from Eleusis, a town some thirty miles from Athens, where was a temple of Ceres. They had spread over the world and constituted most of the worship of their gods, each one of whom had a secret worship known only to the initiated. (Mackey's Lexicon, p. 315.) Once a year almost all Greece marched in procession to Eleusis. They marched, they danced, they sung, they initiated; in short, the processions and nightly picnics now covering the South, making night hideous, are exactly copied by the Negroes of the South; and now, as in Paul's day, "it is a shame even to speak of the things which are done of them in secret." And all these abominations and frivolities are pompously practiced in the name of religion. Now when the Pentecost revivals started the apostles met these secret mysteries in open, square antagonism: at Mars Hill, they denounced them; at Lystra, where Barnabas was to be Jupiter and Paul Mercury, they told them to "turn from these vanities." Acts 14: 15. Paul commanded to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Eph. 5: 11. And in 1 Cor. 10: 20, Paul told the disciples their cups and tables used in their picnics were cups and tables of devils.

Now, at this day, the labors of pastors are being superceded by evangelists who are filling the churches with their converts, who then sit down in fellowship with Masons, Odd-fellows and the rest, who practice these very abominations which are so fearfully forbidden and denounced by the Word of God. And can we suppose that the Holy Spirit sanctifies those communions with his presence. Allowing all we may for ignorance winked at, and God's blessing on the sincere, we cannot but see that as discussion proceeds and light increases the ordinary mixed church communions, where the worshipers of God and Baal sit down together, the communion service grows shallow, mercy pales, and wrath thickens about the mercy-seat. We respectfully urge evangelists to let it be distinctly known by the hearers that when they invite sinners to come to Christ, they expect them to come out from the lodge, as well as from liquor and other sins. Let that once be distinctly understood, and then conversion will mean something, and Pentecost revivals will, like other histories, reproduce themselves. God's ear has not grown heavy nor his arm short. The converts of Pentecost were among the most priest-ridden, superstitious people on earth; yet fourteen years had not elapsed when James could say to Paul, "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews believe." If by faithfully-declared truth the devils are driven out of churches which worship them, just think what a vast room will be made vacant for the indwelling of the Holy Ghost! Think of the vast amount of time and money that will be rescued from the lodges and devoted to Christ! And three and five thousand converts in revivals may seem no more wonderful now than they did at Pentecost, or than their record seems now. And there has not, since Pentecost, been a more favorable time than the present, or more favorable circumstances than those now existing at our national seat of government, for such stupendous displays of God's power to save souls. We are surely in the last days, and nearing the last question, viz., whether Christ or Satan is to have the worship of this globe. And at Washington an ex-slave has, by invitation of our President, dined with the diplomats of the nations; and other ex-slaves have occupied seats in both houses of Congress, and in the executive departments of the first Republic on earth. And if black men and white must be brothers in Christ before Christ reigns here, now is the time and Washington the place to move for it. But for all this God must be "inquired of to do it."

THE POPE AND IRELAND.

The best and the worst men have often united in supporting the freest principles. The good support liberty because they love justice; the bad, either because they hate restraint or have ulterior designs. The last is the manifest motive of the Pope in his late letter against "boycotting" and home rule in Ireland.

The Book of the Apocalypse, Prof. Stuart used to say to his classes, "is a pictorial and pantomime revelation of the fate and fortune of the church down to the close of time and the final judgment of mankind by Christ." In this moving tableaux of religious events, Christ and Satan appear as antagonists and leaders of the opposing forces in the ceaseless struggle between right and wrong, truth and falsehood, in this and other worlds; and "the Dragon," called also "that old serpent, the devil and Satan," appears throughout the whole Bible as the rival and opponent of Christ; and the "woman" distinguished for finery and moral filth, the beasts, a shadowy image of the leading beast, and the false prophet or Mormonism of all ages, are among the dramatis personæ in this prophetic drama of the world.

That Rome is the chief seat and source of these moral abominations is plainly declared in two verses of the 17th chapter of this august and wonderful book. The verses are these:

"I will tell the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns."—v. 17. "The woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth."—v 18.

This city can be none other than the city of Rome. None other ever claimed or attempted to "reign over the kings of the earth." Not that Rome and Romanism are, or contain and emit all the moral and religious corruptions on earth: but that Rome is their "mother" and contains specimens of all, and is their head center. And when we consider the vastness of such a symbolic picture of events, the wonder is, not that we can understand so little, but that we can understand anything at all with certainty concerning so stupendous a vision.

One thing is obvious on the face of such a book, viz, that popery is but a fragment of an infinite scheme protracted into and closing the drama of our world's history, in which legions of angels and of devils bear their respective parts; and in which an individual pope is but an insignificant actor compared with the "principalities and powers" with whom we wrestle; that popes should stumble, make and correct mistakes, and do things most inconsistent and opposite to each other, and this is what we see. A pope pensioned and patronized Charles II., who was a concealed apostate, and his brother James II., an open one, and the "simpleton who lost three kingdoms for a mass." Both of these kings damaged the Romish cause. To procure the restoration of these weak and worthless Stuarts, the same pope patronized Chevalier Ramsay, a Presbyterian apostate to Rome under Fenelon; and he, with the Jesuits, invented the present scheme or "Rite" of Freemasonry to restore the Stuarts, which attempt failed. And when Garibaldi, Mazzini and other patriots afterward used the same Masonry to resist the popedom, the reigning pope denounced the system he had patronized in Ramsay and the Stuarts.

In the year 1156 Pope Adrian III., by a bull, gave all Ireland to Henry II. of England; and years after Jesuits, doubtless with the approval of the pope, their master, attempted to blow up the king and Parliament of England with gunpowder. And the present pope, Leo XIII., is now courting the favor of Queen Victoria, the reputed "head of the church" in the leading Protestant kingdom, by his letter against boycotting her Irish landlords; and he has lately turned Democrat and given his official sanction to an Anti masonic League, which pledges those who sign it not to vote for Freemasons or take Masonic papers. Whether Leo succeeds better opposing Gladstone and Home Rule than his predecessor did in his movement to quell Luther, remains to be seen. God often "taketh the wise in their own craftiness;" and we know that a single human priest living at Rome, on a salary of five million dollars a year, paid largely in pence by the poorest and most ignorant of the nominally Christian peoples, will cease to be popular when those people recover sense. As a system of priestcraft, it is doomed and must fall; and its fall is graphically foretold and described.

But Protestantism is now fearfully leaning to Rome in laxity of morals, neglect of the Sabbath, the practice of spurious rites, and keeping Romish festivals, in union with Knight Templar Masons; and, in short, practicing those very abominations which have brought down the wrath of God in Palestine, where Christ walked and taught, and which, unless forsaken, will surely bring wrath upon us.

THE ILLINOIS PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

Of all the State meetings held in preparation for the National convention at Indianapolis next Wednesday, the gathering at Springfield last week surpassed all for numbers and enthusiasm. It was to be expected that many people of radical views would be present, but the crowds, the zeal, the candor, the intelligence, cleanliness and piety, were a revelation and astonishment to the politicians who have been accustomed to look upon such conventions as a cock-pit for wire-pulling, vulgarity and swapping of "influence," under the benign seductions of a cloud of tobacco smoke. The voice of prayer and the singing of Gospel hymns was a happy contrast and augury of a great reform in the nation. The State Journal (Republican), in a long and very complimentary editorial, contrasts the meeting with that of other similar bodies held in the same hall, and commends its cleanliness and exceptional appearance and numbers to serious consideration.

Hon. James Lamont, the only Prohibitionist sent to the last State legislature, was made temporary chairman, and was succeeded by Dr. J. G. Evans of Onarga when a permanent officer was chosen. His position was one of extreme difficulty, but he succeeded in keeping the overflowing spirits in check and getting some important business completed.

For the campaign in Illinois some $6,000 were raised; a strong delegation was appointed to Indianapolis; and excellent resolutions adopted condemn license; favor the disfranchisement of illiterates and habitual drunkards, female suffrage, tariff for revenue only, the Sabbath preserved, and arbitration for labor questions. The ideas are good but clumsily expressed. The ticket nominated is: For Governor, David H. Harts of Lincoln; Lieut. Governor, Joseph L. Whitlock of Chicago; Secretary of State, J. Ross Hanna, Monmouth; Attorney General, F. E. Andrews, Sterling; Treasurer, John W. Hart of Rockford; Auditor, Uriah Copp of Loda.

The latter is a lodgite, and has been a bulwark of Good Templarism in Illinois. His secretly pledged friends were anxious to put him forward. They nominated him as "Grand Worthy Chief Templar of the State of Illinois" for delegate to Indianapolis, but the Convention did not want so much dignity taken out of the State. Again he was put up for Secretary of State, and again left far in the rear. The Cynosure representative remembers a third nomination and defeat, but is not sure for what honor. Evidently lodge dignity had few worshipers in the Convention. At length Mr. Packard, a Chicago lawyer, who does not belong to the lodge, fearing that Good Templars would lose what devotion they had to prohibition, in their chagrin and love of lodgery, asked that Copp be nominated by acclamation and the chairman neglected to ask for a negative vote.

General Fisk was endorsed as candidate for President, and the Good Templars attempted again to advertise themselves by bringing forward for Vice President the name of John A. Brooks of Missouri, who is one of their order. The matter was tabled.

Much enthusiasm was aroused by the proposition to organize the old soldiers of both sides in a "Blue and Gray" society, whose object should be the burial of the bloody shirt and the saloon in one common grave. The question was raised, Is this to follow the G. A. R., etc., into the swamps of secretism? The reply was explicit: It is to be open as the day.

Treasurer W. I. Phillips of the National Christian Association and the assistant editor of the Cynosure were both delegates, but the latter "tarried by the stuff" at home. Mr. Phillips was cordially recognized by many, and the fact of his relation to the N. C. A. and the Cynosure was always a sufficient endorsement with strangers. He was elected chairman of the delegation from the 8th district and member of the finance committee. Assisted by brethren Whitcomb of Bloomington, Reber of Wheaton and Parry of Humboldt Park, he put a copy of the memorial adopted at the late political conference in this city in the hands of most of the delegates. It was received eagerly when its character was known, and many were the remarks of approval quietly expressed. Similar remarks were made when Bro. Phillips read and passed to the proper committee a resolution asking for the nomination of men unsworn by the lodge. Rev. Dr. Kennedy of Sandwich, J. W. Haggard, editor of the Bloomington Lancet, and others, gave their endorsement to the principles of the American Anti-Secrecy League.

These facts are greatly encouraging. They indicate a quiet recognition of the principles that must ultimately prevail respecting the lodge in politics, and which would have a place in the platform but for the good brethren, some of whom refuse to fellowship the lodge in their churches, who prefer the path of expediency in order to keep the Good Templar votes.

—Bro. F. J. Davidson, our untiring colporteur in New Orleans, wrote Saturday of very poor health during the week, with a threat of fever. We pray God to spare a life so useful to his race.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman, the N. C. A. Southern agent, reached Chicago Saturday morning. He spoke to the College Church on Sabbath evening on progress in the South and the education of the colored race to a deeply interested congregation.

—All our readers who are engaged in Sabbath-school work will greet Miss Flagg with joy, as she resumes her excellent notes in this number. May this proof of her recovery be but the first of many labors in which her consecrated talents shall win great success for the kingdom of Christ among men.

—The Wesleyan Methodist's report of the Champlain Conference, New York, shows a rallying to the testimony of the church against the lodge. Rev. U. B. Lathrop, formerly of Illinois, with others, made powerful speeches for the truth. Bro. I. R. B. Arnold in the same number shows, with his usual happy and forcible style, how fatal it must needs be for a church to trim to the world and forsake Christian principle.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, district secretary and lecturer for the National Reform Association, was welcomed at this office last week on his way to the Reformed Presbyterian Synod at Allegheny City. His labors during the past year have been abundant in several States. He promises the Cynosure readers a review of his experiences and successes.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall is in St. Paul. Bro. Fenton has been questioning him, and finds his position on the lodge entirely unsatisfactory. "Is it a sin to be a Freemason?" "No," replies Dr. Munhall, "unless they make an idol of it and trust to it for salvation, as many do." We regret exceedingly to learn this of Dr. Munhall and hope that his position is not fairly understood. Otherwise he has need to learn again the "first principles" of the Gospel. "For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God." Heb. 5: 12.

THE VICE PRESIDENT FOR THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

A PROTEST FROM THE REFORM LEADER OF KENTUCKY.

Shall we hunt for a Southern man as a candidate for the place of Vice President in the Prohibition party?

As a Prohibitionist I profess to be wedded to a principle—a principle world-wide in its application. As a representive of that principle I should be ashamed to ask where is the man from? The rather, is he fit—fit in intelligence and moral worth? Are his principles and practices in harmony with acknowledged righteousness and correct civil government?

Also in asking such a question to Prohibitionists, I should fear lest I would offend them—my question implying that they, too, were influenced by such local considerations.

Nor am I concerned about the question, From what old party did he come? Whether Democratic or Republican?

The question is this, Is the man a fair, open exponent of the principle of prohibition, and such other correlative principles and practices as are in harmony with republican and righteous government?

In fidelity to such principles I must protest against the nomination of "General" and Rev. Green Clay Smith. I am informed directly and personally, by his own brother, that Green Clay Smith of Kentucky is a Freemason.

Now when I see a professed minister of the Gospel, in a Republican government, in times of peace, and under cover of night, creeping into a secret lodge; at first less than half clad, and hood-winked; and then under the imprecations of horrid penalties, in the name of God, covenanting never to reveal things he knows not; and then persistently omitting from all official prayer the name of Jesus Christ the Saviour of men, my soul turns away from such. I say to my soul and to my neighbors, such principles and practices are antagonistic to true republicanism, true philanthropy, and true Christianity.

I have seen here in this South the evil fruits of secretism—Ku klux, White Leaguers, Knights of Golden Circle, etc.—spawns of the old mother Freemasonry. I want no more of such. A great national party need not to load itself with men affiliated with such leagues.

The Prohibition convention that met and made nominations four years ago, recognized this fact; and in compliance with the suggestions of God-fearing men and women gave us men of clean hands, ready for "OPEN WORK". I ask for such again. I care not whether the standard-bearers be from North or South. True devotion to principle will bridge over Mason's and Dixon's line. Talk about localities will not.

Once more, if the Prohibition party, for the sake of members, shall deliberately take into its bosom a standard-bearer living in practices known as iniquitous and dangerous, subversive of correct civil government, it will sooner or later die as did the old Whig Party by allying itself with slavery; and as will the Republican party now die by its alliance with whisky.

Let us learn wisdom from the past and pray for divine guidance in the future. JOHN G. FEE.

Berea, Ky., May 16, 1888.

—Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., editor of the Missionary Review, considers the great missionary conference to be held in Exeter Hall, London, June 9 to 19, to be a council "second in importance to none since the Day of Pentecost." Rev. David McFall of Boston is delegate to that meeting.

A GREAT MEETING FOR PROHIBITION.

HOW THE GOOD TEMPLARS SNUBBED THE INFANT PARTY.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., May 17th, 1888.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Thinking you may desire reports from the late State Prohibition convention, and from as many different sources as possible, I venture to send you the impressions of one who was there.

This meeting cannot but be historic; marking as it does the stepping forth of the reform from the home circle, the prayer meeting and the small hall or tent gathering of cranks, fanatics and enthusiasts to a grand out-pouring of the masses, a ground-swell of the coming earthquake which will break up old accretions of wrong and usher in the light of justice and right. Here were a thousand delegates representing other thousands all over our vast State, drawn together by the overwhelming impulse of the justice of their cause. They were no mean spectacle in so pusillanimous and self-seeking an era as ours.

Our great Representative Hall was filled with delegates, and two districts overflowing to the galleries. It formed an inspiring sight indeed. The character of the crowd was in very marked contrast with the usual material of such assemblies. There was no odor of alcohol, no clouds of tobacco smoke and no use for the ubiquitous spittoons. The religious element was a striking feature. A clergyman presided. Pastors and Gospel workers were quite numerous. Gospel songs and prayers opened and closed all exercises, and the fervent "Amens" which ran through the assemblage showed the devotional spirit which animated and united all hearts.

These people came together with nothing cut and dried, in the old party machine fashion. The party boss is unknown among them and each man in his enthusiasm does not fear to tackle anything which can come up. This of course would make an Herculean task for a presiding officer. Our Hercules—moral and physical—was found in the person of Rev. Mr. Evans; who, amid the bubbling enthusiasm and almost boundless undisciplined energy of our young giant, kept him in steady rein.

It was doubtless an oversight, at which we are dissatisfied, that in the very first sentence of the platform the name of God is used simply as the ruler of the universe. He is thus "a consuming fire" (Heb. 12:29), and so acknowledged by the lodge. He is our God in Jesus Christ, his Son, and we regret that the distinctive Christian feature of our reform was not announced. Can we not see that this error is not renewed at Indianapolis?

During the entire deliberations Good Templarism peeped but once. This was in the usual goody-goody strain and passed off as lodge bombast usually does. Their grand muck-a-muck, Mr. Uriah Copp, was nominated for Auditor, but seemed to be in no way aided by his secret affiliation. The poor taste of this order in seeking recognition by the Prohibition party will appear when we know that in 1872 they laughed to scorn the idea of separate political action.

That year the Prohibition leaders appointed their State convention at the same time and place (Wenona, Ill.) as the meeting of the Grand Lodge. The convention was to assemble immediately at the close of the lodge. The lodge members simply jeered at the convention and went home. The convention (of seven) did assemble, however, and chose electors to vote for Messrs. Black and Russel, our candidates, and from that day to this they have kept up the chain of political action.

This I have from one of the seven who met; and I give it to illustrate the sublime cheek of an order which is continually seeking recognition from the party whose uprising they opposed, although the world besides see the incongruity of secret methods in a vast popular movement like this.

This (1872) was the year which gave us the American party, which has always been for separate political action and for unrestricted suffrage.

Which of these two most deserve our respect?

We here greatly rejoice at the inception of an organization in which our soldiers may unite without the puerility of secrecy. I refer to the "Blue and Gray" recruits at our meeting. There is inspiration in the thought of clasping hands across the bloody chasm which the G. A. R. and the U. V. U. can never feel.

The convention separated with the long-meter Doxology and general hand-shaking. The crucial year of our reform is at hand. We approach the main summit of our Hill Difficulty, and believe that one strong, generous effort will place us where easy staging will carry us through. Fraternally,

H. D. WHITCOMB.

THE HOME.

"THE LOVED AND LOST."

The loved and lost! Why do we call them lost?
Because we miss them from our onward road?
God's unseen angel o'er our pathway curst,
Looked on us all, and loving them the most,
Straightway relieved them of its weary load.

And this we call a loss; oh, selfish sorrow
Of selfish hearts! Oh, we of little faith!
Let us look round, some argument to borrow
Why we in patience should await the morrow
That surely must succeed this night of death.

Ay, look upon this dreary, desert path,
The thorns and thistles whersoe'er we turn;
What trials and what tears, what wrongs and wrath,
What struggles and what strife the journey hath!
They have escaped from these, and lo! we mourn.

Ask the poor sailor when the wreck is done,
Who with his treasure strove the shore to reach
While with the raging waves he battled on,
Was it not joy where every joy seemed gone,
To see his loved ones landed on the beach?

A poor wayfarer, leading by the hand
A little child, had halted by the well
To wash from off her feet the clinging sand,
And tell the tired boy of that bright land
Where, this long journey past, they longed to dwell,

When lo! the King who many mansions had
Drew near and looked upon the suffering twain,
Then pitying spake, "Give me the little lad;
In strength renewed and glorious beauty clad,
I'll bring him with me when I come again."

Did she make answer selfishly and wrong:
"Nay, but the woes I feel he too must share!"
Or, rather bursting into joyful song,
Go on her way rejoicing and made strong
To struggle on, since he was freed from care.

We will do likewise; Death has made no breach
In love and sympathy, in hope and trust;
If outward sign or sound our ears ne'er reach,
There is an inward spiritual speech
That greets us still, though mortal tongues be dust.

It bids us do the work that they laid down,
Take up the song where they broke off the strain;
So journeying till we reach the heavenly town,
Where are laid up our treasures and our crown,
And our lost loved ones will be found again.

THE GRACE OF GIVING.

Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., has an article in the Homiletic Review on "The Grace of Giving." Three things are to be dedicated: our time, in recognition of which we give one-seventh; our property, in acknowledgment of which we give one-tenth, and our hearts, in secret prayer. In the holy of holies in the tabernacle was the golden candlestick with its seven lamps, a symbol of our time; the table of shewbread, the symbol of our substance, and the golden altar, the incense of which symbolized our prayers, all devoted to God. "Shaftsbury speaks with contempt of 'munificent bequests,' as though there were any real munificence in giving away what one can no longer keep or use for himself; but emphasizes munificent donations, in which the donor anticipates the ultimate reward by the joy of giving and of blessing others." "Bishop Coxe says he knows a man in western New York who puts five cents in the offering on Sabbath days in the free church which he attends, but pays $800 a season for an opera box; and the Living Church matches him with a millionaire of its acquaintance who subscribes $1.00 a Sabbath towards the expenses of his church, but stops payment during his winter excursions in the South, in which he expends thousands of dollars upon himself and family."

Dr. William Kincaid says, "A friend of mine, receiving some money at the hands of a bank officer the other day, noticed depending from one of the bills a little scarlet thread. He tried to pull it out, but found that it was woven into the very texture of the note and could not be withdrawn. 'Ah!' said the banker, 'you will find that all the government bills are made so now. It is an expedient to prevent counterfeiting.' Just so Christ has woven the scarlet thread of his blood into every dollar that the Christian owns. It cannot be withdrawn; it marks it as his. My brother, my sister, when you take out a government note to expend for some needless luxury, notice the scarlet thread therein and reflect that it belongs to Christ. How can we trifle with the price of blood."

Charlotte Maria Tucker, pleading for a new mission station in Punjaub, says, "It has often occurred to me that many true servants of God are not sufficiently ingenious in finding out ways to increase their means of giving. When, in Israel's tabernacle, brass was required for a laver, the women gave their metal mirrors! What a sacrifice of vanity was there! A Mohammedan woman here has lately devoted the jewels which adorned her head (120 rupees in value) to swell the subscription for Turkey. Is there here no example for us? Many a Christian lady could sacrifice the gold chain and the jeweled ring, and so realize the delight of laying her gems at the feet of her Lord. Why should the table of the Christian gentleman be loaded with superfluous plate, when it might afford to him the privilege of laying up treasure in heaven?"

"Franklin's plan was to lend to a poor fellow in need and require payment to be made when the borrower has the ability, to some other person in need. This avoided the humiliation of accepting a charity, while it gave aid when there was most necessity and passed it on to some other needy recipient by and by."—Rev. J. M. Foster.

AN ALABASTER BOX.

It was in those dreary days in Kansas when the grasshopper had become a burden in a far heavier sense than that which was in Solomon's thought when he drew his picture of weary old age. Days when even strong, hopeful men grew desperate, and sent out their plea for help to their more blessed brethren, whose farms and gardens and orchards the plague swarms had not visited; days when it fared harder yet with the feeble and the lonely who knew not how to make their voices heard, or where to stretch their hands, save in the sight of heaven. Men's hearts move quickly to the cry of want, in spite of sin and selfishness, and very soon relief came pouring in from every quarter, as church after church presented the matter in the public congregation, and the press everywhere urged speedy and generous giving. From one of these church services a lady went home, eager to contribute her share toward the relief fund, and especially interested at finding among those designated by the governors of the afflicted States to receive and distribute supplies, the name of a personal friend. She said to herself, "I, myself, will pack a special box, and send it to Mrs B. There shall not be one thing in it which I would not be willing myself to use or receive from a friend."

The box was filled in that fashion, and held stores of new, comfortable and valuable things—clothing, books and bedding, and still there was a space for one thing more. Three years before there had been taken from that household a precious mother, one of those gentle saints whom, as Beecher once said, "God sometimes lets linger on through an Indian summer of life just to show us how beautiful his grace can make a human soul." All her clothing had gone to help the destitute except one garment, a wrapper of soft cashmere, handsomely trimmed with silk and warmly lined and wadded, for the comfort of the delicate invalid, to whose shoulders a shawl was a burden. It had been a Christmas present, every stitch set by loving fingers, and had been constantly worn for the few remaining weeks, until laid off by the owner only a day before her death. It was a sacred garment, and the daughter had said: "I can never part with it; it would seem like a desecration for any one else to wear it."

But, looking for one more article for the box, she saw the wrapper, and instantly came the thought: "What if in some home, a mother, equally beloved and cherished, is suffering for the lack of just such a comfortable garment? Would not your saint in heaven be grieved if you withheld it?" She took it and looked at it. There in the pocket were the spectacles through which the sweet eyes were wont to find strength and patience in God's Word, and the soft silk handkerchief, just as the invalid hands had placed them on that last morning when she said: "After all, I belicve I am too tired to sit up. If the Lord calls me home to-day, I want you all to be glad."

The daughter took these out, but with a second thought put them back, placing with them a note to say:

"My precious mother laid aside this dress when she went to put on the garments of immortality. I hope it may be a comfort to some other invalid, who, like her, may find God's grace made perfect in weakness."

In a letter to Mrs. B. she told the story of the wrapper, and asked as a special favor that it might, if possible, be given to some one who would appreciate it at its real value. So the box went on its way, and very soon word came back from it through Mrs. B., who wrote:

"You must have been inspired to send that wrapper. The box was here, but not yet opened, when I had a call from a young lady, formerly one of our teachers, who had gone out to live with her mother in a little shanty on some land she was trying to secure under the Homestead Bill. She had to walk a long distance to her school, and finally her mother fell sick, and she was compelled to give it up. There they struggled on all alone, till at the very point of starvation, before either of them could consent to ask for help; but this morning she succeeded in getting a boy to stay with her mother while she walked fourteen miles to town to ask for relief. We shall send them supplies to-morrow, and having sent her within a mile of her home with a basket for their immediate wants, I opened your box, and found the wrapper, sent, I am sure, for this very case, for we have only the coarsest clothing left, and these women are refined, cultured, and withal brave, as only Christian women can be. You did well to break your alabaster box, though it was 'exceedingly precious,' and I think you will even catch a little of its sweetness yourself."

But that was not the last. Two weeks afterward came a beautifully-written letter from the little prairie home, telling the rest of the story.

"It was very hard for me to realize that I must actually ask for charity, but I could not see my mother suffer. Her confidence in God had never faltered, and all through that long, weary walk I was asking, with some bitterness in my heart, why she should be forsaken in her old age. My talk with Mrs. B. cheered me up a little, she was so kind and sympathizing, and then I saw what scores and hundreds were as bad off as we, or even worse. But, after all, I could not bring myself to ask for clothing; I thought we could get along in some way as we were, and all the way home I was reproaching myself for my foolish pride that had prevented my asking for what might have made my mother more comfortable. You can never know with what delight the beautiful wrapper was received when we found it among the stores sent us. I cried with joy when I shook it out and spread it before my mother, and witnessed her almost childish pleasure in its warmth and daintiness. I soon had her dressed in it, and sitting up once more without fear of a chill; but when she put her hand in her pocket and drew out the spectacles, then she, too, cried. Her delight and comfort during the long, lonely days when I have been away from her, has been to read, and for some time the rapid failure of her sight has almost wholly deprived her of this resource, but these glasses were exactly fitted to her eyes, and she felt as rich as if she had fallen heir to a fortune, when she opened her Bible and found the pages once more clear and distinct before her. She turned to the verse, 'I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread,' and put your little note in for a mark, saying: 'It is true, my dear; it is not begging bread to make known your wants to those who give with love, because we are children of one Father. It is blessed for us and for them.'"

This story is true in all its particulars as nearly as I can recall them after the lapse of years since they came to my knowledge. Perhaps it may move some other Mary to bring out her hoarded box of precious ointment and break it for the refreshing of way-worn feet.—Emily Huntington Miller.

HOW A BOY'S SOUL WAS WON.

The farm on which I worked was in the suburbs of a country town; and a beautiful night in June, when a few drops of rain were falling from fleecy clouds, I was overtaken in the streets by a pleasant-faced gentleman, as I was driving two Durham cows from the pasture to the stables. I cast my eye backward. Hearing footsteps, and seeing a cheerful face, my whole soul was delighted, and I felt it meant me. He approached me on the opposite side of the street, but did not hesitate to put his nicely-blacked boots into the mud; coming to my side and kindly holding over my head the umbrella he was carrying.

So cheerfully he asked the natural questions to interest a boy: "Whose cows are they? How much milk do they give? What did they cost? Do you drive them night and morning?" with many others; to which with a real pleasure I auswered. Then, with the same pleasant, winning way, he asked if I was a Christian.

"No, sir."

Wonderful, I thought, to talk about cows and being a Christian at the same time, and in the same pleasant and natural way.

"Do you want to be?"

"I always wanted to be, sir."

"Do you pray?"

"I have prayed, sir, night and morning, since I was old enough to understand what it meant."

"Have you a mother?"

"No, sir."

"Where is your mother?"

"She is in heaven, sir."

"When did she go there?"

"Last December, sir."

"Was she a Christian?"

"A Christian, sir! The best mother a boy ever had."

"Tell me about her sickness."

"She had consumption for three years, and was confined to her room for six months."

"Did she talk with you about being a Christian?"

"She was not a talking woman, but she prayed and lived before me, sir."

"Tell me about her dying."

"My father called my brother and myself about two o'clock on a very cold December morning, saying, 'Hasten, boys; your mother is dying.'"

"How did you feel when you were dressing?"

"It was very cold in that unfinished attic where we slept, and I shook from head to foot. Putting on my coat, I got my hand between the lining and the sleeve, and I could scarcely get it back, I shook so."

"What did you think then?"

"Think, sir! What could I think, only that I had no mother to mend it? For it was never like that, no never, when my mother could get about the house."

"When your mother was put down into the grave, how did you feel?"

"Feel, sir! If I was prepared, I felt that I would like to be buried by her side!"

"Do you feel lonely?"

"All the time, sir."

"Why so?"

"Oh, sir! it seems to me no one loves me!"

"Have you a Sunday-school teacher?"

"Yes, sir."

"Don't he love you?"

"I don't know, sir; he never said so."

"How do you expect he would say it?"

"Oh, sir! not to tell it out, but to speak to me on the street, and to feel interested in me."

"Does he never do that?"

"Never, sir; he doesn't seem to know me on the streets, and us boys feel that he doesn't care much for us. Why, sir, he went to sleep in our class a few Sundays since."

The stranger seemed so interested in me, his face glowed with love, as he continued:—

"Can't you tell me something your mother said to you during her sickness?"

"Yes, sir. I used to watch with her occasionally the last few weeks of her sickness, calling my father at midnight or at one o'clock. One morning I stepped to the bedside to kiss my mother good-night before calling my father, and she said, 'Hand me the glass of water, my boy.' Giving it to her, sir, she drank the contents. Handing back the glass, and dropping her thin, bony hand upon the sheet, she said: 'It is very white, but it will be whiter in a few days, and you won't have to sit up and watch with your mother.'"

The stranger's interest in me seemed to overflow as he passed his umbrella from his right to his left hand, seizing my right hand with his,exclaiming:—

"My dear boy, I think you ought to become a Christian now!"

"Yes, sir; I would like to, if I knew how."

At this point in the interview we came to the street corner where the cows turn to go to the stable. Grasping my hand with increased warmth, he said,—

"Do you turn here?"

"Yes, sir."

With a look of tender love that I have no power to describe, he said: "My dear lad, you must become a Christian, and grow up and be useful, doing good in the world."

Then, bending towards me, and drawing down the umbrella that he might be unobserved by passers-by, he offered, in substance, this prayer, still firmly holding my hand: "O God, bless this motherless boy. He says no one loves him; but, dear Lord Jesus, show him how much you love him, and how you will wash away his sins and make him happy here, and give him a home in heaven forever. Hear the prayer his mother offered when on earth, and hear his own prayer, for Jesus's sake. Amen."

When I opened my eyes at the close of that wonderful petition, and looked into the stranger's face, the tears were dropping from his cheeks. He withdrew his hand from mine with a strange reluctance, saying, "Good-by, my lad. The stranger loves you much; your mother loved you more; but Jesus Christ has died that you might live eternally with him."

He followed me with his eyes till his vision was cut off, as he passed behind a fence. Going a few yards, I stopped with amazement to think on what had occurred, and watched the umbrella as it passed along at the top of the high board fence, till it was lost behind a barn.

The stranger's prayer and my mother's were answered, as I can testify this day.—Christian Inquirer.

FLOWERS AND SHOWERS.

"Oh dear!" said little Florence, "Oh,
I don't like rainy weather,
We can't go out of doors to play
Nor take a walk together."

Sweet Alice laughed and shook her head;
She always found a reason
To carry sunshine in her face,
However dark the season.

"Let's play we're drooping flowers," she said,
"Just longing for a sprinkle;
Pretend you are a violet,
I'll be a periwinkle.

"I'm such a very thirsty flower,
I love to get a dashing,
And violets are sweetest when
They feel the raindrops splashing."

And so they hung their pretty heads,
Each dainty little flower;
And then they shook their curls and said,
"Oh, what a pretty shower!"

Then they were daisies, buttercups,
And then a bunch of clover,
And while each bloomed a sweet wild rose,
Behold, the rain was over.

As Alice pointed to the sky
With her arms around her sister,
The sun peeped out between the clouds
And a little sunbeam kissed her.

TEMPERANCE.

SOUND DOCTRINE.

The report on temperance adopted by the presbytery of Denver at its recent meeting was drawn up by Dr. T. E. Bliss, and reads as follows:

"Your committee on temperance would report that this cause, so intimately connected with the welfare of Zion, is steadily increasing and extending in interest and power all over the land. The conviction is becoming more and more profound, that this subject must have a large place in the prayers and labors of the people of God before any permanent check to the soul-destroying, crime-producing and God-defying evils and curses of intemperance can be secured. The more this subject is considered the more terrible are its influences seen to be against all interests of Christ's kingdom.....

"For generations, both in the old world and the new, various expedients have been tried to check the appalling evils of strong drink. High license and low, fifteen-gallon laws and unadulterated-liquor laws, and a thousand other schemes have been resorted to in vain.

"At length the divinely apppointed plan of dealing with all such mighty sins and crimes is now being adopted, viz: absolute, straight-out prohibition; the same plan and method of the Ten Commandments, and the general economy of God everywhere in his Word. And notwithstanding the dust and smoke raised by the powers of darkness, by the unfaithful officials, politicians and moral cowards, the results make it perfectly plain that no legislation or laws on this subject have ever been worth the paper on which they were printed, as compared with this. To-day, fifty-eight county jails in Iowa are empty in consequence of the faithful enforcement of its prohibitory laws. In Atlanta, Georgia, to-day, statistics show that drunkenness has increased three-fold since that city returned to the licensing of the dram-shops.

"The recent criminal horrors at Fort Collins, under high license, show conclusively that license in any form—given to such atrocious business—is itself a moral monstrosity, a crime, a sin and a shame in any intelligent and professedly Christian community.

"The events of every day make it evident that the church of God, while fighting this great enemy by every moral means at its command, can find no legal ground on which it can stand—except that of absolute prohibition."

HOW LIQUOR RULES AND RUINS NEW YORK.

It strikes us that Morris Deculsky, Vice-president of the Liquor Dealers' Central Association, told a Herald reporter more than was wise [for himself]. Last year the Association raised $30,000 for political purposes in this city, and they can raise $100,000 if they wish at the next election. There are over eight thousand liquor dealers in the city, and they can control at least five voters each, he says, which makes forty thousand, enough to decide any election. He thinks it not unlikely that they will go into politics,with their own candidates. He says they use no money in bribery at Albany, but the brewers may. They are solid for David B. Hill, for whatever he may want,but prefer to see him remain governor. They want no more "silk-stocking men," but will vote for their friends regardless of party politics. They don't want any Sunday laws. They oppose the race-track system and the pool-betting system, which spends the money and ruins the character of "ten young clerks to every one that is ruined by liquor." But the most curious part of Mr. Deculsky's testimony is that about beer and the brewers. Being asked if it would not be better for the public and the liquor dealers if there were more beer and less whisky, he replied:

"We claim that most of the crime committed in this city is the result of malt liquors. The police justices will tell you that, too. Our habitual drunkards of the poor class are victims of the growler. Seven cents or fourteen cents worth of beer in a can or pail will help a man and his wife a long way toward a spree. But how much effect would seven or fourteen cents worth of whisky have?

"The brewers are crushing us. Two-thirds of the liquor stores in the city are practically owned by the brewers. They have mortgages on them. The liquor dealers are at the mercy of these brewers. All the money that comes in must go at once to pay for beer. The whisky man and the cigar man has to wait for his money, but the brewer has the saloon in his grip and gets his cash every Monday morning. There is not a liquor store in New York that can pay a profit simply on the sale of beer. Perhaps the Atlantic Garden can, but if so, it is the only place. Yet the brewers control the saloon-keepers."

If that is true the Liquor Dealers' Association will be the creature of the brewers.—Independent.

A brewer in Mishima, Japan, is said to have turned his brewery into a church and school-room for girls.

Out of thirty-seven counties in Michigan which voted on local option all but two gave majorities for prohibition.

Meetings are being held throughout Africa to protest against the American and European liquor traffic in that country.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt writes that all the American missions in Burmah have incorporated total abstinence in their work.

The guardians of the poor in one Union district of London have reduced the drink expenditure to £11,000 in seventeen years.

The English Government has passed a law against farmers giving laborers intoxicating drinks as a part of their wages even in harvest time.

Mrs. May Hardin of Iowa, Mich., was lately awarded in the Circuit Court $800 damages against the two saloon-keepers who had made her husband a drunkard.

It is estimated that not fewer than three thousand alcohol-made lunatics are turned loose from the saloons upon the homes of the people once in every twenty-four hours.

Mr. John Jones, a relieving officer of Stepney, London, states that having carefully examined 7,000 cases of application for relief, not more than 1 per cent are total abstainers.

German chemists at Washington have been analyzing samples of beer from various parts of the country and find all contained an alarming amount of dangerous adulterations.

Since the prison gate mission was established in Manchester, England, more than 3,000 prisoners have voluntarily come into the room and upwards of 800 have taken the pledge.

According to the Rocky Mountain Advocate, New Mexico has eighteen breweries, forty-five wholesale and 1,726 retail liquor dealers, forty-five Protestant churches, and five school-houses.

It is estimated that if the licensing clauses of the English local government bill are passed it will put £100,000,000 into the pockets of brewers and distillers, besides establishing the liquor traffic.

DR. LORIMER'S WASHINGTON PERFORMANCE.

Last Sabbath (May 13th) Rev. Dr. Lorimer of Chicago preached in the Calvary Baptist church, Washington, D. C., before the Baptist Women's Home Missionary Society. His theme was, "The Cross of Christ, and Why we Should Glory in it." In the hour and a half which it occupied many interesting things were said and many others greatly to be deplored. He spoke of the cross as an emblem alike in heathen and Christian worship. He made lengthy and learned extracts from the ancient mythology and professed to see in all these many symbols and references to Christ. He thought that the Hebrews made the sign of a cross on the sides of their doors when they slew the Passover lamb on the night before they left Egypt because the Tau cross was a universal symbol in Egypt.

He interwove Masonic signs, from the penal sign of an Entered Apprentice Mason, to the sign of a Knight Templar, and made them all to appear either as emblems of Christianity, or as simply the modifications of the cross. He spoke of the "tearing open of the breast" as a symbol of the cross, and in general spoke of Masonic symbolism as all referring to Christ and the crucifixion.

To any one in that great audience who had the slightest knowledge of Freemasony, there could be no doubt that a leading object of that discourse was to defend the system as not only consistent with, but a part of Christianity. It is abundantly evident that the learned Doctor regards his religion as a part of his Freemasonry and his Freemasonry as only another form of his religion. His evident sincerity and devotedness to his lodge makes that quite apparent. Of course, to the uninitiated many of these signs were simply inexplicable. It would have been altogether unmasonic to have given an explanation as he went along. To them they simply signified much learning.

The Masons were doubtless greatly delighted, as was evident from the warm commendations of the discourse in the daily press of the city. But to the thoughtful mind, that holds to Christianity as the religion, as not only out of harmony with, but in most positive antagonism with paganism, whether it exists as ancient or as modern Baalism, the whole discourse was most depressing. Practically it would make Christianity, not the only, but the leading religion, as one of the modifications—perhaps the highest—of the universal theism of which Freemasonry is the embodiment.

Such seems to me to be the doctrine of Dr. Lorimer, and I was deeply saddened at hearing it preached from one of the most strictly evangelical and aggressive of all our Washington pulpits.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Capt. "Giff" Rowell of Chicago, who has just disposed of his interest in the tug "Bob Tarrant," it is said will at once build a small fore-and-after and enter into competition with Capt. Bundy and the "Glad Tidings," his object being to spread the Gospel and disseminate Christianity among the destitute at the Manitous and other far-away northern regions. Everybody on the Chicago river accords Capt. Rowell the palm, as an evangelist, and his record in this direction is equal to the reputation of Dwight L. Moody on shore.

—Bro. John Todd, the evangelist of Des Moines, Iowa, was recalled to the Holland Patent, New York, some three months ago, where he labored very successfully a year before. This is President Cleveland's old home. As a result of his work in several neighboring communities the churches have been greatly quickened and blessed and many souls brought to Christ.

—Charles Herald, the Chicago revivalist, speaks every Sunday night at Cooper Union, New York, to a large audience. One of the features of these Sunday evening meetings at which Mr. Herald presides is that no collection is taken up, the expenses being defrayed by friends. The amount spent during the last six months has been over four thousand dollars.

—The debt of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Church in America was reduced from $48,000 to $7,000 during the month of April, largely through the labors of Rev. William Walton Clark.

—It has been discovered that many of the annual meetings of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions have been illegal, the corporation being chartered under Massachusetts law and required to hold its business meetings within that State unless empowered by special legislation to go elsewhere. Even the original corporators violated the law by going into Connecticut. The recent Massachusetts Legislature amended the charter by permitting the meeting to be held anywhere in the United States and legalized the acts of the board in the past.

—The general assembly of the Southern Presbyterian church met in Baltimore Thursday last. A sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Strickler of Atlanta, the retiring moderator. At the close of the religious service Rev. Dr. J. J. Bullock of Washington was elected moderator. Prominent members of the assembly say that the probability is very remote that any action will be taken favoring a consolidation with the Northern Presbyterian church.

—An Anti-Sunday Traveling Union has existed in this country for about four years. It has about 6,000 members —The centennial meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly, the supreme ecclesiastical court of the Presbyterian church in the United States, began in Philadelphia, Thursday morning. There are over 500 delegates or commissioners in attendance, representing every State and Territory in the Union. The election of a moderator resulted in the choice of Rev. Dr. Charles L. Thompson of Kansas City.

—"Our work" says the Free Methodist, "is essentially missionary in its character. Many of our preachers are in reality self-supporting missionaries. But our people are taking an active part in carrying the Gospel to the heathen. Eighteen of our number have already gone to labor for the salvation of Africa. The mortal bodies of two of the number, sisters Mary Carpenter and Eunice Knapp, rest beneath its sands until the resurrection morning. Brother and sister Kelly were compelled to return on account of his steadily failing health. Three have their headquarters at Monrovia, on the west coast, under the charge of brother R. L. Harris. Four are in the southern part, led on by brother Shemeld. Seven are on the eastern coast, where brother Harry Agnew has alone so valiantly held the ground. All are on the self-supporting plan. Their fare over is paid; they are given a good outfit, assisted in making homes, and in obtaining provisions, until they can raise them. They are meeting with encouragement and success. All, so far as we hear, are happy and contented, full of faith and courage."

THE METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE meeting in New York, having voted not to receive women as delegates until the annual conferences have voted on the question, have resolved that bishops must have a two-thirds vote to secure election. The largest liberty in respect to new legislation seems to be given, and the humblest members of the church can forward their request and have it sent to some committee. The great event of Saturday the 12th was the report of Bishop William Taylor. Every seat in the hall was taken and standing room was at a premium. On the platform sat the board of bishops, with invited guests from Canada, Ireland and England. Bishop Taylor, with manly form and strong step, took his place on the front of the stage amid great applause and commenced to read his report. He is a large man, with a very heavy full beard, nearly white; speaks with a clear voice that rang out to the farthest gallery. It was difficult to keep from thinking of his adventures and sacrifices, so well known to the church. He made but little reference to his own sacrifices. Indeed, his report was in the main a song of joy that he had been counted worthy to suffer for the spread of the Gospel. He was frequently applauded, specially when answering those who had criticised him. He said that he denied the allegations and denounced the allegators. He gave us a simple account of the planting of his forces at St. Paul de Loanda, and then on to Dondo, 240 miles, a town of 5,000, mostly black; then over rugged mountains, fifty-one miles to Nhanguepepo, where a new congregation can be found daily to whom the Gospel is preached; then on thirty-nine miles farther he reached the capital of a remarkable Negro queen, known to history, her palaces still remaining, Pango Androngo; then on, as if beckoned by a divine hand, sixty miles to Malange. In settling these missionaries along this line he walked to and fro over 600 miles. "This is Episcopal supervision of a different sort from that carried on by means of parlor cars. The hundreds of thousands of slaves sold in Loanda, for 200 years trod this weary way mid tears and blood—poor captives whose fathers had been slain because they dared to defend their homes, and their aged kindred were burnt up in the destruction of their towns. On each side of this patch is a continuous graveyard for 150 miles. Many a dark night on the dreary way I seemed to hear the dead speaking to me, 'O messenger of God, why came you not this way to speak words of comfort to us before we died?' I thought of Sherman's march to the sea and how we sung his praises, but that was only pastime as compared with this sweep into Central Africa. Eternity alone can estimate the harvest that will grow from this Christian heroism."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON X. Second Quarter.—June 3.

SUBJECT.—Jesus Crucified.—Matt. 27: 33-50.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.—Phil. 2: 8.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Drink of Vinegar. Vs. 33, 34. The sour drink proffered our Saviour was a stupefying draught prepared by an association of benevolent women in Jerusalem and given to criminals on their way to execution. This passing glimpse of a charitable organization which antedated the Christian era, shows us that the heart of womanhood even then beat true to its original impulses; and that under all the formality and corruption of Judaism was the germ of that Christian philanthropy which visits prisons and hospitals and spends itself in efforts to ameliorate social ills. We have no hint of any such association in Rome or polished Greece. Such fruit is never the outgrowth of pagan soil, and it is not wonderful when we know that Masonry is only revived heathenism that with all its pretensions to charity it has never founded a single hospital or benevolent institution for the wretched victims of want and vice. The world owes to the church, faulty as it may be in creed and practice, every practical charity which has blessed the human race. Our Lord refused to drink. He would drain the cup his Father had given him even to the dregs. The heroism of Jesus is a trait little dwelt upon. We forget that he came to earth not only to be our example but our inspiration. Pain is not the worst of ills, and in the brave patience of the Son of God, they who suffer may find a strong cordial. The terrible increase in the use of narcotics and the number of those who are wrecked, soul and body, by their use show the necessity of teaching lessons of fortitude early, and nowhere can we find a grander or more inspiring lesson than in this incident on our Saviour's way to Calvary.

2. The Crucifixion. Vs. 35-44. One of the most cheering promises in the Bible is that in spite of all the wicked can do God "will make the wrath of man to praise him." The writing on the cross, really an assertion of his kingly claim, was to Pilate only an expression of petty spite to annoy the Jews whose murderous demand he had not had the courage to deny. But amid all the revilings and cruel mockings there streamed from our Saviour's cross the light of this wonderful witness to the truth he was dying for: that he was indeed the King for whom the world waited. Even that most cruel taunt, "he saved others; himself he cannot save," covered the great truth which underlies the atonement. Whoever would save others must sacrifice self; must give up, if not literally life, at least those things which in the eyes of the world make life desirable. He must stand ready to have the finger of scorn pointed at him as one who has trusted God in vain. He who will not stake his all for Truth is not worthy of her. He who shrinks from the cross of worldly reproach and reviling can never light the beacon fires of reform. It is of sad significance that the most malignant and unfeeling in this scoffing crowd were the chief priests and elders—the highest dignitaries in the Jewish church. Martyrs in all ages have had to drink this cup—to be misunderstood, not by the ignorant rabble—this they could bear—but by those who represented all the ecclesiastical rank and learning of their times; and the apathy of openly expressed antagonism of the pulpit and the religious press has always been the greatest stumbling block in the way of those who would reform popular evils. But the servant is not greater than his Lord; only in the cup pressed to our Saviour's lips was one ingredient of mysterious anguish that the disciple can never taste. He was forsaken of God—momentarily orphaned as it were that we might never be left orphans. The offence of the cross will not cease. The Christian must bear his testimony against all sin whether it be shrined in our nation's high places, like the custom of wine drinking, or like the lodge god is burned incense to in the very church itself. Still the command is, "Be faithful unto death." God never forsakes his faithful ones, and that cry of bitterest anguish was the earnest for all future ages that no child of his should again "tread the winepress alone."

Spencer county, Indiana, has been terrorized the past week by a band of "White Caps," who on one night gave Smith Hagan, an old soldier, sixty lashes and ordered him to leave town within twenty-four hours, the reason given being that Hagan was addicted to beating his wife, and ordered several Negro women to leave their settlement near Rockford.

The Victorian Freemason says: "The Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge of All Scottish Freemasonry in India was held at Bombay on the 30th of November last; Bro. Sir Henry Morland, G. Amongst the Grand Officers we notice a majority of native names, and we see that the Parsees and Mohammedans have a Zend-Avesta Bearer and a Koran Bearer, although we did not notice a Bible Bearer amongst the Grand Officers, a usual officer in Scottish Masonry."

The case of Reading strikers is a hard one. Their places have been filled and they are out of employment and in abject want. They beg for work to do but cannot get it, even if they sever their membership in all labor organizations, and in some cases the men and their families have been compelled to go to the almshouse. They were encouraged to strike in the expectation that they would receive financial support from the Knights of Labor bodies to which they belonged, only to find that men who work are not willing to support men in idleness for any length of time.—Interior.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians in its convention in New York adopted the following resolutions with reference to the Irish situation and the Pope's latest position in regard to Irish affairs. Following a preamble the resolution reads: "Resolved, That we pledge anew our fealty to the Irish cause and tender to our people at home every possible aid in this, their hour of need, when the head of the church seems opposed to the fulfillment of Ireland's aspirations. Resolved, That we regard the Tory appeal to Rome as an evidence of weakness on the part of the English Government and a triumph for the brave bishop whose voice and act will surely convince the Holy Father that England's design, not Ireland's desire, asks his interference in the affairs of Ireland."

A bright, vigorous, entertaining and instructive monthly magazine for the young. Embodies adventures, travels, biographies, history, science, philosophy, religion, stories and current events.

WHAT the PRESS SAYS of IT.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE: "Intended to instruct rather than amuse, and to strengthen character rather than pass the time. "There is a place for this magazine, and we hope it will fill it and be well sustained." EVANGELICAL MESSENGER: "It is really a most entertaining and instructive journal, nicely illustrated. We are well pleased with its contents." SOUTHWESTERN METHODIST: "We have not seen another magazine just of this class. It is for Christian homes and Christian children. It is filled with delightful stories, not fiction but facts, calculated to inspire a thirst for real knowledge. It is well illustrated. With the number before us we are well pleased." CHRISTIAN HARVESTER: "Instructive and entertaing, but devoid of the trash of fiction." SAMPLE FREE. AGENTS WANTED on liberal, cash commission. T. B. ARNOLD, 104 & 106 Franklin St., Chicago, Ill.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE DANGERS OF GASOLINE.

The Michigan State Board of Health, in a circular just published, gives the following succinct rules for the use and care of gasoline. Every person employing or keeping gasoline should keep constantly in mind the following facts and cautions respecting its use:

1. Gasoline is an extremely dangerous, explosive substance. 2 It should be kept in a cool, well ventilated place, if possible out of doors, or in an outbuilding, never in a kitchen, closet, or cellar. 3. A vessel containing gasoline, unless tightly closed, should never be brought within ten feet of a lamp, stove, grate, flame, or fire of any sort. The small flame of a match or even a spark is sufficient to explode the gas when present in sufficient quantity. 4. The vapor of gasoline may be carried by a draught or current of air, and thus be brought in contact with fire at considerable distance, even greater than that mentioned in the preceding paragraph, consequently gasoline should never be opened or poured from one vessel to another in a current of air, unless the current is from the room out of doors. 5. The danger in connection with the use of gasoline stoves is not so much in the stoves themselves as in having the gasoline about, yet, by continued use, the valves of a stove may become worn, so that leaks may occur, and thus a stove may become a source of great danger. 6. If an overflow of gasoline occurs from being turned on too freely, from leakage of valves, or from the blowing out of the generating burner, as sometimes accidentally occurs, the surplus gasoline should be carefully wiped up, and the room should be well aired by the opening of windows and doors before the burner is lighted. 7. If an open vessel containing gasoline has been standing in a room over night, or an overflow has occurred during the night, or if there is found in a room a strong smell of gasoline at any time, the room should be opened and well aired before a match is lighted or a lighted lamp or candle is carried into the room. 8. Gasoline should never be used for lighting a fire. An explosion, which may possibly be fatal in its effects, is almost certain to follow. Persons have been maimed for life in this way. 9. The use of gasoline lamps is, if possible, attended with even greater dangers than the use of gasoline stoves. 10 A wise regard for safety will lead to disuse of gasoline in any form for domestic purposes. 11. Gas or kerosene stoves may be substituted for gasoline stoves, but neither gas, gasoline, nor kerosene stoves are so safe or healthful as the ordinary wood or coal stove. The ordinary stove aids in the ventilation of the room, and carries away the poisonous gases formed by the combustion of the fuel, whereas the other forms of stoves discharge the products of combustion into the air of the room, compelling the occupants to breathe poisonous gases. Neither gas, gasoline, nor kerosene stoves should ever be employed in other than very open or well ventilated rooms, unless provided with a special flue or ventilating duct for the purpose of carrying off the products of combustion.—Scientific American.

—A few months ago I referred to an odd and increasing practice in American families, that I have not observed in other lands. I speak of the habit of consuming quantities of patent medicines—nostrums in the worst sense of the word. Specious notices appear in reputable newspapers, and high-sounding certificates are manufactured by the makers of the nostrums, and promise absolute cure for every ill that flesh is heir to. If one thousandth part of these impudent claims were well founded further study of medicine and surgery would be useless and all scientific investigation in biology a delusion. But the repetition of these claims at length impresses itself; we are apt to believe what we constantly see in print, and it is natural to Americans to try experiments, even upon themselves. Nor are doctors altogether blameless There are some in the profession who cannot say no when an adroit drummer besieges them to testify that a medicine or mineral water is good; and down goes another name. I am glad to state, however, that this practice is steadily lessening. But swallowing powerful drugs, recommended by glaring and untruthful advertisements, is not decreasing, and great harm is done thereby. Medicines of all kinds are best let alone. If a person is sick enough to require anything more than home nursing and care in diet, he certainly needs a doctor, who alone should determine what drugs are to be taken.—American Magazine.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

A. E. Chase, of Horicon, Wis., accidentally poisoned himself. It seems that Mr. Chase had been at work in his garden, and, feeling faint and weak, stepped into the house and took, as he supposed, a swallow of brandy, but the liquid proved to be carbolic acid. He immediately said to his wife, "Send for the doctor, quick; I have made a mistake and taken carbolic acid." His eldest son ran for the doctor, and his wife, with the help of the youngest boy, immediately gave him milk and raw eggs, and assisted him to bed, but in five minutes he was unconscious, and notwithstanding all the efforts of the physician, he was dead in less than twenty minutes. The two bottles were exactly alike in shape and size, and the contents nearly of the same color and quantity. Each bottle was properly labeled, however.

There's a blessing in the bottle on whose label we can read
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for the woman who has need
Of a remedy for troubles none but women ever know.
'Tis her best and truest friend, and happy thousands call it so,
As they think of years of suff'ring that were theirs before it came,
Bringing them the balm of healing, and they bless the very name of this wonderfully, and deservedly, popular remedy for the various ills woman is heir to. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

People with thin heads of hair should use Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer to make the hair grow out thick, healthy, and strong.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

GOING WEST.

The general interest that has been taken in the opening of the Montana Indian Reservations is shown by the large numbers of people who have already gone to Great Falls to investigate the mineral and agricultural resources of that wonderful country. The low excursion rate announced by C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, makes the expense of exploring this country merely nominal, and will undoubtedly result in a still larger number following.

Ask For Ayer's
Sarsaparilla, and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood-purifier.

With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The fore-runner of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far excel those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. 'There is nothing so good for the youthful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Moumouth, Kansas.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00 Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Danghter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprisee the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body in Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper. 35 cents; per dozen. $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each: per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Baln. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen. $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen. $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation, as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

News of The Week.

WASHINGTON.

The Indian Appropriation Bill, which has passed the House and is pending in the Senate, at Washington, has a section providing that in schools sustained wholly or in part by the Government, in which church organizations are assisting in the educational work, the Christian Bible may be taught in the native language of the Indians, if in the judgment of the persons in charge of the schools it shall be deemed conducive to the moral welfare of the pupils.

In the House last week the Mills tariff bill had the right of way, and tariff speeches were heard all the week. On Tuesday the speech of Representative Butterworth, of Ohio, proved to be the feature of the debate. The other speakers were Buckalew, of Pa., Simmons of North Carolina, Stone of Kentucky, Henderson of Illinois, Grout of Vermont, and Seymour of Michigan. On Wednesday Representatives Bayne, Laird, Fitch, Ryan, Weaver, Maish, Allen, Baker, Pound, and Dalzell, spoke. On Thursday Messrs. Breckinridge of Arkansas and Cox of New York, were on the programme with well prepared speeches. Friday Messrs. Randall, McKinley and Breckinridge of Ky., were heard, and Saturday was given to Mr. Reed of Maine and Speaker Carlisle.

The further consideration of the tariff bill was postponed for ten days in order to give both parties a chance to harmonize on the proposition to take a vote upon it as it stands without considering the proposed amendments.

COUNTRY.

With the exception of Arkansas, the rainfall for the season thus far has been greatly in excess in States west of the Mississippi. The official reports to headquarters here also show more rain than usual in New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and the interior of New England. The weather for the past week has been very favorable to growing crops in the central valleys and in Atlantic coast districts.

Among the acts passed by the last Iowa Legislature is one which takes effect on the 4th of July next requiring dealers to mark the weight of flour, corn meal, and like upon sacks containing the goods.

A syndicate has been formed to tunnel the Detroit River. B. Baker, of London, the engineer of the immense Forth bridge, in Scotland, and James Ross, of Quebec, one of the contractors of the Canadian Pacific, have announced that the building of the tunnel can be accomplished with comparative ease. A gigantic syndicate, known as the Michigan and Canada Tunnel Company, and representing more than $100,000,000 of capital, has just been legally formed in Canada and will be properly qualified for transacting business under the Michigan laws at once.

At Trenton, N. J., Wednesday, the bequest of the late Mr. Hutchings in favor of Henry George, for the purpose of aiding in the circulation of his land ideas, was set aside, and the legal heirs will get the money.

At its convention in Cincinnati Wednesday evening the Union Labor party nominated A. J. Streeter, of Illinois, for President, and Samuel Evans, of Texas, for Vice President. No fusion was effected with the United Labor party or the Greenbackers, and the latter decided to hold a National convention at a future date.

The United Labor National Convention adjourned at Cincinnati Thursday, after nominating Robert H. Cowdry, of Illinois, for President, and W. H. T. Wakefield, of Kansas, for Vice President. Mr. Cowdry is a Chicago druggist.

A hailstorm passed over Pratt, Kans., Thursday night, destroying fruit and killing cattle over an area of miles in extent in that county, injuring people caught out, breaking all windows with south or west exposures, and in some cases breaking roofs of houses with the weight of the stones.

The Mississippi flood is slowly abating and it is thought that the worst of the high water is passed. From the northern end of Adams county to the southern end of Pike county the land on the Illinois side of the river was protected by a system of levees, the region embracing 250,000 acres, the soil being the richest in the State. All the region is now one vast lake from six to ten feet in depth. Along the bluffs on the eastern edge of the submerged district hundreds of families are camped, living in tents, huts, and in the open air. Before the flood most of these people were well-to-do, prasperous farmers, but now they have little or nothing. The damage to railroad property is enormous, and it will be three weeks after the water subsides before trains can be running on time. Quincy is cut off from railroad communication north, west, and south. On the west side of the river no attempt is made to run trains on any of the roads. Owing to the great confusion it is impossible to obtain detailed losses, but the aggregate will reach fully $3,000,000 from crops alone. The damage to the levees, houses, and railroads will approximate $600,000.

A Santa Fe passenger train was standing at Fountain, Col., Monday morning, when a caboose and some cars, one being loaded with naphtha, got loose and dashed into it. The naphtha exploded and set fire to the train and also to a car containing powder, the explosion of which killed three persons and wounded fifteen others. Sixteen cars and a locomotive were badly wrecked, and two cars, the depot and a dwelling were burned. A church and other buildings were damaged by the explosion.

The hardest rains for many years fell in Arkansas last week, and the streams are all overflowed. Immense cotton fields and corn bottoms are overflowed, and the country is suffering a general inundation.

The village of Alexandria, Mo., having been completely submerged for several days by the overflow of the Mississippi, was abandoned by all its residents. The foundations of the buildings are giving way and the prospect is that when the flood subsides the village will be in ruins.

The entire business portion of the town of Goldendale, W. T., was swept away by fire Monday last. Eight blocks laid in ashes and over eighty houses and contents were swept away. Very little property was saved owing to the rapid spread of the flames. No lives were lost.

At Janesville, Wis., Tuesday, in the case of Hiddles vs. Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, the plaintiff, a boy 7 years old, whose legs were cut off by a train on the defendant's road, won a verdict of $30,000.

Near Shenandoah, Pa., Monday morning, a freight train was wrecked, some person unknown having wedged a stone into a frog at Moss Creek. The engine plunged down a twenty-foot embankment and two cars followed. The engineer and fireman perished.

FOREIGN.

The Anglo-French Suez convention has been approved by Turkey. The porte abandons its claim to preside over the international commission, while England concedes Turkey's right to use the canal for the transportation of troops to Arabia.

The Chinese government has decided to erect monuments to General Gordon on the scenes of his victories over the Taiping rebels.

The suit of Frank Hugh O'Donnell against the London Times, growing out of a series of articles charging the Irish leaders with guilty knowledge of various crimes perpetrated in the name of Irish liberty, is to be pressed to trial, O'Donnell declining to withdraw it. As the defense proposes to prove its allegations had facts as a basis the trial promises to be a sensational one.

The German Emperor was outside his Palace Saturday for the first time since his critical relapse. Many people came forward and presented him with flowers. He bears marked traces of fever, but his appearance is daily improving. The relations between the Empress and Prince Bismarck are again strained, and the situation is so critical that he will return to Berlin at once. The Russian preparations for war are very ominous. The news of the week is to the effect that Russia has accepted the French syndicate's terms for a loan, and a sum of £44,000,000 has been obtained. Russian activity continues in Southern Russia. Masked batteries are being rapidly constructed along the Black Sea, the Dniester, and Odessa, and immense stores of ammunition are being collected at Odessa.

News has arrived from the west coast of Africa to the effect that there have been some human sacrifices in consequence of the death of a son of the King of Grand Jack. Selected victims were obliged to drink "sass water," a poisonous liquor, and were then pitched into the surf on the sea shore. When the rollers dashed them ashore, men, women and children cut at them with knives until they were dead. The chief of the tribe flies the British flag, but the remonstrances of the captain of a trading vessel were in vain.

The steamer Guthrie arrived at New South Wales, May 15, with 160 Chinese emigrants on board. They attempted to land, but were prevented from doing so by the police. The Premier informed the assembly that he had cabled to the Imperial government that New South Wales had resolved to prevent the landing of Chinese emigrants not provided with naturalization papers, and that the decision had the support of the people and the assembly. The Chinese Ambassador in London has handed to the English Government a note protesting against the action of the Australian colonies in preventing the landing of Chinese immigrants.

A mob at Santiago, Chili, burned $100,000 worth of street cars, because the company refused to reduce the fare. Set on by the labor lodges, mobs have destroyed property in America by the tens of millions for a less reason, and we are supposed to be neither half-barbarous or semi-heathen either.

There is much to be learned of the character of a movement by observing its representatives when they leave home. Thus the train men who cared for the delegation to the Illinois Republican convention reported the sleeping cars nearly ruined. The same men warmly complimented the Prohibitionists as among the most respectable of travelers. To Indianapolis there is coming a delegation from California, headed by General Bidwell, a man of wealth once engaged in wine-making. He became convinced of the evil of the business and gave it up, turning over his stock to a charitable institution, providing it should be used only for medical purposes. The Republican delegation from the same State is coming to Chicago with a car loaded with fruit and a thousand bottles of wine!

A great meeting in Central Music Hall Sabbath afternoon marks a high tide in the enthusiasm of Chicago churches against the saloon. The addresses by Drs. Little, Goodwin, Withrow, Lawrence and others, and their reception, meant more than even the resolution adopted which called on the city council for an ordinance forbidding saloons within 200 feet of church or school and for the closing of these vile places on the Sabbath day, as already required by State law. The saloonists begin to see they have gone too far, and allowed a public sentiment to be roused before which they must bow. God grant that at least so much prohibition as this may soon be enforced in Chicago. Mayor Roche is now experiencing, says one of the daily papers, "the conflicting throes of those who have neither conscience, courage nor consistency." It appears that he assured some of the distillers before election that their business was too important to be meddled with by the city and thus secured a round sum for the Republican campaign fund. His sympathy with the saloon party in the Council secured him some severe rebukes in the Music Hall meeting, and he realizes that on these fine spring days his bed is not one of roses.

General Rosecrans, who is a zealous Catholic, directed the great Catholic demonstration in Washington Thursday, when the corner-stone of the new Catholic university was laid, during a rain storm The ceremony was as imposing as the Romish church could make it, and beside the columns of priests and lesser ecclesiastics, the bishops and Cardinal Gibbons, the nation was called upon to grace the occasion. President Cleveland has shown his servility to the priest-power that elected him too often to permit a refusal. He was given a place with his Cabinet close by the Cardinal. The day before Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland attended the great Presbyterian meeting in Philadelphia, and he made a speech recalling his early training by Presbyterian parents. The General Assembly must regard the President as a doubtful convert to the creed and catechism, since in a few hours he could put them aside and take his place as part of a system against which that Presbyterian creed and catechism are a protest both in their terms and in their history.

The Mormons dedicated their third temple last week Monday at Manti, in the very center of Utah. Two others, at Logan in the north, and at St. George in the extreme southwest, have been in operation for some years. The ceremonies of initiation or "sealing" are performed in these buildings, and since their completion the old Endowment House in the northwest corner of the Temple enclosure at Salt Lake City has been discontinued, yet the Mormons are very reticent about the old building to visitors. These temples are similar in construction to that nearing completion at Salt Lake City, but of smaller size. There is nothing to attract in the architecture of the buildings but their immense weight and solidity of construction. To Apostle Lorenzo Snow was assigned the duty of making the prayer of dedication for the new temple. He got it ready and had it in type before the occasion. It fills nearly five columns solid small type in the Deseret News, nothing less being sufficient for a building to be used for baptisms for the dead and initiations into the Mormon lodge. The five days' jubilee at the dedication gave a fine opportunity for the tricks and jugglery which are always the machinery of priestcraft. The Mormons claim that great signs and wonders attended the dedication ceremonies; angel voices singing songs, hosts of light and glory around the heads of the speakers, and the appearance in the temple of the spirits of Brigham Young, John Taylor and J. M. Grant. Such pretensions could only be made to an ignorant, bigoted and superstitious people, who will follow the leader who can furnish the most entertainment of the kind.

The General Conference on Foreign Missions which opens in London next week Saturday, June 9th, will be one of the most important gatherings of the decade, perhaps of the century. To have participated in a meeting which may be, under God, instrumental in giving a grand impetus to the Christian church in her great work among the nations, will always be remembered as an honor. Among the representatives from American churches are a number of names familiar to our readers. Rev. Dr. McAllister, late of Geneva College, now successor in the pastorate of the lamented A. M. Milligan; Rev. D. McFall, of Chambers St. church, Boston; Dr. A. J. Gordon, of the same city; Bishop Mallalieu, of New Orleans; General Clinton B. Fisk, Revs. B. T. Roberts and T. B. Arnold, of the Free Methodist, in this city, and Mr. W. T. Blackstone, of this city, whose appeals for the world's evangelization have thrilled the soul of multitudes and led them to a new consecration to obedience to the Lord's last command—these are among the American delegates to this great meeting.

WHAT SHALL THIS HARVEST BE?

BY E. E. FLAGG.

The time of seed-sowing is beautiful because it is the time of hope. I have a feeling that the days of summer fruition are more beautiful still; but when the spring birds are making a concert of melody on every hand, and trees and grass are showing their first tender green, and every breeze comes loaded with that indefinable sweet scent which is like the voiceless prophecy in a young heart of some unknown bliss yet to come, it is hard to contradict all the poets who have rhymed since the Fall. Easier is it to enjoy, and more profitable to quietly moralize in the midst of this upspringing new creation, this Eden let down to earth for a brief while to show us the possibilities of the heavenly Paradise. The harvests that are to feed a world are slumbering today under the brown ploughed fields which are soon to blossom into seas of emerald, dimpling to every breath of the summer wind.

But are there not other harvests sown which will poison instead of feed, and impoverish instead of enrich our race? I am not speaking metaphorically, nor uttering dark things in parables. I mean that in our own blessed New England there are broad acres given up to the culture of a weed whose use has been interdicted by the moralist and the physician; a weed which, wherever it is planted, always brings forth a plentiful crop of bad manners, ill smelling breath, weak eyes, and disordered nerves; a weed which 86 clergymen, 554 teachers and superintendents of public schools, and 257 doctors in the District of Columbia have desired Congress to prohibit to boys under sixteen years; and why? Because it is a poison; because it stands on the same dark list with alcohol and opium; because it blights every bud of intellectual promise, and lowers and brutalizes the whole moral nature. Is not this indictment fearful enough to prevent any Christian man from planting his goodly acres with such seeds of death, whose bitter harvest can never be fully known till the great reaping time comes? Tobacco using, tobacco selling, and tobacco raising will yet be banished from the respectable ranks of society; but it will be with this evil as it was in the first movement against alcohol: the first step was to make ministers give up their sideboards and deacons their distilleries; and thus, little by little, the rum fiend has been made to go where the devils went, and where we want the tobacco fiend to go—into the swine of society. If it be true that we can't banish them altogether, we can at least send them where they belong, knowing that the same destruction will finally overtake both devil and swine when that gulf of judgment opens, of which Holy Writ has spoken in these fearful words: "He that is unjust let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy let him be filthy still."

Of course, there is the old argument: "We must make money, and there is the most profit in raising tobacco." I do not choose to go to the devil's arsenal for weapons, and so I let alone the counter argument, that no other crop so wastes and exhausts the vigor of the soil. I prefer instead to ask that solemn question which no earthly arithmetic has ever solved: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" What will it profit you, farmers of happy, Christian New England? Shall countless physicians and teachers, and all the good and wise of our land, raise warning voices and you disregard their message? We are familiar with the statistics of the saloon. We have all heard, how, out of its doors, in this country alone, march an army of 60,000 to a drunkard's grave; but the census has never been taken of the great army of tobacco users, poisoned in every nerve and tissue till apoplexy, or heart disease, or the terrible smokers' cancer mows them down; of the dimmed intellects, the debased moral natures, the blunted sensibilities, the weakened wills led captive by the devil through the fetters of the tobacco habit. From every inch of land given up to producing that which can work such dire results goes up Cain's question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" The great difference between the children of God and the children of Satan was then exactly what it is now: the one acknowledges the sacredness of humanity's claim upon him, the other rejects it with a scoff and sneer. On which side will you range yourself? Tobacco raising may bring you in more money; will it bring you in more peace of soul? Can it be used to win you everlasting habitations in that land where enters nothing that defiles? For rest assured, of that mammon of unrighteousness you can never make friends. What will it profit you; nay, rather what will it not profit you to quit forever the raising of that, the only effect of which upon others must be hurtful, pernicious, debasing? Shall God's air and sunshine, his dew and rain, be prostituted to such a service? Can you "enter his courts with praise," and lay before him—not the sheaves of golden grain, type of him who is the Life of the world, but the first fruits of a tobacco harvest? Answer as becomes a man and a Christian. Shall your sowing and reaping be unto mammon, or unto God? But, oh! beloved brother, give an answer that will be music to your ears in the great harvest day.

NOT A MISTAKE OF MOSES.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

There is an article in the Presbyterian Review for April on "Legislative Restriction of Evils," by Prof. Willis J. Beecher of Auburn, N. Y. After an introduction, in which reference is made to the number and variety of legislative forms, all imperatively demanding our attention, he lays down five propositions which are discussed in order.

1. Testimony to truth and right is an important incidental function of law.

2. But law is mainly not mere testimony, but a rule of conduct to be enforced.

3. For legislation to transcend its own proper limits is a most dangerous evil.

4. No legislation concerning an evil is to be presumed to be a sanction of the evil.

5. Within such limits as have been indicated, the most feasible legislation is also the best.

By these steps he would lead us to the conclusion that it is morally right to license or tax the liquor business. That is a conclusion to which some of us are not ready to be led. Those engaged in the liquor traffic are criminals, and should be punished along with thieves, gamblers, adulterers, and murderers. At which of these five steps does he go astray?

The first proposition is true. Law is public testimony. A good law is a public benefit. A bad law is a great evil. The one tones up the public conscience; the other weakens and demoralizes. The second proposition is equally true. A good law unenforced defeats its own end. A dead-letter law is worse than no law. But the fault is not in the law, but the depraved public sentiment that will not carry it out. The facts abundantly justify the third proposition.

He crosses the danger-line in the fourth proposition. He tells us that Moses legislated respecting polygamy, divorce and slavery, without sanctioning the evils. The statutes of Moses cannot be construed to mean a licensing of these evils. They were prohibitory, and had they been carried out faithfully would have resulted in the complete extermination of these evils. It would be wrong to give a man license to commit adultery with other men's wives; that would be a breach of the seventh commandment. It is an iniquity to be punished by the judges. It would be wrong to license open and public blasphemy; that is a crime to be severely punished. It is wrong to license the liquor traffic. It is a murderous system, and a fraud upon human society. There is only one kind of legislation that is lawful for theft and murder, or any other of these evils, and that is prohibitory. "Thou shalt not," and that is the end of it. All Prof. Beecher's talk about the danger of speaking against the present course of our government does not weaken our determination to bear testimony against immoral legislation. The sentences which he quotes with disapproval we fully endorse. The liquor revenue is "the profits of an unholy partnership; the nation's share for twenty years in the blood money of the liquor crime." "Will any candid man pretend that the State may first impose aud collect a tax on a business, and then proceed to suppress that business as illegal and immoral? The simple taxing of a business is not only a legislative consent to its being carried on, but it is a recognition of its existence without the least suggestion of disapproval."

The fifth proposition is the most dangerous of all. In matters of indifference the most feasible is morally the best; but in morals expediency is not a rule at all. Of two moral evils choose neither. Their damnation is just who do evil that good may come. It is the infamous principle of Jesuitry that the end justifies the means. We need a revival of conscience. The Ten Commandments ought to be republished. Who in America to-day would defend the fugitive slave law? That vile system was once legalized by this government. Some day the liquor traffic will be as odious as slavery is to-day.

THE VOICE FROM SUFFOLK JAIL, CHARLES STREET, BOSTON.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have just read Bro. Countee's "Why I Joined the Lodge and Why I Left It," as published in the Cynosure of the 10th instant. Our brother has witnessed a good confession. To sin is human; to forgive is divine. When a man openly confesses his sins, repents of them, and accepts God's pardon, he becomes a partaker (part-taker, 2 Peter 1: 4) of the divine nature. So great is God's grace. Satan and satanic men dread such a witness as wolves dread the fire. A dollar volume of 300 to 400 pages of these independent testimonies, by faithful witnesses like Bro. Isaac Hyatt of New Hampshire and Bro. Countee, in brief, comprehensive, vivid sketches of the salient facts, would be a useful weapon.

The Roman Catholic Irish rum-faction of Boston seem to be astonished out of measure that their complete control of this city has been questioned by anybody. The protest has, indeed, but just begun, but like a rolling snowball it grows as it goes. Having pretty thoroughly degraded every department of our municipal and State government, they seem to have fancied that they could now perpetrate every species of iniquity unchallenged. Of course the gag by-law prohibiting free public speech is only attempted to be enforced against ministers of Christ, and never against maudlin minstrel hoodlums, rioting Fenians, or lawless prize-fighters, the pets of our mayor and councilmen.

Just as our Jesuit jug-or-naughts were rejoicing that the court had decided the free public preaching of the Gospel on Boston Common to be worthy the severest punishment ever visited upon the violation of any city ordinance, Horace L. Hastings, in the eleventh month of 1887, sent forth an edition of the Christian Safeguard which pierced the hearts of the King's enemies like a cloud of sharp arrows. Writhing with pain and raging with fury, the leagued foes of a free Gospel, free public schools, free public speech, and a free civil government, were next arraigned by Wm. Kellaway in a brace of bold pamphlets, written, printed, and freely and widely distributed at his own cost.

Before they could decide how to abate Hastings and Kellaway, Justin D. Fulton appears and kindly, yet very faithfully, informs the great audiences which thronged Music Hall on the Lord's Day afternoons during twenty-three successive weeks, "Why Priests Should Wed." Then followed the sale of thousands of copies of Fulton's book containing in print his expurgated discourses on this subject.

The priests of vat and Vatican now directed their energies toward barricading public halls in other cities against Fulton. But Kellaway and Leyden, the latter a convert from Romanism, went into Music Hall and continued Fulton's work in Boston, ministering more than once to audiences which filled to overflowing, including standing room and 500 extra seats, a hall which regularly seats 3,200 persons.

Such was the case last Lord's Day when ex-priest Chiniquy told of his fifty years' experience as a Romanist. Moreover, Tremont Temple, said to be of equal capacity with Music Hall, has been crowded during many weeks on every afternoon and evening of the fifth day of the week by multitudes who have listened to the testimony of Margaret L. Shepherd, a former Roman Catholic novitiate, who escaped the horrors of a nun's life, and exchanged the Romish prayer book for the Christian's Bible.

Already have the scales dropped from many eyes, and converts to Christ from the Romish apostasy have brought in and laid down at the disposal of Christ's witnesses the broken yokes of papal superstition in the form of beads, gold crosses and images, and charms which have lost their charm for these souls forever. Two eight-page weekly papers, vigorously edited, well printed, and already of no mean extent of circulation, have suddenly sprung into existence. The Free Press is edited by Bro. Kellaway, and bears the legend, "For Christ and and against Anti-Christ; for Country and against Rome." The British-American Citizen, also an eight-page weekly, printed on sheets double the size of Bro. K.'s paper, is the official organ of local associations, already numerous and rapidly multiplying, of British citizens who are taking out their naturalization papers in great numbers in all our cities, and seem determined to be heard and felt in opposition to the mob methods of priest-ridden, whisky-crazed Irishmen.

The Evening Transcript of this city welcomes these new allies, and declares editorially that "the people are ready to use any club that will break up the clanship Mayor Hewitt has so patriotically rebuked." When the people get ready to use the policemen's club against public poisoners and traitorous Jesuits, these pests of state, church and home will be as nimble in fleeing from our cities as John L. Sullivan was in forsaking his training quarters in England on the bare suspicion that the lodger who had taken a room across the way was a detective, interested in preserving the dignity of English laws against prize-fighting. Sincerely thy brother in Christ; still in bonds for the Gospel to be free to all the people in all the world, WM. F. DAVIS.

CHASKA AND MISS FELLOWS.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The marriage of Miss Cora Fellows of Washington city, late teacher at the Santee agency, Nebraska, to Chaska Campbell, a chief of the Sioux tribe, who is said to be one-fourth Indian and three-fourths French, but respectable in character and habits, and an industrious farmer, has caused more talk than any similar alliance since Hon. Fred Douglass was joined to the excellent white lady that now honors his pleasant home. Mr. and Mrs. Chaska Campbell are made the subject of extensive caricature in the public press, and it is said that she has been disowned by her kindred at Washington.

I cannot but regard the prominence given to this matter as most absurd and mischievous, and as indicating a most perverse state of public sentiment. Almost every day, all over the land, marriages are taking place between pure-minded Christian women and utterly worthless men. Not unfrequent the unworthy and worthless one is the woman, but in either case the practical result is misery and ruin. Such marriages are greatly to be deplored, but they usually excite little attention and are assumed to be a matter of course.

Looking at these relations from a Christian standpoint, we must regard character as of infinitely greater consequence than the mere accident of race or nationality. In the Divine Kingdom in which we all hope to partake, "there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all and in all." Surely God has made of one blood all the children of men, and he is no respecter of persons.

Doubtless, in view of the fact that race prejudice exists, it is most undesirable for one to make himself and his children a victim. But of this matter the individual must judge. If both are of mature age, irreproachable characters, and have means of support; if they have natural and acquired adaptation and genuine conjugal affection, it is their business, and the less other people meddle with their matters the better will it be for the well-being of society. It should not be forgotten that some of the "first families of Virginia" have ever been proud of their descent from the Indian girl Pocahontas, and that Patrick Henry, when a member of the legislature, introduced a bill, and, as Governor of Virginia, urged the passage of a law to give a bounty to every white man who would marry an Indian woman. Such legislation is doubtless uncalled for, and so is all other that proposes to control social relations. There is no occasion for inflaming popular prejudices by parading private affairs that are not in themselves criminal.

PRESS COMMENT.

A fresh instance of Papal infallibility is just reported. Lasserre's translation of the Gospels into French was emphatically approved by the Pope in December, 1886, when lo and behold! the very same Pope in December, 1887, put this book in the Index Expurgatoria as one proscribed to all the faithful. On which of the two occasions was the Pope infallible?—Intelligencer.

The new capitol of the State of Texas, at Austin, was formally opened on Wednesday, and the telegraph reports that, "There was a grand military and Masonic display. The Masonic Grand Lodge and the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar participated." As American citizens, Catholics protest against the participation in public ceremonies of this secret, un-American and dangerous Masonic society. On what ground does it claim recognition, an organization that is a law to itself and a menace to all governments, as well as an enemy to the Christian religion.—Catholic Review.

London was again shocked, a few days ago, by another distinguished prelate, Archdeacon Farrar. In a sermon before the Social Purity Alliance, he drew a hideous picture of London morals, declaring that there were in the city 80,000 professional courtesans, 600,000 drunkards, 6,000 public houses and 4,000 clubs which initiated young men into the ways of vice. This club mania is becoming epidemic among us, and many good people fail to see its evil tendency. There may be clubs, of course, for praiseworthy purposes, but, as they are now being established in all our cities and some towns, they are generally for the indulgence in those amusements which are by common consent thought unfit for the home. Here father, sons and husbands, free from the restraints of home associations, indulge, under special fascinations, in things of more than doubtful propriety, while mothers and wives are left to the lonesomeness of the long evenings. If these could settle the matter, the whole business would be abolished instantly and almost unanimously. Even if the things done at the club were innocent in themselves, the system is evil, and that continually, because it does not permit those whom business claims during the day to return to the family in the evening; but in most clubs the things done are grossly evil—gambling, drinking, lessons in libertinism, etc. —Christian Standard.

ROMISH SCHOOLS.—Joseph Cook, in the prelude to one of his recent lectures, made the following points against Romish parochial schools: "1. It is historically true and notorious that Roman priests, when they had their way, never yet gave in their parochial primary schools sufficient instruction to fit a population for the responsibilities of free government. 2. Roman Catholic parochial schools are avowedly intended to destroy the American public school system. 3. The instruction given in them is always sectarian, generally mutilated, and sometimes thoroughly misleading. Examples were given from one or two Romish text-books. Bismarck declares that the saddest sight he ever saw was that of the mutilated text-books used in the French schools. Mr. Froude found this systematic mutilation both in America and Europe. 4. Roman Catholic authorities wholly deny to the civil government the right to conduct the secular education of the people. 5. The church denies to the parent the right of private judgment in the matter of education. Refusal to send the children to the priest's school is followed by a denial of the rites of the church."

The unrelenting enmity of the Catholic church to the common schools has received a new and striking illustration at West Chester, Pa., where two prominent business men have been refused the sacraments of the church because they persisted in sending their children to the public schools instead of the parochial school. The action of the local priest in this matter has been sustained by Archbishop Ryan.

NATIONAL SIN THE CAUSE OF NATIONAL TROUBLE.

A DISCOURSE BY REV. WM. WISHART, D. D.

"And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord."—1 Kings 18: 18.

SECOND PART.

II. Let us now turn our attention to the result of national sin, or notice the trouble that it brings upon a nation.

1. We observe that there are various ways in which God troubles or punishes nations on account of their sin, and he sometimes adopts one mode of punishment and sometimes another. One way in which he usually manifests his displeasure against sinful communities or nations, is by judically giving them up to "blindness of mind and hardness of heart." In this respect he deals with nations, just as he does with individuals: when they will not receive the love of the truth, he sends them strong delusion that they should believe a lie. 2 Thess. 2: 11.

This blindness of mind and hardness of heart, when it prevails extensively in a nation, is not only the usual precursor of outward judgments, but is itself a most fearful judgment. What greater calamity can befall a community or nation than the prevalence of atheistic sentiments and depraved habits; removing the restraints of virtue and morality; disrupting every social tie; and overturning the foundations of social order! To such a deplorable state of society, the prophet refers, when he says, "There is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land. By swearing and lying, killing and stealing and committing adultery, they break out and blood toucheth blood." Hosea 4: 1, 2. And another prophet presents a similar picture, when he says, "Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off, for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth, and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey." Isa. 59: 14, 15.

But a nation thus abandoned to the power of its own corruption, is ripe for outward judgments. And God is at no loss for means to execute the demands of his justice; for all nature, animate, inanimate and rational, is at his command. Fire, hail, snow, vapors and stormy winds fulfill his word. He sometimes makes the raging fires and stormy winds his ministers to subdue the pride of sumptuous cities and to turn vast lands into desolation. And sometimes he musters armies of destructive insects to eat up the fruits of the soil, or smites a land with blasting and mildew, or commands the heavens that they rain no rain upon it—making the heavens above brass and the earth beneath iron and the rain of the land powder and dust—thus giving cleanness of teeth in all cities, and want of bread in all places, Deut. 28: 23; Amos 4: 6. Again he sometimes calls for the pestilence that walketh in darkness and makes it cleave to a wicked people until he has consumed them from off their land, Deut. 28: 21. And again he sometimes gives liberty to the sword to go through a wicked land and devour the inhabitants thereof. He either brings an enemy from afar or raises up one from the midst of a wicked people and "gives him a charge to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets." Isa. 10: 6.

2. We observe that national trouble is always sent upon the same nation that sinned, but frequently not on the same persons. When God sent Saul to destroy Amalek, it was on account of his sin in waging an insidious and cruel war against the people of Israel when they came out of Egypt four hundred years before the days of Saul. 1 Sam. 15: 2, 3. And when God delivered Juda into captivity, it was on account of the sins of Manasseh which had been committed more than a generation previous to that period. He punished the Jewish nation for the sins of Manasseh long after Manasseh and his cotemporaries were dead. See 2 Kings 24: 3, 4. Hence says the prophet Jeremiah, "Our fathers have sinned, and are not, and we have borne their iniquities." Lam. 5: 7. It is therefore perfectly evident that there is a national accountability to God separate and distinct from the personal accountability of the individuals of whom a nation is composed. A nation, like an individual person, may grow old in sin, and may treasure up wrath against the day of wrath, and God may manifest his divine forbearance and long suffering in sparing it for a long time, notwithstanding its many sins and provocations; but when the day of reckoning comes, he will punish it for the sin of its youth, as well as that of its old age.

3. We observe that national trouble may be averted or deferred by national repentance. God visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children of the same nation until the third and fourth generation, but it is only when the children "allow the deeds of their fathers" (Luke 11: 48), or make themselves partakers of their father's sins by approving and practicing the same or similar transgressions. See Jer. 3: 25, and 16: 11, 12. But the children shall not bear the iniquity of their fathers when by repentance they free themselves from any participation in them, Jer. 31: 29; Ezek. 18: 19–22.

God never inflicts judgments on a nation, however much they may be deserved and threatened, when that nation is turning from its sin. We have his own word for this: "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up and to pull down and to destroy it, if that nation against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them." Jer. 18: 7, 8. The language of God by Ezekiel is as applicable to nations as individuals: "As for the wickedness of the wicked he shall not fall thereby, in the day that he turneth from his wickedness." Ezek. 33: 12. We have an illustration and confirmation of this fact in the case of Nineveh. God by his prophet threatened to destroy that great city in forty days, but the nation turned from its sin and "God repented of the evil that he had said he would do unto them," Jonah 3: 10.

This national repentance consists merely in a change of national conduct from evil to good, or an outward turning from sin and transgression to righteousness and obedience by the nation as such. Open immorality must be suppressed; profanity, fraud, oppression and violence must be put away; wicked laws must be abolished, and the government must be so administered as to be for a punishment to evil doers, and for a praise to them that do well And it matters not whether this change of national conduct results from genuine sorrow for sin in the hearts of the people of whom a nation is composed, or merely from legal terror and fear of divine wrath. It is enough that a nation turns from its sin. The prevalence of true and genuine religion among the citizens of a nation, is the most efficacious and permanent foundation of national repentance or of that external turning from sin and that external obedience to the law of God, which may be performed by and predicated of a nation as such. Hence the prevalence of genuine religion in any nation is the surest basis of national tranquility, and the most invincible bulwark of national safety.

III. But now it remains to confirm the truth taught in our text, namely, that national sin must cause national trouble. And this will appear—

1. From a consideration of the character of God, as the moral Governor of the world. He is a God of immaculate holiness. "God is light and in him is no darkness at all." "He is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity." And a being that loves righteousness must necessarily hate unrighteousness; a being that delights in holiness must necessarily abhor sin and manifest his displeasure against it.

Moreover, God is a God of inflexible justice. Vindictive as well as remunerative justice is an essential attribute of the divine nature. The punishment of sin is demanded not merely by the will, but also by the very nature of God and he cannot deny himself. "He will by no means clear the guilty." "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord, I will repay." He can as soon cease to be God as cease to be just, and to vindicate the claims of vindictive justice by punishing the guilty. And he is a God of infinite power as well as inflexible justice. He is abundantly able to punish the sins of nations; for he is the Lord of Hosts, the Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. He has an arm that is full of power; his hand is great in might. It is vain for a nation to boast of the vastness of its resources, the bravery of its generals, and the strength of its armies, when the Lord is incensed against it and comes against it in battle. "There is no king saved by the multitude of an host; a mighty man is not delivered by much strength," Psa. 33: 16.

God can and will punish sin, whether committed by individuals or associations. But associations of men are punishable only in the present world. Families, churches and nations will not exist in the future state. And there can be no substitutionary atonement for the sins of nations as there is for those of individuals who believe in Christ. Hence, when a nation sins it must itself endure the penalty, and that in the present world.

This is indispensably necessary in order to vindicate and display the true character of God as a God of holiness and justice. When we see an individual prospering in his evil way and not punished in the present life, we are at no loss to reconcile this with the justice of God, because we know that there is a judgment after death, and that the punishment which justice demands, is reserved to the future state. But if a wicked people or nation should escape without punishment in the present world, knowing, as we do, that it cannot be punished in the world to come, our faith with regard to the righteous character of God must be staggered, and we must exclaim, "Where is the God of judgment?" But on the other hand, when God sends his terrible judgments upon a wicked nation, we have a clear exhibition of his character as a sin-hating and sin-avenging God: for "the Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth," Psa. 9: 16. "So that a man shall say, Verily, there is a reward for the righteous; verily, he is a God that judgeth in the earth," Psa. 58: 11.

2. That sin must cause trouble in a nation, will appear from a consideration of the nature of sin itself. There is a tendency in the very nature of sin to ruin and destroy a community or nation. It sets at naught that law which God has given as the rule of moral order and peace among men. It perverts authority, destroys subordination, removes mutual confidence, dissolves the ties that bind mankind together, renders men selfish and unsocial, "hateful and hating one another." Social well-being and happiness can never long survive the death of morality and virtue among any people.

3. The history of God's dealings with wicked nations is another evidence of the same truth. The nations of antiquity that hold such a prominent place in the pages of history all brought trouble and ruin upon themselves by sin. Read the history of ancient Egypt, of Nineveh, of Babylon, of cultured Greece, of proud Rome, and you will see that they all fell by their iniquity; sin was their ruin. Witness "Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them, giving themselves over to fornication and going after strange flesh." And what was the result? Why, they "are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire," Jude 7. Look at God's own people, the seed of Abraham, and how did one judgment after another overtake them on account of sin; until as the result of their persevering impenitence and incorrigibleness, "wrath came upon them to the uttermost" and "the Romans came and took away both their place and nation."

In conclusion we may learn from this subject both the cause and cure of our national troubles.

1. The cause is sin—national sin. As a nation we have forsaken the commandments of the Lord. As a nation we have been characterized during our whole history by a lamentable disregard of divine authority and a shameful ingratitude for divine goodness. God is the author of national existence. It was his mighty hand that drove out the savage aborigines of this country and planted this nation in their place. It is true that we have had great generals and wise statesmen, who have been prominent in the work of securing and perpetuating our national existence, but they were mere instruments in the hand of God for the accomplishment of his kind purpose. They were his "battle axe and weapons of war," Jer. 51: 20. "We have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old. How thou didst drive out the heathen [savage Indians] with thy hand and plantedst them; how thou didst afflict the people and cast them out. For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them: but thy right hand and thine arm and the light of thy countenance; because thou hadst favor unto them," Psa. 44: 1–4. And is it not strange that this nation, when it at first proclaimed its own existence and its right to a place among the nations of the earth, in a written constitution, should have made no mention, in that document, of its relation to and dependence upon Almighty God, as the author of its being and source of its mercies?

Again, the Scriptures clearly teach that God is the source of all power and authority in a nation, Rom. 13, 1, and reason confirms the same fact; for if all men are by nature equal, how can one man have authority to rule over others, except it be given him from heaven. All civil authority is derived from and limited by the authority of God.

And again, it is equally evident from the Scriptures that God has given to his Son Jesus Christ, as mediator, universal dominion over all men and all nations, John 17: 2; Eph. 1: 22, and that the will of God as revealed by Christ in the sacred Scriptures is the supreme rule of right and wrong, and the moral basis upon which all human laws must be founded in order to be valid. All laws in conflict with the revealed will of God are violences and not laws. And is it not strange that this Christian nation in its written Constitution and fundamental law, should recognize no source of civil authority higher than "we the people of the United States," and no law higher than what "we the people" or a majority of us may choose to enact? According to this atheistic document, all authority in this nation is of itself, and all its responsibility is to itself. And while this fundamental law is at variance with the Christian character of the nation and with its Christian institutions and laws, it has a powerful tendency to transform and mold the nation into its own likeness. It not only fails to throw the shield of legal protection around our Christian institutions, customs, and laws, but fosters and encourages that spirit of political atheism which is so prevalent in our country; I mean that spirit which manifests itself by a practical disregard of the authority of God in all political matters.

And how is it in our country at the present time? Does not iniquity abound? Is not open and gross immorality practiced with impunity? The public desecration of the Lord's day is not only tolerated but sanctioned by law. And murder in numerous cases goes unpunished. Blood defiles the land and cries to God for vengeance. Hence God is judicially giving up many of the inhabitants of our country to blindness of mind and hardness of heart. Nihilism, socialism and secretism are forming their unhallowed combinations in opposition to all law and authority; and the nation is agitated and terrorized by a spirit of lawlessness and anarchy. And is it not just that a nation which disregards and casts off divine authority should itself be troubled by those who disregard national authority?

Moreover, God is troubling our nation by outward judgments. It is not long since he sent a fearful earthquake to destroy one of our Southern cities; and how often does he commission the terrific cyclone to do its work of destruction in various parts of our country. On this, however, we cannot dwell. But what is the cure for our national troubles? We answer:

2. It is national repentance. Let this nation turn to God. Let it recognize his supreme authority in its fundamental law, and let all laws which are in conflict with his revealed will be abolished. Let the legalized violation of the Sabbath, by carrying the United States mail on that day, be abolished, and let its public desecration by railroad companies, wealthy corporations and pleasure-seeking parties, be suppressed. Let the traffic in intoxicating liquors be no longer sanctioned, but prohibited by law. And let the government be so administered as to be a punishment to evil doers. And then we may expect deliverance from national trouble; then "our light shall break forth as the morning, and our health shall spring forth speedily," Isa. 58: 8. But without this national reformation, vain will be all the wisdom of politicians and legislators in regulating tariffs and adjusting differences between capital and labor. Without the moralizing influence of a civil Sabbath and with the demoralizing influence of a legalized saloon, labor will still be more lawless and capital more oppressive. Nor will the triumph of any political party in a contest with respect to mere secular issues be of any avail. The vital issues in this nation are not secular but moral and religious. In order to save this country, we must have the triumph of a party that will have inscribed upon its banner, For God and his law and for the crown rights of King Jesus.

"Take care of the truth," said Dean Stanley, "and the errors will take care of themselves." Not exactly, at least not in the sense the Dean intends. Truth often requires to be stated negatively as well as positively; otherwise error steals its garb and takes its place. Even so good a man as John Newton said, "If I fill the measure with wheat, how vain will it be for anyone else to fill it with chaff." But just that thing was done, and Newton's successor had a fierce contest with all sorts of erroneous views which had crept into the parish. Error will not only take care of itself, but will constantly grow wider and deeper, and therefore needs to be exposed, kindly indeed, but clearly and persistently. Nor is this any loss, for often truth is most plainly set forth when contrasted with its opposite.—Christian Intelligencer.

An inmate of the Des Plains St. police station told Bro. Blatchly the other day, that he went home a few days before, found his wife dead drunk on the bed and her seven-months old babe by her side. His pocket-book, containing all that was left of his wages, lay open on the table and the doors of the house were all open. He seized the purse, saying if any more money was spent for liquor, he was going to do it, and went to the saloons. He remembered no more until he awoke in the cell of the station.

There are now nearly three hundred Prohibition party papers in this country.

REFORM NEWS.

THE CAMPAIGN AT THE CAPITOL.

THE BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES.

WASHINGTON, May 18, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I visited the Baptist Conference this afternoon, and in about one hour's time gave out fully 1,000 tracts. They were well received with very rare exceptions. One brother thought I had better be preaching Christ. Another asked if I had authority to do that work. I said, "I am here by permission of the pastor of this church." A third said, "You are a crank. I know you; you came to our town and lectured for my special benefit. You told a story about a goat. I don't want to talk to you," etc. I expressed a desire to talk with him when he was not in so great haste. He replied, "I never want to see you again until we meet in heaven." The ladies were particularly interested in tract No. 4, and some returned to ask "one for a friend." I met several elderly men who knew Nathaniel Colver and David Bernard, and one venerable man said, "I once belonged to a lodge of Know Nothings with Millard Fillmore, but never joined any other order."

Bro. Jackson says he has refrained from writing for the Cynosure for good reasons, but added, "You can have no idea of the amount of good that paper is doing in New Orleans and among our people in the South." At the conclusion of our conference he said, "If your society can spend any money in the South I hope you will devote it largely to sending the Cynosure to the colored ministers. They need it and will read it, and it will do great good." When I mentioned to him our work here, and that I was talking of an industrial school, with perhaps a meeting for the mothers, I was pleased to learn that he is now at work starting the very same thing in his church at New Orleans. With several other brethren from the South he purposes, before leaving the city, to call at the N. C. A. office for further consultation. This is certainly a center with a vast radius. I have talked with ministers to-day from Maine, Massachusetts, New York, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, and how many more States I know not, but I rest from my labors to-night in the belief that our literature has been started on its way to some point in every State in this Union, and in some States to many points. May "God give the increase."

MAY 23, 1888.—The Baptist missionary convention closed last evening with the graduating exercise of Wayland Seminary, held in the Congregational church. The audience was large, and occupied seats without distinction of "race color or previous condition." Among those conspicuous on the platform was the cheerful, intelligent face of Frederick Douglass. After distributing a few tracts I went to Willard's Hotel to hear Dr. J. T. Fulton on "The Nun and the Convent." The Dr. has been here nearly a week, speaking in hired halls, as he said no church in the city was open to him. He spoke very kindly of his brethren in the ministry, but deeply regretted that they had not the courage to say publicly what they would freely admit to him in private. His arraignment of Rome was severe, and the facts, with names and dates and how he came in possession of them, were appalling. He relies on collections, contributions and the sale of his books for meeting expenses,and reports a generous response hitherto. He was glad to know something of our work here, and bade the cause of anti-secrecy a hearty God-speed, but has his own hands full with his special work. I hope to see his face at No. 215 before he leaves the city.

KNIGHTS OF THE GOLDEN EAGLE.

An article in this morning's Post begins with the suggestive statement:

"Clad in plain citizens' attire, over 3,000 delegates to the Baptist Convention came to Washington and mingled with the city's throng, unobserved except for their guide books and their sight-seeing propensities. Yesterday, however, when a few thousand Knights of the Golden Eagle reached Washington to inaugurate the session of the Supreme Castle with a parade, a ball and a banquet, their showy uniforms made their presence conspicuous on the streets." * * * As the parade moved up the Avenue it was viewed by thousands of people who thronged the Avenue nearly to the car tracks. "At the White House, the line passed in review before the President, who acknowledged the salutes of the various companies as they passed by raising his hat."

The number in attendance seems to have been, as given by the papers, a little greater than at the convention, but judged by appearances they were men of very different character and purposes. No special effort was required to ascertain the purpose of the convention, but I sought in vain for any one who could give me an intelligent account of the K. G. E.s or a reason for its existence. In reply to my interrogations I was repeatedly told that it was a "beneficial order," and that was about all the most intelligent looking member knew, or at least was willing to say. I said, "I see you have swords, and you have the appearance of a military rather than a religious or beneficial order. This looks to an outsider more like a second rebellion in its inception than like a simple association of citizens for lawful and peaceful purposes." I saw that the man was getting nervous, and I turned away, saying, "I fear this Government will yet have to meet and put down a more formidable enemy in the secret lodge empire than it did in the late slave-holders' rebellion."

I went around to "Rifles Armory," hoping to learn something more of this "benefit order," at their dance and banquet, but found the approach guarded by six stalwart policemen, and a notice pasted conspicuously: "Purchase tickets here before entering the hall," and so turned away. The papers say it was a brilliant affair. Commissioner W. B. Webb made a speech of welcome in behalf of the District. The performance, with variations, of excursions, theatrical benefits, and secret sessions of the Supreme Council, is to go on until Friday night.

I look upon this miserable, pompous farce as the devil's invention and agency tor neutralizing so far as possible the good work done and serious impressions made by the band of noble, self-denying, God-fearing men and women who composed the Baptist missionary convention just closed in this city. Let us pray that the devil's purpose may be defeated.

INCIDENTS.

While writing at my desk in the evening, with the blinds open on the street, my attention was attracted by the remark, "Here! this is the place." Looking in through the window, one of the men read the placards exposed on the wall, in a clear and distinct voice: "All secret, oath-bound political parties are dangerous to any nation."—U. S. Grant. "Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies."—Wendell Phillips. Then they passed on. Whether friends or foes I know not, nor do I care to know. They understand the nature of our work here.

An elderly lady to whom I handed tracts Nos. 4 and 10, at the Baptist Convention said, "I am from Massachusetts. I knew Dr. Pease well. He was once my pastor, and we all esteemed him very highly." She was, of course, an Anti-mason and glad to know of our work.

Dr. Fulton has a special agent at the convention selling his two books on Romanism. In commending them to my notice he remarked, "The Catholic Hierarchy is not a church, it's a great lodge." I replied, "You are probably correct; but it is not the only lodge against which we as Christians have to contend. The Catholic lodge acknowledges Christ and teaches the atonement, while the Masonic lodge rejects both."

There have been some very able addresses delivered during the convention, in which the principles of our reform were clearly set forth. One gentleman from Kentucky closed his plea for a higher Christian education in nearly these words: "Let us embody a character and life in our educational system that needs no caves or caverns of secrecy to hide its deformity; but that can and will walk forth under the glittering stars at night, and stand erect under the meridian blaze of the sun in his zenith, challenging the criticisms of foe and friend alike. Let it be anchored in Christ and rooted in the hearts as well as grounded in the heads of the young men and women we are training for Christ's kingdom on earth and in heaven." An immense audience responded with prolonged applause and hearty amens.

The N. C. A. is indebted to Hon. S. C. Pomeroy for a suitable and substantial office desk for its Washington headquarters. Many thanks for the desk and expressions of continued good will.

Bro. Ford called early this morning. He is just as enthusiastic as ever, and said, "If at any time you should get short of funds, I most always have a little that I could loan you without interest." At our Prohibition Convention last evening we elected Bro. Johnston of the American and Mrs. McPherson to go to Indianapolis as alternates.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE SOUTHERN WORK.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 19, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have been somewhat unwell this week and not able to lecture or preach, but have distributed tracts and done some canvassing. Rev. H. C. Green begun a series of sermons at Shiloh Baptist church last Sabbath on "Human Slavery." He proposes to preach three of the above sermons, in which the secret empire will get all it wants, as Bro. Green is a seceding Odd-fellow.

The principal Republican, Masonic, Odd-fellow journal of New Orleans, said editorially of the parade of the Odd-fellows of the tenth inst.: "The Grand United Order of Odd-fellows celebrated their twenty-second anniversary of the introduction of the order in Louisiana, on last Thursday, the tenth inst., with a grand parade through the main thoroughfares of the city, and a picnic at the fair grounds; the parade was particularly excellent, over 1,500 men being in line. A large number of people, white and black, visited the same." It don't seem strange at all for the lodge to make a small mistake of 1,322. Although there were only 178 men in uniform, both in carriages, horse-back and on foot, the lodge multiplies it to 1,500. I don't see how the Pelican can believe its own statement.

A reader of the Cynosure said his employer took more care to read his paper than he did himself, although his employer is an Odd-fellow, and says, "That paper is no goot; it talks against the Ott-fellows." Yet he takes care to read it. We trust he may be convinced of the evil of secretism, and renounce it.

I attended services at Winan's Chapel M. E. church, Rev. J. W. Hilton, pastor, Thursday at 8 P. M. This is the third largest M. E. colored church in the city. Bro. Hilton preached an interesting sermon from Gen. 19: 17: "Escape for thy life." The elder spoke very courageously and plainly of Lot's difficulties in Sodom and Gomorrah. He said although Lot had lived there many years his influence as a Christian was not enough to even convince his wife and sons-in-law that God would destroy the city. We trust that elder Hilton will compare Lot as a minister of God in Sodom with J. W. Hilton and other ministers in the secret lodges, and believe that their influence in the lodge will be like unto Lot's in Sodom.

F. J. DAVIDSON.

WESTERN OHIO CALLED OUT.

COLD WATER, May 24, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—For more than a week past I have been getting things in battle array. I have visited a dozen or more towns in this section and have arranged for about that number of meetings. My appointments are as follows: To-night in the College here; to-morrow evening, if arrangements are made, with United Brethren friends at Montezuma; Sabbath I spend with Mennonite brethren at Lightsville; Monday evening I speak at Waterhouse Chapel in the country; Tuesday evening, in the Universalist church, Union City, Ind.; Thursday evening, May 31st, in the United Brethren church, West Mansfield, Logan county; Friday evening, Mt. Pleasant, United Brethren church, or again at West Mansfield. The 2d, 3d and 4th of June I work with the Christians at Raymonds, Union county. Brother Harrington is arranging meetings there. I go next to North Lewisburgh, Champaign county. Brother Wm. J. Thornberry, minister of the Friends at that place, subscribed for the Cynosure as I came through, and expressed a willingness to arrange meetings or help in any way he could. I have written him to have meetings prepared for the fifth and thereafter.

I trust all friends in the vicinity of any of the appointments will "take due notice and govern themselves accordingly."

I hope to reach Columbus again by the 8th of June. In the meantime Mrs. Stoddard will be glad to cancel the indebtedness of all those whom I have trusted for their subscriptions to the Cynosure, whose payment is due. This general notice I trust will be sufficient without my writing especially to each one. I took ten new subscriptions yesterday.

I found a warm friend of our cause at Versailles, Darke county, in Bro. T. Simpkins. He is a great bother to the secretists in that place. He was living in Vineland, N. J., at the time Pres. Charles A. Blanchard came there, lectured against the lodge, and was mobbed by the same. He was then a great lodger, belonging to the Masons and Knights of Pythias. But since God has graciously forgiven his sins he has cleansed him, as he says, "from secrecy, tobacco and whisky." He is now a happy Christian, belongs to the Wesleyan Methodist church, and run a camp meeting last summer in the woods near his home. He subscribed for the Cynosure and will arrange for meetings when I can come that way again.

I filled the United Brethren pulpit at Union City last Sabbath in the absence of the pastor, Rev. Myers, who was called away to preach the funeral sermon of Rev. Long, a former United Brethren preacher who lived near New Madison. Bro. Myers is a "liberal" and Bro. Long was a "radical," as they are termed among the brethren. That is, Bro. Myers is in favor of doing away with the law on secrecy in the church, and takes in secretists accordingly; while Bro. Long was in favor of retaining the rule as it has stood. I was kindly entertained at Bro. Long's over a year ago, and observed him to be a devoted Christian man.

I took six subscriptions to the Cynosure among friends at Union City. Bro. Bennett was my right-hand man there. He is one of the old-style United Brethren preachers, who enjoys his religion as he goes along. He kindly accompanied me some fifteen miles around the country. He is to meet me at Lightsville on Sabbath and take charge of me till after the Union City meeting. He is seventy-eight years of age, but quite active. Rev. B. G. Schmogrow, pastor of the Lutheran church in Union City, showed me much kindness, subscribed for our paper and persuaded one of his members to do the same. This community is largely Catholic. The terrible curse of whisky and popery is everywhere manifest. Debauched and degraded humanity may be everywhere seen. Forlorn-looking young men flock around the saloons like hungry hogs around a bucket of swill.

I have been very much interested in reading Bro. Countee's experience in joining and leaving the lodge as published in the Cynosure of May 10th. If it was published in tract form and sent broadcast among the colored people I believe it would do a vast amount of good. If it is published in that way you can count on me for two dollars to help in the expense.

W. B. STODDARD.

GROWTH AT CAMP NELSON, KY.

CAMP NELSON, Ky., May 18, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Leaving Washington on the 14th, the pleasant and fast train of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad brought me south to Charlottesville, Va., across the Shenandoah Valley, over the mountains, with their magnificent views, down the picturesque Greenbrier, New and Kanaway rivers to the Ohio, and then across to Lexington, Ky. Confessedly no agricultural region in America has so much both of beauty and fertility as this Blue-grass country of Kentucky, and surely there could be no more favorable time to see it than in this beautiful month of May.

From Lexington, after a few hours, I went south to Nicholasville, stopping at the fine Hotel Nicholas, where I remained until noon the next day, and then took the stage seven miles to Camp Nelson. There I was most kindly received by Bro. J. G. and Mrs. Fee, who were on a visit in the interest of Camp Nelson Academy.

Camp Nelson is a village on a horse-shoe bend of the Kentucky river, and made up exclusively of colored people. It is slowly increasing in population, and the citizens are becoming mainly the owners of the homes in which they live. There has been a considerable improvement since I was here in the spring of 1882. There is no dram shop or secret society in the place. A few, within a year past, have joined the Knights of Labor, but I think all have dropped out.

There has been, during the past winter, a marked revival of religion resulting in the hopeful conversion of sixty-eight persons. The church is evangelical, independent and undenominational. It makes the use of intoxicating drinks and connection with the secret lodge system a bar to membership. It has in the past enjoyed the pastoral labors of Elders J. G. Fee, J. F. Browne and several local ministers.

Camp Nelson Academy has a fine new building, not quite finished on the inside, but occupied and under the care of Miss Mary Robe, a devoted Christian worker who, without the promise of reward, devotes her time to evangelical and reform work. The old church building, though in much better condition than six years ago, is going to decay, and must be supplanted by a new one. This, the Christian people of the place have undertaken to do, and, having secured an excellent location, are about to lay the foundations of a house of worship about 40 by 60 feet. They will need aid in so important an undertaking, as they are all poor. I most heartily commend their work to the Christian sympathies of the benevolent.

Camp Nelson Academy has quite recently applied to the legislature of Kentucky to change its constitution so that no trustee or teacher shall have membership in any secret order, or that the tenure of its property shall ever be endangered by mortgage for money borrowed or other debts. This memorial was put into the hands of a Masonic member of the legislature, who, as a member of the committee to which it was referred, reported against it because of its anti-secrecy feature. The same end, however, has been obtained by the adoption of by-laws. The Academy, besides its building and ample grounds, owns a valuable farm of 120 acres of land, which is, and will be, a source of income.

I was glad to be able to give a lecture and a sermon on the evenings of the 16th and 17th inst. and to know that I had the warm sympathy of these simple-hearted, but faithful Christian people. I went there with the determination of resigning my office as trustee of the Academy. I became convinced that it was both a responsibility and an honor from which I had no right to shrink.

H. H. HINMAN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BRO. COUNTEE'S HEALTH FAILING.

MEMPHIS, May 18, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I enclose to you a few thoughts concerning our work here in Memphis. "We have met the enemy and he is ours," is an apt quotation to the state of affairs here. In every turn of the city it can be plainly seen that secret lodgism is on the decline; materially so. Praise the Lord.

I have not written you lately because of my physical condition. I am completely broken down. I have been for the last three years preaching the Gospel for my Master with all of my soul—a rock of offence to the lodgites. My whole work has been against the natural tendency of the people, who serve principally the gods of this world. I have been, through much opposition, striving to go up hill, the people down; to get my church people from under the influence of worldly associations has been a task of both soul and body. Few are aware of the trials and perplexities of a colored minister in the South.

I am not yet on Pisgah's top, but we have no secretist, as you know, with whom we commune in church fellowship. The caring for the sick and burying of the dead is a very heavy work. I have had all of this to look after, and as a result I am completely broken down in health. For the last two months I have been unable to keep on my feet a whole week, and this week I have been down nearly every other day. I feel sometimes that my work is nearly done. But thanks be to God the lamp is burning. I feel that I would like to go to New Orleans once more; but unless through God's grace I can get some mountain air during the hot months of summer, I fear I shall be on the other side before 1888 rolls away. It is a fact that the lodges regret very much their attack on me, as it has undermined their foundations. I never let up; I preach now just as hard against them as I did in the days when danger was standing thick, and the air was pregnant with threats. I have been able to preach only four times since March 1st. I need rest, but have nothing to rest on. I have been two days writing this much, and now I must close.

May God bless you and all the dear readers of the Cynosure. May the good work go on until every secret clan shall be swept out of, and from among the people of the Lord our God, and the church of Christ all over the world shall be free indeed. Amen. Yours for heaven, R. N. COUNTEE.

HOODWINKING UNION SOLDIERS.

YORK, Pa.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—During the war a large Union hospital was maintained at this city. Many soldiers who died here were buried in the soldiers' lot in Prospect Hill Cemetery, which also contains a very superior soldiers' monument.

For a number of years the G. A. R. and citizens have placed flowers upon the soldiers' graves on Decoration Day. But as the Jesuits make it a rule to advance their projects by degrees, we are now to behold a great improvement, for the G. A. R. tadpole has developed into a regular secret-society bullfrog, and we expect to hear very loud croaking about the brave soldiers who died fighting against Jeff Davis's Royal Arch Confederacy. The York Dispatch of May 1 says: "A number of societies and associations have already accepted the invitation of the Decoration Day Committee of Post 37, G. A. R., to take part in the Memorial Day observances, and from present indications the parade to the cemetery on May 30th this year will be the largest and finest ever witnessed in York on a similar occasion." The "societies" here referred to are our local secret orders, and some in other cities and neighboring towns. The day being reconstructed into a great secret society show day, Gen. Phelps gave it the proper designation when he called it "desecration day."

At the close of the war the Jesuits and Masons went into the business of outwitting and hoodwinking Union soldiers and sailors and their sons. How well they are succeeding can be seen by the great lodge circus performances which the American people are now about to behold. Yours truly,

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

A WORD MORE ON THE "BLUE AND GRAY."

QUAKERTOWN, Ind.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—"Mac," in your May 17th issue, has, to my mind, more the smack of a party politician than the humble philanthropist, refreshed from the fountains of truth. A reunion of the soldiers of the "Blue and of the Gray" in the personification of the bloody carnage of war, is not a desirable way for a penitent South and a noble North to grasp hands in fraternal friendship. Let the Union be upon the humility of a Christian platform embracing the precious doctrine taught by the Redeemer, "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also."

It is high time that professors of religion and the Bible had ceased to dishonor its teachings of love and forgiveness, by a hostile demonstration of war in its mission of mercy and redemption to a fallen and sin-cursed world.

Let "Mac," as well as your humble correspondent, be willing to bow at the mercy-seat of the Most High and seek that wisdom, not of the earth, earthy, but from above, that will enable us to put off the old man Adam and be clothed in the habiliment of light and knowledge of the great I AM. Imbued with this power the war spirit will be gone, and that "sectional shame" spoken of will vanish, and the way be prepared for the advent of the glorious kingdom of the Lord's Prayer, "on earth as it is in heaven." J. M. STANTON.

FROM A COLORED PASTOR IN IOWA.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I highly appreciate the attitude of your paper toward secret societies. I have not failed to see the baneful effects which secret societies exert upon my people. I am the pastor of the African M. E. church in the city of Oskaloosa, where there is also a colored Methodist Episcopal church. The colored people number here, all told, between 200 and 300, a very large percentage of whom are members of one or the other of the three different secret lodges. The pastor of the M. E. church and a very large percentage of his members are Freemasons, and there are in my membership of about sixty, Freemasons, Odd-fellows and Good Samaritans.

Notwithstanding, I will raise my voice against secret societies in my pulpit and out of it. I stand almost alone among my people here in this particular. Rev. O. S. Morrow of the U. P. church is a fearless man in the line of denouncing secret societies, while some of the rest of our city pastors set apart a Sabbath to preach to Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Red Men and the Grand Army.

If there ever was a little town cursed with secret societies, it is Oskaloosa. So you may imagine that we who are opposed to the lodge religion do not need to go far from our homes to find an advanced guard of the secret lodge army.

Not long ago the writer was given the following subject to open before the city Ministerial Association: "Why Have We Twice as Many Women as Men in Our Churches?" I said, among other things, that secret societies stood right between the men and the church, from the fact that some of the ministers would go along with them, and preach to them on the excellence of their orders; and the lodge members think their temple just as good as the church of Christ. On the following week one of our newspaper men attacked me about what I had said, as he was a Freemason. I stood to what I said first, and I am right. My own people are displeased because I refuse to read notices on the Sabbath of their society meetings. Pray for me that I may stand fast and cry aloud against secret lodge violence. Yours in Christ, TIMOTHY REEVES.

PITH AND POINT.

THE OHIO COLLEGES.

The Christian Cynosure of May 17, page 5, "Ohio Notes" does injustice to Ohio colleges. The Times, as quoted, only gives Oberlin as opposed to secrecy and the language of Bro. W. B. Stoddard implies that only two are so disposed. If he had said Capital University and others I would be satisfied, as I think I could name three others that are of note, and I hope there are yet more.—JAMES P. THOMAS, Scranton, Kan.

FROM THE THEOLOGICAL PROFESSOR, STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.

I do like the Cynosure, its principles and grit. It is refreshing to hear things called by their right names.—M. L. BERGER.

THE TRUTH ABROAD IN TEXAS.

I heartily endorse the principles of the Cynosure and am endeavoring to instil the same in my people wherever I go. What I like about the Cynosure, it sets men and women a-thinking. Wherever it is read it catches the attention and rivets conviction upon the consciences of men. I believe it has done a vast deal of good in and around our town in strengthening opposition to secret societies. There are few if any colored men or women in this community who belong to any secret order, and nearly all express themselves as opposed to them. The Methodist minister of this community is a Mason but does not defend his order. When he is spoken to on the subject he hangs his head and avoids an answer. I visited Sherman, Texas, a few weeks ago. This is, in reality, a city of secret societies. I talked with several of the leading colored citizens there on the subject of secret orders. Some confessed the evils of the lodge, and the hindrance it is to Christian work. But they have not the moral courage to come out and denounce them. I was specially interested in one brother minister who knows of the evils of the lodge system, but is afraid to come out. He needs help and I think a few copies of the Cynosure would help him out of the clutches of the lodge.—E. E. SIMS, Dodd, Texas.

LITERATURE.

WOMAN. HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES. By Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage. Pp. 200. Price 25 cents. J. S. Ogilvie, New York and Chicago.

This is a republication of a dozen sermons to women by the pastor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, and are embellished with all the eloquence for which their author is distinguished. And they are not only full of eloquent passages, but of good, sensible, practical advice that mankind needs to hear repeated again and again, from youth to age. Women of all classes and conditions will find something in these sermons suited to their experiences—"Women Who Fight the Battle of Life Alone," "Worldly Marriages," "Dominion of Fashion," "Woman's Happiness—What Can and What Cannot Make a Woman Happy," "The Grand-mother," "Parental Blunders," etc.—these show the variety and scope of the topics. It is well when publishers can turn aside from the demoralizing novel and give the people such books as this in cheap form.

Scribner's Magazine for June aptly illustrates that "peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." When the Century began the war series two or three years ago it proved a most popular attraction. It may safely be predicted that the series of articles on the great power of civilization—the modern railway, begun in the present number of Scribner, will prove more truly popular. There has never been an exposition in America more wonderful than that of railway appliances several years ago in this city. "The Building of a Railway" is the leading article, written by Thomas Curtis Clarke, one of the most eminent of American bridge builders and a man of the widest experience in railway construction. In addition to his thorough knowledge, he possesses the knack of putting it in a clear, forcible and interesting way. He makes very vivid the idea of the immensity of the American railway system by striking comparisons; he has followed each step in the evolution of it with an acute analysis of the moving causes; he has paid a hearty tribute to American ingenuity and perseverance which have made our railways essentially different from and superior to those in the old world; and he concludes by pointing out the great part played by the railway in changing the whole basis of civilization from military to industrial. The illustrations of this article are some of them remarkably fine. The bright side of "Hospital Life" in a great city as it appears to a patient is described by A. B. Ward, who writes, from full knowledge and sympathy, of Bellevue, Roosevelt, St. John's and St. Mary's in New York and Brooklyn. This article should do much toward diminishing the prejudice which still exists toward being taken to a hospital. The humane, kindly and often humorous side of hospital life is described. The many illustrations are drawings from life by skillful artists.

The Missionary Review for June opens with the first part of an article by Rev. Dr. Gracey of Buffalo on the "Relative Progress of Christianity," reviewing the claim that the heathen world is more rapidly increasing than are the Christian converts. An editorial by Dr. Pierson, "Africa: A Wonderful Chapter in Modern History," is a most interesting review of the remarkable events that have led up to the present missionary movement on that continent. Other articles are "Mormonism Moribund," "The Insufficiency of Buddhism," "The Speechless Testifying for Christ," and "Rev. George Bowen." The Monthly Bulletin of Missions gives the latest intelligence from nearly every country in the world where missions are in progress. In Statistics of the World's Missions facts and figures are tabulated for quick reference; while Editorial Notes on Current Topics close a number not surpassed by any of the remarkable numbers which have gone before. We are not surprised that the publishers say that "the circulation has doubled in three months," that the Review "is becoming immensely popular," and that edition after edition of the earlier numbers of the year have been exhausted.

AN ABUNDANCE OF SWEET CORN.

Every farmer's family should have an abundance of sweet corn, and that means, if they are fond of it, all that each wants twice a day, dinner and supper. Many prefer it, if it can be had but once daily, at the supper or evening meal. A successive sowing or planting every ten days or fortnight will give a plenty until frost comes. This, which is a luxury to most people, can be had by the farmer without cost, as the resulting fodder will more than pay for the seed and labor. At the late plantings give extra fertilizing; it will come back in the fodder. There are still many who do not know the superiority of sweet corn over the "roasting ears" of field kinds. We do not name varieties, but any kind of sweet corn—that with wrinkled kernels—which can be procured is vastly better than field corn. If intending to save seed, plant at a distance from common corn, unless that is quite out of tassel.—American Agriculturist.

CORN AND POTATO CROPS CONTRASTED.

The corn crop, next to the potato crop, is the most expensive that the farmer can grow. The excess of expense in the potato crop is altogether in the seed. Plowing, fitting the land, cultivation and harvesting are about as expensive for one as the other. The point that should most impress farmers is that with the corn crop heavy manuring and high culture always secure a profitable return. With potatoes there is a risk from rot if too much manure is applied, or a wet season may cause rot anyway. The little extra labor necessary to assure a full crop of corn is the only part of the farmer's work from which he never gets cheated out of his pay.—Am. Cultivator.

NOW FOR A BIG CROP OF CORN.

Practical farmers may well laugh at those who talk about corn being deficient in protein and phosphates. It is the grandest crop in the world. A well-filled corn-crib makes the farmer and his horses, cows, sheep, pigs and chickens happy. Throughout a large area of the United States corn is grown for home use and not for sale. John Johnston, the father of American tile-draining and one of the best and most successful farmers of his time, said to us: "I have never sold corn but once in my life—and that I gave away to be sent to Ireland during the famine." He grew large crops of corn but fed it all out, stalks and all, to sheep and other stock, supplemented with oil-cake when it could be purchased cheap enough. He was a firm believer in oil-cake, but would have laughed at any one who claimed that it was worth more, pound for pound, than good, sound corn

In many sections last year the corn crop suffered from drought. This is unusual. On good land, kept clean by the frequent use of the cultivator, corn will stand drought better than any other crop. Said an experienced farmer: "I believe I could raise a good crop of corn if not a drop of rain fell from the day it was planted till the day it was cut." He looked to the stores of water in the soil, and was careful that no weeds sucked up this moisture and robbed the corn plants. Clover and other deep-rooted plants bring up nitrogen, phosphates, potash and other plant food from the subsoil, and leave them near the surface in the form of vegetable matter; a severe drouth does the same thing. Capillary attraction raises the water charged with plant food, and as it evaporates, leaves it on the surface. The great drought of last year has left our land in good condition. Now for a big corn crop!—American Agriculturist.

ROTATION OF FODDER CROPS FOR A SMALL PIECE OF GROUND.

Quite a large quantity of feed can be grown on a small lot. Cut oats when just ripe, bind in small sheaves, allow to stand in small shocks until the straw is cured, then store away in the haymow to be fed out in the bundle during the winter months. They form an agreeable variety, and a horse will eat them, straw and all, with a relish. After the oats, early potatoes and other vegetables are harvested, the ground may be sown to millet, which in a fair season will make a large quantity of green feed. It should all be cut and fed or converted into hay before seed forms. After the millet is harvested the ground may be plowed and sown to rye, which will be ready to cut for green feed in the spring long before anything else. If the land is not needed for other crops, follow the rye with oats and the oats with millet. If the soil is kept moderately rich, a good crop of each is almost a certainty With this rotation an immense quantity of green and dry horse feed can be cheaply grown on a small patch of land, and there will be no chance for weeds. However small the lot some carrots should be grown, to be stored in the cellar for feeding in winter and early spring. For this purpose the Half-long Stump-rooted is best, as it grows to a good size, yields heavily, and is not difficult to harvest. It rarely pays to grow corn for horse feed on a small lot. Immature corn, either green or cured, is not good food for horses.—American Agriculturist.

A WONDERFUL OFFER.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have offered, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents. It has fairly attained a world-wide reputation. If you have dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head in to the throat, sometimes profuse, watery and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; if there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers, the voice being changed and has a nasal twang, the breath offensive, smell and taste impaired, sensation of dizziness with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility, you are suffering from nasal catarrh. The more complicated your disease, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, less understood or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians.

Neither mind nor body can act healthfully if the blood is vitiated. Cleanse the vital current from impurities by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This remedy purifies the blood, recruits the wasted energies, and restores health to the debilitated system.

GOING WEST.

The general interest that has been taken in the opening of the Montana Indian Reservations is shown by the large numbers of people who have already gone to Great Falls to investigate the mineral and agricultural resources of that wonderful country. The low excursion rate announced by C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, makes the expense of exploring this country merely nominal, and will undoubtedly result in a still larger number following.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

CHEAP EXCURSIONS. For the benefit of those looking for new locations or investments, semi-monthly excursions have been arranged, at one fare for the round trip, to all points in Dakota and Minnesota. Tickets first class and good for 30 days. For maps and further particulars address C. H. WARREN, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

REV. MATTHEW L. R. PERRINE, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesee M. E. Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

EVERY MAN AND WOMAN of legal age should sign the League against lodgery. Cut it out (see page 14), circulate for signatures, being careful to give post-office, county and State, as well as name, distinctly. Return to W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER:—We have taken too little notice of this interesting and useful Friends' paper, a Chicago weekly by C. W. Pritchard, editor and manager. It is true of Bro. Pritchard, as was said of Wilberforce, that the "bitter" of his reproofs is "sweet;" and though capable of keen sarcasm, it is of that sort which leaves no sting where it strikes. Bishop Bowman in the Methodist General Conference was witty on the Friends' admission of pictures and flowers. This is the way Bro. Pritchard replies to him: "Bishop Bowman related to the General Conference a circumstance by which he learned through pictures and flowers in the 'Friend's Bookstore,' Philadelphia, that the 'world moves.' It moves slowly, Bishop. You Methodists, truly, 'have had a large hand in bringing about some of the changes' for the better that we now see. If you move up briskly on the woman question you may, in a few years, reach the point at which Friends stood two hundred years ago. Can we help you in any way?"

LETTERS FROM WASHINGTON cheer and encourage us, as we trust some who have censured the changes lately made there will be cheered and encouraged when they witness the harmony which prevails, and the necessity and importance of having an agent of the N. C. A. in our fine building devoting his whole time to keeping the anti-secrecy cause under the concentrated gaze and scrutiny of the United States in that national and political focus. We hail the return of ex-Senator Pomeroy and Mr. Milton Ford to active co-operation; but most of all the establishment of weekly religious meetings at our headquarters. Now let no Wesleyan, Free Methodist, United or Reformed Presbyterian, United Brethren, or any other of the thousands of Christians who are awakened on this subject, fail to open their windows and pray as Daniel did, toward our national Jerusalem. And let Prof. Bailey's Central Mission count this prayer-meeting at our headquarters as an expansion of their own: and thus "pitch the tune" at Washington, which our nation is to sing out! That day when revival meetings in Washington will be de facto, anti-secret meetings, when sinners invited to Christ will see and know they are to come out of Christless lodge-worships as they are to leave saloons, gambling hells, theaters, brothels, etc., and the day of redemption will draw nigh.

JOSEPH COOK.

The western shore of Lake Champlain from Canada to Whitehall, the head of the lake, is eminently historic ground. It was the natural military road for invading armies who wished to reach New York by the Hudson River, and Plattsburgh and Ticonderoga were its battlegrounds and forts. Lake George, not inappropriately named "Lake Sacrament," the purest and clearest of living water, empties itself at Ticonderoga by a small mill-stream into Lake Champlain, out of a long winding stone basin whose marge is mountains.

Four miles back of Ticonderoga village, with Lake George on one side and the Adirondack mountains on the other, just where the road is winding into the highlands, Joseph Cook, who needs no designation but "The Lecturer," was born in 1838, just fifty years ago. His father, who was born on the same farm, was a Baptist deacon: and the son inherited his father's veneration for God and religion; and nature and genius have done the rest. Agassiz was a genius; but his genius led him to deny the Bible account of creation, and to believe that men, like plants and animals, sprung up, one race in one valley and another race in another. But the Baptist denomination dissented from the "standing order" or religion, and dissenters must reason. "The standing order" had blended the church with the "town meeting," and admitted members to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper who did not profess to be regenerated. The Baptists appealed to the Bible, and insisted that it was improper to give spiritual bread to a spiritual corpse. Like all sects which come up after other sects, they were put on their defense. They insisted on experimental religion, and, in their covenant meetings every month, they gave reasons why they considered themselves regenerated.

This produced a set of minds like Nathaniel Colver, who preached among the little islands of Lake Champlain when a youth; and in his manhood and old age, formed churches in cities and taught theology in different States. And when the lodge had seized the nation by the throat, Bernard and Colver and Pease and Stearns, with their compeers, braved slander and assassination, and freed the Baptist denomination from the bandit grip of the lodge.

Young Cook inherited his independence, but his genius and his religion were given him of God. In the district schools of those mountains thought ran clear, as the water from the springs in his father's woods. From those schools he went to Phillips' Academy in Andover, Mass.; from thence to Yale, and from Yale, after two years and a half study, he went to Harvard, and looked at thoughts and things through the minds and eyes of other men.

But there are geniuses which are laws unto themselves, and his was that higher order of genius. Massachusetts orthodoxy was technical, and so tame that it cringed and crouched before the slave power. Unitarianism was vapid; and minds like that of Channing turned from its creed of negations concerning the nature of God to the certainties of the humanity of Christ. Dr. Woods was lauded at Andover as the standard of orthodoxy, and Channing was railed on in the United States Senate by the slaveholders who produced the rebellion. Cook followed neither Woods nor Channing. He boldly undertook to put the whole course of nature on the witness stand and ask her if the Bible is true; and he obtained an affirmative answer. He believed in God and prayed to him. With a strength of memory which made books his familiar friends, and an originality of conception and utterance which made the most recondite truths palpable, he showed that the ground teachings of the Bible were re-affirmed by the whole outward creation of God.

Thus the necessity of the atonement, denied by Parker and his school, Mr. Cook proved from the universality of law; that conscience rules here or at the Pleiades; an act against man is an act against God, and vice versa; and so in the words of Mr. Cook, "The necessity of atonement is an inference from exact science." In short, he undertook, an seemed to multitudes to succeed in the undertaking, to prove that the ground truths of Christianity are "self-evident truths," like axioms in mathematics, which cannot be denied without absurdity, and such absurdity as it would be to say that two halves of any one thing are not equal to the whole of it; or, that the shortest line between two points is not straight.

Filled with these testimonies of science to religion, and the words and teachings of men and of books beyond all ordinary minds, he went into the Meionaon, or lower hall in Tremont Temple, and took the lead of prayer-meetings there. His remarks drew crowds, which forced the meetings into the upper Temple, where he discoursed at noon to multitudes who thronged the sitting and standing room of the place. And this for years; so that to deny, now, the truth and power of his teachings, is to impeach the taste and judgment of the better part of mankind.

Mr. Cook traveled around the globe, and returning, said to the crowd that met him in Farwell Hall, Chicago: "I have been going round the world, not to recruit my health, for I was not sick when I left your shores; not because I was weary, for I was not weary. I went abroad not simply for instruction, usefulness, rest; but I went abroad chiefly because this religion of self-evident truth was in my soul." "I believe all men are drifting into a final permanence of charcter." "I believe in every fiber of my being that the man who loves what God hates cannot be in peace in God's presence."

Just before beginning this tour of the world Mr. Cook gave his emphatic testimony against the lodge to Secretary Stoddard. He was in England at the time of the Boston mob in 1880, but heard with indignation of the disgraceful conduct of Boston Masons. "Had I been conducting a lecture course," said he afterwards, "I should certainly have given a prelude on that subject." He did, during the course of 1887, give such a prelude on the secret labor organizations, and he wrote with approval of the discussion of the lodge in the congress of churches in March of the present year.

A request signed by some hundreds of American pastors was some time last year since presented Mr. Cook, asking that he give a prelude in his lecture course to the general topic of secret societies. The course that year had been already fixed, but Mr. Cook replied that if the movers of the reform would make a wave he would launch a boat in it. There was, indeed, a measure of unfairness in the request that Mr. Cook should be asked to lead where many of these ministers would fear to follow. But this answer shows the terrible danger of the secret orders which can so intimidate our ablest men. Demosthenes could arouse all Greece, and pour them on the legions of Phillip. But when made commander of a battalion he shrank from facing the battle. No country ever needed the aid of a mighty intellect so much as America at this moment needs the power of this great mind.

HELEN M. GOUGAR.

This remarkable woman lectured on woman suffrage in Wheaton College Chapel last week. She is from Indiana, the only State whose constitution forbids women to practice law, while the Supreme Court at Washington has admitted Belva Lockwood to appear and plead in that august tribunal.

Mrs. Gougar is a natural born logician. She stands forward, begins to speak, and till she sits down, argument flows from her lips interrupted only by the facts which sustain it; and the flow is as steady and clear as the pure white flour from the bolt in a flour-mill. There was not in the whole lecture an attempt at rhetorical flight, only facts and arguments based on them; and the stream of facts, both recent and relevant, seemed endless. No reflecting person can listen to her without being convinced of the force of her argument.

But no change in society has ever been effected unattended by two defects: first, the expectation of greater benefits than are to be realized from the change; and second, some loss of temper and good sense in the struggle to attain it, arising from that "persecution which maketh a wise man mad." To be "poked fun at," for seeking to remove actual grievances, by men whose stupidity makes them incapable of seeing truth, or whose depravity makes them oppose it, often provokes replies which seem to the uninformed to proceed from ill temper. Such persons provoked the most scathing retorts from the gentle and forgiving Cowper, who turns upon them thus:

> "Blest, rather curst, with nerves that never feel;
> Kept snug in caskets of close-hammered steel;
> With mouths made only to grin wide and eat."

Such is the picture Cowper draws of men who ridicule those who grieve at grievances, and adds:

> "But to the soul that ever felt the sting
> Of sorrow, sorrow is a sacred thing."

And no one can hear Mrs. Gougar and not share her indignation of "the dog-petting class of ladies," who resent the wrongs of their poodles more than the wrongs of their own sex which society has left yet unredressed. Her replies to Ingalls of Kansas and Reagan of Texas, are clear, conclusive and crushing.

Mrs. Gougar has the intense earnestness of conviction; and along with her other good qualities she has no love for the lodge or the saloon. Masons instigated the infamous attack upon her some years ago, and she knows some of the virtues of that system from bitter experience.

In short, we advise every one who can do so to hear Mrs. Gougar; and we advise that interesting lady to remember that no removal of social abuses will take men to heaven, or make a heaven on earth; and our struggles against wrongs and abuses are only removing stumbling-blocks which are keeping men from Christ.

HOW GOOD TEMPLARISM WORKS.—Vernon, Wisconsin, is a reform community. The two churches are United and Reformed Presbyterian. It is a thorough prohibition town, with no saloon nearer than Waukesha, seven miles away. Some time ago Frank Sibley attempted the formation of a Good Templar lodge there. Sibley is the well-known Good Templar chief of Nebraska, whose attempt in that State to bind the young Samson of Prohibition in the lap of the Delilah of Good Templarism was promptly thwarted by Rev. E B. Graham of Omaha. Sibley found four persons in Vernon who would join him. Chagrined at his failure, he challenged T. C. Richmond of Madison, the Good Templar leader of Wisconsin, to form a lodge there. He tried and failed. Then a lodge missionary named Clark began to hold temperance meetings at Vernon, and with the aid of a lodge crowd from Waukesha to act as claquers, and by deception and hypocrisy he formed a small lodge. Pastors Faris and Galloway withstood him and in a debate with the latter he was so worsted and his falsehoods so exposed that his followers are discouraged and his work already as good as broken up.

We trust Bro. Galloway will not be too modest to report this case for the Cynosure. It deserves a wide publication for its revelation of the spirit of the Good Templar lodge—meddlesome, intrusive, lying, hypocritical, dividing temperance workers. If it should get a footing in Vernon, the probabilities are that in a short time a saloon would follow.

THE ANTI-MASONIC PRESS OF MORGAN TIMES

In answering a request from Dr. Joseph E. Roy for the number of papers which took part against the lodge in the early days of Anti-masonry, our files of old papers have been ransacked. The list kept growing beyond our expectation, and will be of interest to readers of to-day. It may be imperfect in the occasional mention of the same paper under different names, and is at best incomplete, since only those names can now be obtained which were quoted in the files in our possession. This is the list:

The great meeting of the German Baptists, commonly called Dunkers, was held last week near North Manchester in Wabash county, Indiana. It was their 145th anniversary gathering and was made memorable by at least two important events. The first was the death of the venerable Elder James Quinter, for many years the leader of the denomination. He was offering a public prayer at the close of an afternoon meeting and in the midst of the petition he fell in death, and for him the prayer was ended in praise. His loss is deeply felt through the whole Dunker body. As editor of their paper, the Gospel Messenger, founder of their educational institution at Huntington, Pa., and bishop of their church, his influence has been wide and strong. The second important event was the decision of the church against receiving members of the Grand Army of the Republic lodge into their fellowship. This decision marks the firmness with which this quiet, sturdy people resist the sly attacks of the enemy of Christ and the church. Their example is commended to the study of all denominations.

—The Christian Nation, the excellent New York advocate of National Reform and weekly newsgatherer for the Covenanter brethren, has adopted a pleasing two-column page along with large new type. Its lines are as agreeable to the eye as its sentiments are valuable to the mind and heart.

—Last winter Knoxville College, Tennessee, was closed because of the prevalence of typhoid fever. We are glad to note that President McCulloch has again gathered his scattered faculty and students, and work is resumed in this interesting institution on the battle-scarred hills of Tennessee. The Aurora, the monthly college paper, is one of the most earnest defenders of the principles of the United Presbyterian church.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bishop Milton Wright left his home in Dayton, Ohio, Monday for his annual visitation of the churches of the United Brethren on the Pacific coast.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard kept his appointment with the Michigan brethren at the State Convention at Salem, and then returned to New York State on business for Wheaton College.

—Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Free Methodist, left Chicago a few days ago to attend the World's Missionary Conference in London as representative of the Free Methodist church.

—Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus of the Plymouth Congregational church in this city is, we regret to say, a Freemason. He is perhaps the only pastor of that denomination in the city who belongs to the lodge.

—Rev. C. B. Ebey, for some years pastor of the Free Methodist church on Morgan street in this city and secretary of the mission board of the church, has removed to Pasadena with an invalid wife. Rev. W. W. Kelley, the returned African missionary, will attend to the missionary work for the time being.

—Elder Rufus Smith, who lately journeyed east from Chicago, returned unexpectedly Saturday, called home by the illness of his son. He called at this office about the time Rev. Isaiah Faris of Wisconsin stopped on his way to the Reformed Presbyterian Synod at Allegheny, with Bro. Fake of Cherry Valley, Ill., also journeying eastward.

—The Congregationalists of California are rejoicing over the fact that General O. O. Howard is to remain in command on the Pacific coast, and not to be transferred to Chicago, as was rumored. He is very active in all Christian work and lecturing for various benevolent objects. He is on the Executive Committee of the California Home Missionary Society, and has a large Bible-class in San Francisco.

—Mrs. J. P. Stoddard having conducted a county meeting of the W. C. T. U. last week at Wheaton (of which she was president), started for Washington Friday afternoon by the Baltimore and Ohio road. She expected to reach her destination the next day and begin immediately her part of the work in the N. C. A. building as an help-meet for Bro. Stoddard. She spent some time in Washington a few years since and its people will not be altogether strangers to her.

—Mr. Dwight Needham, who introduced the famous red clover cure for cancer, has given $1,000 each to the American Home Missionary Society, the Illinois Missionary Society, the American Missionary Association and the New West Education Commission. Some years ago, Mr. Needham, says the Advance, realizing the uncertainties of business, determined to make sure of something for missionary work, and hence in spite of all financial pressure, has persistently set apart a portion of his income until at last he has been able to make this handsome donation.

—Daniel B. Turney, of Lincoln, Ill., says the Times of this city, is talked of for candidate for the Vice-Presidency on the Prohibition ticket. If he keeps on saying good things he will get there. He it was who said that "local option was too local and too optional." He has an epigrammatic and apothegmatic way of saying things that fit in very nicely with the spirit of the times, as witness the following remark of the said Turney: "Secrets are unprofitable possessions; if you circulate them you lose them; if you do not circulate them you lose the interest on your investment." Elder Turney was some years since, while residing in Washington and in West Virginia, identified closely with the reform against the lodge.

—At the funeral of the late General A. W. Riley of Rochester, N. Y., after seventy-two years' residence in that city, his pastor paid the following tribute to his memory: "He has stood in four great public relations to the community. First as a business man, marked not only by integrity and uprightness, but, better still, by an unselfishness which did not allow greed for gain to choke out liberality and generous helpfulness toward others. Secondly, as a philanthropist, who in the noblest ways freely, unflinchingly, imperiled his life for others. Thirdly, as a reformer, he was ready with heart, with hand, and with purse to help on every good cause for the benefit of his fellow men. Opposition did not daunt, obliquy did not deter him, and in his work of reform appeared again his intrinsic unselfishness. He did not champion good causes that he might be lifted into public office. Am I wrong in saying that no man in this community has done more to fight the drink demon and to oppose the rum curse than did General Riley? Fourthly, as a Christian he was faithful and true. Though very earnest and resolute in his principles, I never heard from him one bitter word. I never saw him manifest any acerbity of spirit. Until his feet could bear him along our streets no more, he sought regularly the house of God. Well did General Riley's life illustrate the words of the wise man of ancient Scripture, who in Proverbs says of the man who makes wisdom his counselor and guide, that for him, 'In her right hand is length of days, and in her left hand riches and honor.'" —The Christian Nation notices the omission of the acknowledgment of God as revealed in the Christian Scriptures, by an attempt to make up a Prohibition party platform by Walter Thomas Mills, a well-known party speaker. If the Nation will call to mind the fact that Walter Thomas Mills has been publicly making a boast of his lodge connections, the wonder will cease that he ignores Christ.

There may be a difference of opinion as to the propriety of the stand which Mr. Spurgeon took in England, against what he considered the inroads of false doctrine, but there can be no difference as to the spirit in which he expressed himself. He abstained from harshness, bitterness and personalities, and simply did what a sense of duty constrained him to do. We consider it a matter of devout thankfulness that this champion for the faith was able to speak with such firmness and love. And now that the Baptist Union has made it possible, in the same spirit of moderation and love he has met them, and the most enthusiastic event of the late anniversary was the healing of the breach which had been so afflictive to all.

AUGUST SPIES' OLD PAPER.—Never has the ameliorating influence of prosperity been better illustrated than in the evolution of the Arbeiter Zeitung from a blood-thirsty, anarchist sheet to a conservative money-making concern. While its editors and publishers had nothing to lose, it fairly reeked with abuse of society, capital and law. Day after day it preached the subversion of order and the confiscation of property, until in the Haymarket massacre its teachings bore their legitimate fruit, and in the execution of its editor they received their proper punishment.

Now, however, the Arbeiter Zeitung has accumulated a little property. It has become the organ of the conservative, peaceful socialists. It has its subscription list and its advertising patronage, and gradually it has left behind it the rabies of Most and Spies, and has emerged into a decent-spoken and prosperous conservatism. Its divorce from its old follies, furies, and fallacies is not perfect, but the departure is gratifying as showing anew the modifying effect of property-holding on the average anarchist.—Daily News.

TESTIMONIALS AND COMMENDATIONS.

I have read the Cynosure several months and find it truly interesting. It is the best religious paper I ever read.—RICHARD SHEPHERD.

The Cynosure is the best paper I ever read. I want to soon join in your army opposing secret orders.—CHARLES WATSON.

I find the Cynosure very interesting. My daughter reads it every evening when she comes home from school. I shall renew my subscription.—MRS. L. ROSS.

The Cynosure is a good paper. I will renew. I like its principles. Though I belong to a lodge I believe the paper is right.—P. CHAPMAN.

My husband believes in the Cynosure. He takes it on the boat with him every week. I will renew.—MRS. L. RIVERS.

I didn't like the Cynosure at first, but I am satisfied now it is right. My husband is very much interested in it I shall renew.—MRS. C. MCCARTHY.

We are very well pleased with the Cynosure. It is a very interesting paper. We will continue.—MRS. S. ROBINSON.

Although the Cynosure burlesques secret orders, and I belong to one, yet the paper is interesting. I will renew.—MRS. A. CROSS.

I am in sympathy with the Cynosure and believe it is right. Although I have been in a secret order I am not now. I would renew, but circumstances will not permit. —MRS. D. F. BERTRAND.

HASTY WORDS.

Half the trouble of this world would be saved if people would remember that silence is golden—when they are irritated, vexed or annoyed. To feel provoked or exasperated at a trifle, when the nerves are exhausted, is perhaps natural to us in our imperfectly sanctified state. But why put the annoyance into the shape of speech, which once uttered, is remembered; which may burn like a blistering wound, or rankle like a poisoned arrow? If a child be trying, or a friend capricious, or a servant unreasonable, be careful what you say. Do not speak while you feel the impulse of anger, for you will be almost certain to say too much, to say more than your cooler judgment will approve, and to speak in a way that you will regret. Be silent until the "sweet by-and-by," when you shall be calm, rested, and self-controlled. Above all, never write a letter when you are in a mood of irritation. There is an anger which is justifiable, there are resentments which are righteous; it is sometimes a duty to express indignation. But if you consider the matter, the occasions for putting such feelings on record are comparatively few. They come once in a life-time, perhaps, and to many fortunate beings they never come at all. Upon the whole, people—our friends and neighbors—are trying to do the best they can; and in hours of good temper and health life wears a bright and sunny aspect.

Much of the friction which makes the machinery of living move rough and discordant is caused by things too petty to be noticed if we were in our normal condition. The hasty word spoken in petulance may be explained, forgiven and forgotten. But the letter written in an ebulition of wounded feeling is a fact tangible, not to be condoned. There it lies with a certain permanence about it. You have sent it to a friend, who, reading it half a dozen times, will each time find it more cruel and incisive than before. Letters once written and sent away cannot be recalled. You cannot be sure that your friend (or enemy) will burn them. Hidden in bureau drawers or in compartments of desks, folded up in portfolios, locked in boxes, they will, it may be, flash up again in sudden feud and fire, months after you have ceased to think of the folly which incited them, or the other folly which penned them. Never write an angry letter when you are angry.

All heated feelings seek the superlative as an outlet, and superlatives are apt to be dangerous. So long as we cling to the positive in speech, we are pretty safe.

We all need to be cautioned against undue haste in speech, but mothers most of all. It is so easy to misunderstand a child; so easy to grieve a little person who is forbidden to answer back; so easy to leave a picture of yourself in the plastic memory which will be photographed there for the remainder of life, and of which you would in coming days be ashamed.—Mastery.

WHICH IS BEST?

The venerable Leonard Bacon some years since writing to the Church Union, said: "If all organized congregations of worshipers would be content with being simply churches of Christ—nothing more, nothing less—each governing itself under the supremacy of Christ alone, and conceding to every other the same right of self-government, and all performing one toward another, as opportunity may require, the duties of comity and Christian fraternity, that would be sufficient church union. Nor, in my judgment, is any other union of churches possible without trenching on the liberty which is, and ever will be, where the Spirit of the Lord is."

This seems quite in harmony with our Saviour's prayer that his people might all be one. But many persons are not content with such a union as this.

In his "Sketches of the Theological History of New England," Dr. Enoch Pond, discussing the question of denominationalism, says:

"What is necessary to constitute a collection of churches a denomination? In the first place they must have a name known and acknowledged as such.... Then they must be held together by some common specific principles."

This is truly said; the very first step in dividing and separating those for whose unity the Saviour prayed and died, is to get some new name for them to wear. This is to distinguish, separate and divide them and drive away those who will not consent to take upon them unscriptural names and titles. The work is still going on, and probably will go on until the Master comes. What will he then say to those engaged in this work?—Armory.

ARE YOUR CHILDREN SAVED?

A very aged converted Gypsy woman in London used to say to me, "He's my son, Mr. Vanderkiste, though he is sixty years old." Old or young, your children are your children. And are they all converted? Pray on for them until they are. How awful to be the parent of a lost soul! Yet more awful should it prove thus through any neglect or misconduct on your part, in example, or precept, or prayer. Teach by precept continually: "And these words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house." Deut. 6. Teach by pious example also; the one will not do without the other.

A prime minister of England, better known for his politics than for his piety, once said: "Whatever good advice you may give your children, if the parents pursue a bad course, depend upon it the children will follow the example instead of the precept. There are few principles of human nature stronger than that of imitation." There must be no crooked and sly ways, which a godless world regards as cleverness and management. Getting children "on" in life, getting daughters "well married," as the phrases run, are sad hindrances to piety in families. No dust blinds the eyes like gold dust. Parents, be warned! There is no real "getting on," and nothing is really well, that wanders from the circle of true piety.

Gracious Lord, thy Holy Word declares that children are given to be "trained up" for glory. Blessed be thy name for the multitude of pious parents who have seen their dear children brought to the ways of true piety by their precept, their example and their prayers. Grant by thy Spirit to every parent increase of faith, that believing prayer for children may abound more and more, for Christ's sake. Amen.—Rev. R. W. Vanderkiste.

IN EMBRYO.

The egg in the shallow brown nest—
How lifeless, how pale to the eye!
How long it is pressed to the mother's warm breast,
And kept from the shafts of the sky!
Yet listen, my sweet,
Oh, listen, my sweet,
And think on the changes that fall,
For a heart is beginning to tremble and beat
Close under the delicate wall!

A bird is astir in the nest—
The creature of sunshine and day;
How little and weak, with its wide yellow beak,
Its body all naked and gray!
Yet listen, my dear,
Oh, listen, my dear,
And think on the chances that fall,
For the carols of summer are joyful to hear,
And hope is the ruler of all.

As magic is wrought in the nest,
The night is pursued by the morn,
And surely at last from the walls of the past
The life of the future is born.
Then listen, my sweet,
Oh, listen, my sweet,
And think on the changes that fall,
For the heart of the morrow will quicken and beat,
And burst into being for all!

MARY'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT.

Mary was nearing her twelfth birthday. She was asked by her father, "What would you like for a birthday present this year?"

She replied, "Papa, there is only one thing I want, but I am afraid you won't give it to me."

"Probably it may cost too much," he answered. He was dependent on his day's work, and from his limited means could not bestow such a gift on the daughter, whom he dearly loved, as his heart prompted. This she knew, and, with a care beyond her years, had always been considerate of their humble circumstances. She responded to her father's remark about cost, "What I want will cost you nothing. Will you promise to let me have it?"

For a moment he hesitated. He little knew what she desired. He promised, however.

She then said: "Papa, my birthday comes on Sabbath, and I want you to go with me to church on that day. This is all I ask. Won't you do it, papa?"

This novel request surprised him. Scarcely anything could have been asked of him he was more unwilling to do. Some years before three children had been taken from him in one week by a contagious disease. That affliction had embittered his mind against God, and even inclined him to infidelity, if not to atheism. And now to be asked to attend church, and to do it as a particular favor to his child, filled him with strange sensations. How could he do it? It seemed impossible; and yet how could he refuse that daughter who looked so appealingly into his face? He might go once to satisfy her. So he said, but not without some emotion, "Mary, I'll promise you."

She was overjoyed, and kissed him again and again.

"When will it be Sabbath?" It seemed so long away. She thought it would never come. The time never moved so slowly to her, but the day came at last.

Mary and her father were together in God's house. She was indeed a happy girl to have him with her where she feared he might never be found. At the close of the service Mary introduced him to the pastor, who expressed his gratification at his presence and hoped that he would come again. With his eyes filled with tears and a peculiar trembling in his voice, the father said, "I came this morning to please my Mary. I intend to come to-night to please myself."

It was evident that God's Spirit was at work on the man's heart. True to his word, he was there in the evening. It was not long before he, with his wife, was converted, and at Jesus's feet realized the blessings of saving grace. He described his salvation as "Mary's birthday present." Soon after, father, mother, and daughter publicly professed faith in Christ—a suggestive commentary on that Old Testament Scripture, "A little child shall lead them."

Truly, such a birthday present is more precious than rubies. When all other gifts are forgotten it shall shine everlastingly in the crown of her rejoicing. What better presents could Christian children of unconverted parents desire than the conversion of these parents? May God grant to many others Mary's birthday present.—Christian Inquirer.

EARLY EXPERIENCE OF A FAMOUS REFORMER.

In a letter written to the Chicago Lever on the way to Oregon from Chico, Cal., dated April 9, ex-Governor John P. St. John speaks of the old town of Yreka, in the Sierra Nevadas, as follows:

It was here, when I crossed the plains early in the fifties, I first met civilization(such as it was) in California. The mountains over which, in those times, with pick and shovel, I tramped many a day, hunting for the precious metal, are in plain view.

The town, once the booming metropolis of this end of the State, is now, like the old mining camps around it, nearly deserted.

Under the local mining laws, of what was then called the Yerka Camps, any person was entitled to hold as a "surface claim" all ground that they would mark off by digging little trenches, four feet apart, like corn furrows. I went there to "dig for gold," and of course was very anxious to own a claim. Being a "tender foot," as new comers were called, I had no knowledge of mining; but observing one day a beautiful knoll near the mouth of McBride's gulch, about one mile north of Yerka, and it being nicely shaded by several broad-topped oaks, I concluded it would be a delightful spot upon which to locate a mining claim. So with pick and shovel I proceeded to comply with the law, covering with trenches the entire knoll. I then went to work by the day to earn sufficient money to buy tools and enable me to pay at the rate of $200 per thousand feet for lumber necessary to construct sluices, to be used in working my claim. A rich old man named Hawkins owned a ditch which conveyed the water used in working the surface mines in that vicinity. So when I had everything ready to go to work I agreed to pay him $16 per day for water, and with four hired men my mining operations were commenced in earnest, and vigorously prosecuted for a week, when, according to custom, and with expectations of great results, we proceeded "to clean up," as the miners termed it; but when we had got together the proceeds of the week's work, I discovered that it had cleaned me up, having only made enough to pay my hired hands, leaving me without a penny to apply on the water bill. I had never been in debt before without money to pay. So when the old man called for the $96 due him for water I scarcely knew what to say or do. But at last I mustered up courage to tell him the exact situation, and proposed to give him my claim, sluices and tools for the debt, which he promptly accepted; and I at once ceased to be a capitalist and again became a laborer. Mr. Hawkins immediately commenced operating the mine on his own account, and had not worked over two hours when he found a gold nugget worth $1,038, which I, in digging the trenches required to hold the claim, had struck twice with my pick, and the marks were plainly visible. The further development of the mine proved it to be immensely rich; and during the next few weeks many thousands of dollars worth of gold were taken out of a space the surface of which was not more than one hundred feet square.

I was young, sober and industrious, and thought that I deserved success, and could not see the justice of an overruling Providence which seemed to transfer this fortune from a poor boy to an old man, who was already rich.

This incident for a time caused me to almost lose faith in the existence of a God, and stood as a mighty stumbling-block in my way. But it was long ago made clear to me. It taught me the lesson that that which sometimes seems to us to be unjust, harsh and cruel, is only a blessing in disguise. The possession of so large an amount of money then, young and inexperienced as I was, might have led to my ruin. God knew best, and we can always safely trust him.

TEMPERANCE.

COMMON MARTYRS.

"What is your name?" asked the teacher.

"Tommy Brown, ma'am," answered the boy.

He was a pathetic little figure, with a thin face, large hollow eyes, and pale cheeks, that plainly told of insufficient food. He wore a suit of clothes evidently made for some one else. They were patched in places with cloth of different colors. His shoes were old, his hair cut square in the neck in the unpracticed manner that women sometimes cut boys' hair. It was a bitter day, yet he wore no overcoat, and his bare hands were red with the cold.

"How old are you, Tommy?"

"Nine years old, come next April. I've learnt to read at home, and I can cipher a little."

"Well, it is time for you to begin school. Why have you never come before?"

The boy fumbled with a cap in his hands, and did not reply at once. It was a ragged cap with frayed edges, and the original color of the fabric no man could tell.

Presently he said: "I never went to school 'cause —'cause—well, mother takes in washin' an' she couldn't spare me. But Sissy is big enough now to help, an' she minds the baby besides."

It was not quite time for school to begin. All around the teacher and the new scholar stood the boys that belonged in the room. While he was making his confused explanation, some of the boys laughed, and one of them called out: "Miss Brown —Oh, Miss Brown! How much do you charge a dozen for collars and cuffs?" And another said: "You must sleep in the rag-bag at night, by the looks of your clothes." Before the teacher could quiet them, another boy had volunteered the information that the father of the new boy was "old Si Brown, who is always drunk as a fiddler."

The poor child looked around at his tormentors like a hunted thing. Then before the teacher could detain him, with a suppressed cry of misery, he ran out of the room, out of the building, and down the street, and was seen no more.

The teacher went about her duties with a troubled heart. All day long the child's pitiful face haunted her. At night it came to her dreams. She could not rid herself of the memory of it. After a little trouble she found the place where he lived, and two of the W. C. T. U. women went to visit him.

It was a dilapidated house in a street near the river. The family lived in the back part of the house, in a frame addition. The ladies climbed the outside stairs that led up to the room occupied by the Brown family. When they first entered they could scarcely discern objects, the room was so filled with the steam of the soap suds. There were two windows, but a tall brick building shut out the light. It was a gloomy day, too, with gray, lowering clouds that forbade even the memory of sunshine.

A woman stood before a wash-tub. When they entered she wiped her hands on her apron and came forward to meet them. Once she had been pretty. But the color and light had all gone out of her face, leaving only sharpened outlines and haggardness of expression.

She asked them to sit down, in a listless, uninterested manner. Then, taking a chair herself, she said:

"Sissy, give me the baby."

A little girl came forward from a dark corner of the room, carrying a baby that she laid in its mother's lap—a lean and sickly looking baby, with the same hollow eyes that little Tommy had.

"Your baby doesn't look strong," said one of the ladies.

"No, ma'am, she ain't well. I have to work hard, and I expect it affects her," and the woman coughed as she held the child to her breast.

This room was the place where the family ate, slept and lived. There was no carpet on the floor; and an old table, three or four chairs, a broken stove, a bed in one corner, in an opposite corner a trundle-bed—that was all.

"Where is your little boy Tommy?"

"He is there in the trundle-bed," replied the mother.

"Is he sick?"

"Yes'm, and the doctor thinks he ain't going to get well." At this, the mother laid her head on the baby's face, while the tears ran down her thin faded cheeks.

"What is the matter with him?"

"He was never very strong, and he's had to work too hard, carrying water, and helping me to lift the wash-tubs and things like that."

"Is his father dead?"

"No, he ain't dead. He used to be a good workman, and we had a comfortable home. But all he earns now—and that ain't much—goes for drink. If he'd only let me have what little I make over the wash-tub. But half the time he takes that away from me, and then the children go hungry."

She took the child off her shoulder. It was asleep now, and she laid it on her lap.

"Tommy has been crazy to go to school. I never could spare him till this winter. He thought if he could get a little education he'd be able to take care of Sissy and baby and me. He knew he'd never be able to work hard. So I fixed up his clothes as well as I could and so last week he started. I was afraid the boys would laugh at him, but he thought he could stand it if they did. I stood in the door and watched him go. I can't ever forget how the little fellow looked," she continued, the tears streaming down her face. "His patched up clothes, his old shoes, his ragged cap, his poor little anxious look. He turned round to me as he left the yard and said: 'Don't you worry, mother; I ain't going to mind what the boys say.' But he did mind. It wasn't an hour till he was back again. I believe the child's heart was just broke. I thought mine was broke years ago. If it was, it was broke over again that day. I can stand most anything myself, but oh, I can't bear to see my children suffer!" Here she broke down in a fit of convulsive weeping. The little girl came up to her quietly, and stole a thin little arm around her mother's neck. "Don't cry, mother," she whispered, "don't cry."

The woman made an effort to check her tears, and wiped her eyes. As soon as she could speak with any degree of calmness, she continued:

"Poor little Tommy cried all day. I couldn't comfort him. He said it wasn't any use trying to do anything. Folks would only laugh at him for being a drunkard's little boy. I tried to comfort him before my husband came home. I told him his father would be mad if he saw him crying. But it wasn't any use. Seemed like he couldn't stop. His father came and saw him. He wouldn't have done it if he hadn't been drinking. He ain't a bad man when he is sober. I hate to tell it, but he whipped Tommy. And the child fell and struck his head. I suppose he'd a-been sick anyway. But oh, my poor little boy! My sick, suffering child!" she cried, "how can they let men sell a thing that makes the innocent suffer so?"

A little voice spoke from the bed. One of the ladies went to him. There he lay, poor, little, defenseless victim. He lived in a Christian land, in a country that takes great care to pass laws to protect sheep, and diligently legislates over its game. Would that the children were as precious as brutes and birds!

His face was flushed and the hollowed eyes were bright. There was a long, purple mark on his temple. He put up one little, wasted hand to cover it, while he said:

"Father would't have done it if he hadn't been drinking." Then in his queer, piping voice, weak with sickness, he half whispered, "I'm glad I'm going to die. I'm too weak to help mother anyhow. Up in heaven the angels ain't going to call me a drunkard's child, and make fun of me. And maybe if I'm right there where God is I can keep reminding him of mother, and he'll make it easier for her."

He turned his head feebly on his pillow, and then said, in a lower tone: "Some day—they ain't going —to let the saloons—keep open. But I'm afraid—poor father—will be dead—before then." Then he shut his eyes from weariness.

The next morning the sun shone in on the dead face of little Tommy.

He is only one in many. There are hundreds like him in tenement-houses, in slums, and alleys, in town and country. Poor little martyrs, whose tears fall almost unheeded; who are cold and hungry in this Christian land; whose hearts and bodies are bruised with unkindness. And yet "the liquor traffic is a legitimate business and must not be interfered with," so it is said.

Over eighteen hundred years ago it was also said: "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."—Selected.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON XI. Second Quarter.—June 10.

SUBJECT.—Jesus Risen.—Matt. 28: 1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. 1 Cor, 15:20.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Women at the Sepulchre. vs. 1-8. The open tomb and the risen Lord has made Christianity the religion of the sorrowing. "Because I live ye shall live also," are words that arch with a rainbow hope the grave of every believer. The Resurrection has many precious lessons. (1) That what brings joy to Christ's disciples brings only dismay and terror to his enemies. (2) That the believer has no reason to fear even in the face of supernatural events. It is the heathen, Jeremiah tells us, who are dismayed at signs in the heavens. Jer. 10:2. (3) Our Christ is a living Christ. He is not to be found entombed in dead formalisms and traditions of the past. The sepulchre of a barren creed will not hold him, nor of a life which is spiritual deadness. (4) The mission given to all Christians to preach this living Christ, a Christ who goes before us and meets us on every mountain top of higher experience. (5) The special call to consecrated women. Never has the call been so urgent as now; never so nobly responded to. The W. C. T. U. are showing to the world the Christ of Isaiah's vision, "who will not fail nor be discouraged till he have set judgment in the earth, and the isles shall wait for his law,"—the Seed of the woman under whose heel the serpent of the saloon, of social impurity and evil of every nature shall finally be crushed. (6) As the Resurrection is Christianity's central truth, so all false religions try to counterfeit it. In the ancient mysteries the death and resurrection of the sun-god under the names of Osiris, Adonis or Baal was acted out, and the Masonic lodge of to-day by the testimony of its own writers does identically the same thing when it acts out the murder and raising again of Hiram Abiff. St. Paul tells us (1 Cor. 15:13-22) that the doctrine of the Resurrection contains the promise of our own immortality, and this Masonic travesty of it is Satan's way of mocking Christ and deluding men. Odd-fellowship holds out a similar false hope of salvation by assuring them that over their departed, without any reference to moral character "bends a bow bright with immortality." The lodge is a broken cistern that holds no water, while Christianity stands by the wellspring of eternal life, sounding her gracious invitation, "Ho! every one that thirsteth."

2. The meeting with Jesus. vs. 9, 10. Jesus meets the feet swift to do his will which do not stop to wonder or doubt. Slow, laggard, faithless disciples will always miss the heavenly vision. "Go, tell my brethren," etc. What Christian heart can read this message without a throb? "He is not ashamed to call them brethren." But how can one who has received such a title from his Lord, allow himself to be called "brother" by men who may be profane swearers, saloon keepers, atheists? Anything more repugnant to the heart of a true disciple can hardly be conceived than such a union with unbelievers; and from this point of view alone, every Christian ought to see how incompatible is such membership with oath-bound fraternities and membership with Christ.

3. The Falsehood of the Chief Priests. vs. 11-15. The chief priests were the Jesuits of their time. With them the end always justified the means. We see an instance in the counsel of Caiaphas to destroy Jesus, reasoning that it was better for one man to die than a whole nation. But the murder of an innocent man can never be justified, not even if the destruction of a whole people might be thus averted. Nor can any possible good to be gained justify bribery and falsehood. But we have many Jesuit politicians who think it is better that souls and bodies should be murdered by drink than to cut off this source of national revenue by abolishing it altogether. That the soldiers could know what was being done while they slept, or that, knowing that the penalty of sleeping was death, they should all be asleep at once, was absurd; but the credulity which could believe such a story was no worse than that of the present day which rejects Christ and the Resurrection, yet swallows whole all the old wives' fables of spiritualistic mediums.

—It is a curious and interesting fact that over fifty Presbyterian ministers in the United States and Canada were at one time Roman Catholic priests. Quite a number of converted priests are now Methodist ministers and members of the Protestant Episcopal church. In the Baptist ministry also there are converted Roman Catholics.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Methodist General Conference decided last week on an important change in the pastoral term, increasing it from three to five years. Five new bishops were elected, the balloting continuing through several days. The choice was Dr. Vincent of Chautauqua fame, Dr. Fitzgerald, missionary secretary, Drs. Joyce, Goodsell, and J. P. Newman, who went to California to preach the funeral sermon of Senator Stanford's son. Miss Frances E. Willard was nominated to succeed Dr. Buckley as editor of the Central Christian Advocate, but the vote decided that the Dr. should succeed himself.

—The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church opened last Wednesday in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. There were 253 delegates in attendance. On the second day several memorials against the use of tobacco by ministers were presented. Rev. Dr. Meloy of Chicago was elected moderator.

—There has been a great increase of missionary spirit among the students of Union Seminary, Va., largely ascribed to the recent visit of Dr. Houston. Seven of the young men have decided to go as missionaries, and others are considering the subject. An effort is being made to raise enough money to support a minister in the foreign field. The faculty have given $100, the students of Hampden Sidney College $100, and the young men of the seminary are to give the rest.

—The United Presbyterian Seminary at Allegheny has resolved to send out a missionary to India in October next; the choice has fallen on the Rev. J. H. Martin, just graduated. His salary ($1,200) has been pledged for ten years by the seminary and contiguous colleges of the denomination.

—Xenia Theological Seminary has also started a similar movement, and the students and faculty have pledged $330 annually for ten years toward the support of a missionary. They hope to get the balance needed from certain colleges in the connection.

—The United Presbyterian Women's General Missionary Society met lately in Washington, Pa. During the past year this society has contributed to the missionary work $50,000. It proposes now to build a hospital to be in charge of a lady physician in India.

—Dr. Dougan Clark, an eminent minister among the Friends and professor of Greek in Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, has resigned his position in that institution, and has been succeeded by Augustus T. Murray.

—The Augustana Synod of the Scandinavian Evangelical Lutheran church holds its annual session at Galesburg, Ill., June 14 to 27.

—Mr. Sankey goes to England in May for a series of meetings to be held through the country.

—One of the results of Mr. Needham's recent revival work in Springfield, Mass., was such a demand for Bibles as the city had never before known.

—St. George's Episcopal church, New York, does an efficient work in sending poor people to the country and seaside, and Dr. Rainsford's appeal for funds to commence this season's work resulted in an immediate contribution of $16,500.

—The Eleventh World's Conference of Young Men's Christian Asso iations will be held in Stockholm. Arrangements are making for a special party to sail by the City of Berlin, July 21.

—The North Michigan United Brethren Conference adopted strong resolutions at a late meeting against the attempt to deliver the denomination over to the lodge.

—The Central Congregational church, Philadelphia, Rev. Dr. J. R. Danforth, pastor, has recently received 140 to membership.

—The Second United Presbyterian church, Allegheny, Pa., has had a gracious revival, adding 169 to its membership.

—The ragged Sunday-schools in London contain 40,000 scholars and 5,000 teachers.

—Three-fourths of the Bibles shipped from New York to Foreign Mission stations go to Mexico and South America.

—George Muller, known throughout the Christian world for his faith and work, is now eighty-two years old, yet he is hale and hearty and as full of zeal and activity as ever. He has just returned to England after a preaching tour of thirty-seven thousand miles, principally in Australia, China and Japan. Upon his arrival at Bristol he was greeted most warmly by two thousand children. Mr. Wright, his son-in-law, had charge of his orphanage during his absence, and conducted it upon the same plan and principles.

—According to a London paper, the New Testament in Arabic is in demand in the land of Moab. In one day a colporteur sold fifty-four copies—flour being the purchasing power.

—Rev. J. W. Youngson, of the Church of Scotland Mission, Sealkote, Punjab, India, reports 451 baptisms of converted heathen from Jan. 1 to Oct. 1 of last year.

—It is stated that a nephew of the late King Cetewayo, after six years in Sweden in theological and other studies, has gone back to carry on mission work in his own native land.

—A member of one of the struggling Protestant churches of Paris said to a friend: "It is a rule in our church that when one brother is converted, he must go and bring another brother; and when a sister is converted, she must go and bring another sister. That is the way 150 of us have been brought from atheism and popery to simple faith in the Lord Jesus Christ."

—The first Malay convert has been baptized in Singapore, in the person of a woman who was led to Christ by Miss Blackmore, of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. This woman has had a wonderful career. When a child she was taken prisoner, with her family, by cannibals. The father was killed and eaten, but the daughter was subsequently rescued by a trader, whose wife cared for her and brought her up.

—Rev. J. F. Avery, says the Christian Enquirer of New York, feels that there is great cause to thank God respecting the work and outlook at Mariner's Temple. Since January meetings have been held every evening excepting Saturday, and often as many as 200 are present. The Sunday congregations are quite cheering. Two weeks ago an outdoor praise meeting was started on the Temple steps and portico, and last Sunday the street was a mass of people, over 200 attending the service in the church. Often as many as a dozen pledges are taken at the Gospel temperance meetings. Several very gracious and remarkable conversions have recently occurred, and so God is blessing the work in this difficult field.

—President Cleveland and Mrs. Cleveland attended a reception given to the members of the General Presbyterian Assemblies, North and South, at Philadelphia Wednesday. A committee appointed by the Northern assembly, in compliance with the President's request, held a conference with him on the question of schools among the Indians.

—The fiftieth anniversary of the Congregational church at Rockton, Ill., claimed to be the oldest in Northern Illinois, was celebrated Friday.

—The Baptist Year Book, just issued, records a membership of 2,917,315 in the 31,891 churches. During the year 158,373 were added to the membership, and 608 new churches were established. It appears that only 697,081, or less than a third of the aggregate membership, are in what are called the Northern States.

—Dr. Wm. M. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle, has been elected President of the American Missionary Association, to succeed the late ex-Governor Washburn.

—The American Home Missionary Society will hold its sixty-second annual session in Saratoga, June 5–7. Dr. George Leon Walker will preach the annual sermon.

—The late Emperor William of Germany was a liberal subscriber to the funds of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews. The society expended last year $186,720.

—The sad news has reached London that Bishop Parker and the Rev. Joseph Blackburn died on the 26th of March, of sickness in the Unyoro country, to the southeast of the Albert Nyanza. Bishop Parker was the successor of the lamented Bishop Hannington, who was put to death by orders of the King of Uganda. He was the second bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa. He was a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, and was consecrated priest in 1876 and bishop in 1886.

—An American lady in Russia, in a letter to the editor of The Interior, writes in confirmation of the statement we gave some time ago as to the persecution of Lutherans in the Baltic provinces. She says: "Between sixty and seventy Lutheran clergymen have been arrested, and a part of this number have already received sentence of banishment to Siberia, while others are held to bail awaiting trial.... If I had the strength I might tell you tales that would make every American's blood boil with indignation; and these things are not done in a corner, nor in the darkness of the Middle Ages, but in the full light of the nineteenth century and in civilized, enlightened Russia."

LODGE NOTES.

Wm. H. Jordan of San Francisco is Supreme Master Workman of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is Speaker of the California House of Representatives.

Medinah Temple, Masonic Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Chicago, went lately to Grand Rapids, Mich., and conferred degrees for the members of Saladin Temple at the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Michigan. Sheriff Matson of McGarigle fame was one of the number.

The Masonic Board of Relief of Chicago was organized last Thursday night at Apollo Hall, No. 78 Monroe street. Thirty lodges were represented at the organization. Grand Master John C. Smith was elected president, George K. Hostell first vice-president, G. W. Warville second vice-president, W. K. Forsyth treasurer, and Joseph H. Dixon, the ex-detective, secretary.

The body of Robert Martin was cremated at St. Louis last week. He was cremated with Masonic honors, conducted by Polar Star Lodge, No. 79. The ritual was changed to conform with the circumstances and say "the retort" where "the grave" is the common form. Otherwise the services did not differ from those usually performed. Nothing is said about the sprig of "acacia" being offered to the manes of the dead.

The order of the Knights of the Golden Eagle is a secret benevolent institution founded in Baltimore in 1873. Its membership now approaches 40,000. No person can be admitted who is not "a white male of good moral character, a believer in the existence of a Supreme Being, of the Christian faith, free from any mental or bodily infirmity, competent to support himself and family and having sufficient education to sign his own application for membership."

Although not yet twenty years old the membership of the A. O. U. W. in the United States and Canada is now about 25,000. New York leads in point of strength, with Illinois, Missouri, California, and Pennsylvania following in the order named. The disbursements on account of beneficiaries averages now $10,000 for every day in the year, or $3 650,000 per annum. Lodge expenses, donations, sick benefits, etc., will increase the annual outlay of the order to more than $4,500,000. John Jordan Upchurch was the founder of the order.

The Grand Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen in Iowa has made some changes. The Grand Master Workman will hereafter appoint the District Grand Masters, who will be paid salaries and mileage. Notices will hereafter be printed by the Grand Lodge, and a member may be in arrears four instead of three months without forfeiting his right to be reinstated without re-examination. The Committee on Revision recommended that the Grand Lodge ritual be abandoned for something more modern. It was left optional with subordinate lodges to attend funerals in regalia, and subordinate lodges may compel attendance of members or not, as they see fit.

EXCURSION RATES.

A very complete list of tourist round-trip rates and routes to western points for 1888, has just been issued for free distribution by C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass Agent, St. P. M. & M. Ry., St. Paul, Minn.

SPIKE THEIR GUNS.

A few dollars expended in purchasing tracts and scattering them about through the community will perhaps do more to spike the guns of noisy secretists than anything else that could be suggested. Men have heard the lodges praised so often and so boldly, that they have come to believe that they are what they profess to be. It is high time that the war is carried into Africa itself. This is the work which the N. C. A. has in view, and would be glad to push forward in every quarter of the land. Who will help to do it?

TO MINISTERS OF THE GOSPEL IN THE SOUTH.

BRETHREN:—Not more than one in twenty of the Southern ministers has probably ever heard of the National Christian Association and its work.

organ of the Association, will be sent you for a few months without cost to you, providing you ask for it by letter, and give your name, postoffice, county and State plainly. It is hoped that at the end of a few months you will subscribe for the Cynosure, but if you do not, the paper will stop. It is not sent, however, to solicit your subscription, more than to place the work of the National Christian Association before you, from week to week, for a few months, for to know is to be interested.

Will the ministers of the South who are now receiving the Cynosure, mark the above item and send their paper to some pastor whom they have reason to believe has never had the Cynosure.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from May 21 to 26 inclusive:

Rev M L Berger, Rev R B Gardner, J L Glasgow, G Marcy, Mrs M Rife, S Avery, J Phillips, W Wilson, S T Osgood, J Motter, J H Crall, J R Sharp, Rev W F Davis, E R Atwood, Miss J Stitt, G W Waterbury, J C Telford, T Prall, J A Loggan, W H Layton.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.
Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People
One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of George W. Clark,
The Minstrel of Reform:
A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?
Get this little work and use it for God an home and country. Forty pages.

The Master's Carpet.
BY
E. Ronayne.
Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.
Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.
Freemasonry at a Glance,

IN BRIEF.

"I do not want to destroy all the capitalists," said a French Anarchist the other day, "for if there were no capitalists we Anarchists and Communists could get no work to do, for we would have nobody to denounce."

In the saying, "He'll never set the Thames on fire," the river is commonly supposed to be meant. The original proverb referred to a "temse," a miller's sieve with wooden rim, which slid back and forth in a wooden frame. An energetic man sometimes set the temse on fire by friction—a lazy man, never.

A stick of timber seventy-five feet long and thirty-one inches through, and destined for the Panama Canal, was recently loaded on three flat railroad cars at Youngstown, Ohio. There is not much difficulty in transporting such timbers if the curves of the railroad are not very short.

It is said that the big cattle ranches of the far West and Southwest are breaking up. A year ago the Niobrara Land and Cattle Company, which has become bankrupt, refused $1,000,000 for its property. Instead of the big companies swallowing the little ones, it is thought that the tendency is toward the breaking up of the big ranches into smaller ones.

Miss Alice C. Fletcher, whom the President has appointed as agent to allot lands in severalty, under the Dawes bill, to the Winnebago Indians in Nebraska, is thoroughly competent for her share of the work, and has the confidence and love of the Indians. She drafted the bill which permitted the Omahas to take lands in severalty, and supervised the work of allotment, though the task nearly cost her life and left her a cripple.

Mr. Hartley, of Taylor, Ga., went into his stable the other day to see if his horse had been fed, carrying a large pocket book in his hand. Finding that the horse had not been fed he laid his pocket book in one of the feed troughs and went to call the stable boy. When he got to the store he missed his pocket book and went back to look for it. He discovered that the horse had entered the stable and devoured the money, nearly $2,000, leaving only $11 and a few papers untouched.

A pupil in one of the public schools of this city complied recently in the following manner with a request to write a composition on the subject of a physiological lecture to which the school had just listened: "The human body is made up of the head, thorax and the abdomen. The head contains the brains, when there is any. The thorax contains the heart and the lungs. The abdomen contains the bowels, of which there are five, A, E, I, O, U, and sometimes W and Y."—Philadelphia Item.

It is estimated that the amount of petroleum produced in Pennsylvania since Drake's well was drilled in 1859 to the year 1887 was 330,000,000 barrels of forty-two gallons each. This amount of oil would be sufficient to make a good-sized river or lake if collected in one body. It would make a stream 10 feet deep, 100 feet wide and about 350 miles long, or a lake or rectangular pond about three miles long, two miles wide and ten feet deep. Still the supply is not exhausted.

A monkey exhibited in a museum established at Tacubaya, Mexico, was condemned to be shot under judicial sentence for having bitten a man and caused his death. The family of the deceased brought complaint before the Judge, who instituted criminal proceedings against the monkey. The manager of the museum succeeded in obtaining a change of the sentence to imprisonment for life. The monkey is now behind the bars of an iron cage at the museum serving his imprisonment.

London papers call attention to the extreme and growing pauperism of the East End Jews. The total number of Jews in the Metropolis is astonishingly small, being estimated at 46,000. Of these no fewer than 14,350 received aid last year. Figures which are accepted by the Jews themselves as authoritative show that last year every third Jew in London was actually in receipt of poor relief, every second Jew belonged to the regular pauper class, and every second Jewish funeral which took place in the metropolitan area was a pauper funeral.

An obelisk was recently erected in Oakwood cemetery, Troy, which can be seen for many miles up and down the Hudson. It is a granite shaft made out of the solid rock of an island off the coast of Maine. The obelisk was towed a distance of 500 miles, whence it was moved on rollers for a distance of two miles. The obelisk is sixty feet long and weighs 100 tons. Owing to novel methods of engineering used in its transportation and erection the entire cost of these two items did not exceed $6,000. The contract price of the obelisk was $50,000, which included its erection.

R. W. Cameron & Co., of New York, have been authorized by the government of New South Wales, of which they are the agents, to offer in behalf of that government a reward of $125,000 for any method or process of exterminating the rabbits, which have become a pest throughout Australia and New Zealand. In the year 1864 a few English rabbits were introduced into New Zealand as family pets and were finally placed in a small warren near the Botanical Garden at Dunedin. In some unaccountable way these rabbits have multiplied in numbers to such an extent as to become public nuisances, and have also increased in size and destroy not only the vegetables, but even the grass to such an extent that the sheep pasturage is seriously affected. The great size of the reward now offered is proof of the urgency of the case, and the fact that the government offers this reward is evidence of its confidence in American ingenuity and cleverness.

"Never morning wore to evening but some heart did break," says Tennyson; and the part that ill-health often plays in heart-wreck is too great for computation. Uterine disorders especially becloud the spirits and sap the springs of vitality and nervous force. For these distressing diseases, functional irregularities, unnatural discharges, constant pains, weak back, lassitude, dullness, sinking sensations, ill temper and all weaknesses and derangements peculiar to females, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a perfect specific. Sold by druggists.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is unequaled for restoring gray hair to its natural color, promoting growth, and producing new hair on bald heads.

GO WEST.

No portion of the United States to-day offers as many opportunities for making money as can be found at Great Falls, Mont., and on the reservation just opened, in business, mining, stock-raising or farming. Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 90 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Docshurg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body in Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian Religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation, as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Prest Blanchard, the addresses of Prest H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages: cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the InITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Freemasonry Contrary to the ChrisTIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on MaSONRY. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret SOCIETIES. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Patriarcha Militant Illustrated. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

General Sheridan is suffering from disease of the heart and all hope of his recovery is abandoned. The disease showed its dangerous character last week, and has progressed rapidly and unexpectedly.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations has completed the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. It has made a net reduction of $226.000,making the total appropriation $8,172,000 in round numbers.

CHICAGO.

President Dysart, Secretary Mills, and fourteen other members of the State Board of Agriculture met at the Sherman House to consider the enlargement of the live-stock show into a horse show, a poultry show, a dog show, and every other kind of a show interesting to breeders and feeders of domestic animals.

The workingmen of Chicago are to have a hall of their own. They are about to erect a building at the corner of Monroe and Peoria streets, a block from the Cynosure office, which is expected to become the meeting place of all the local labor organizations.

COUNTRY.

Two highway robbers confined in jail at Monticello Thursday evening attacked Sheriff Henderson with an iron bar when he came to lock them in their cells,broke his skull and one arm,perhaps fatally injuring him, and with Edward Chamberlain, the murderer of Ida Wittenberg,escaped. He was afterward captured and troops had to be called out to save him from lynchers.

In Pickens county, Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory,non-resideats are opposing the collection of the tax on stock,and have organized and armed themselves with Winchesters. The militia is unable to cope with them, and the aid of the United States will be invoked by the tribal authorities. General warfare is feared.

At the Illinois State Democratic Convention Wednesday John M. Palmer was nominated for Governor, A. J. Bell for Lieutenant Governor. Palmer is ex-Governor and Bell is a labor agitator.

At Elgin, Ill., Wednesday, Mrs.Charles Meyer and her child,whom she was trying to save, were killed by a freight train

At 3 o'clock Wednesday morning a freight train on the Rock Island Railroad went through a bridge near Randolph Point,Mo.,crashing into a ravine twenty-five feet deep. A short time after a freight on the Hannibal and St. Joseph went through a bridge which adjoined the Rock Island, and which had been weakened by the first wreck. A brakeman, an engineer and two tramps were killed, a fireman fatally injured and two other train men badly hurt.

A cyclone swept over Brownton,Texas, Tuesday. The Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches were demolished, eight dwellings destroyed, one carried across a railroad track and crushed, killing Amanda Willis (colored), who took refuge in it. Other persons were fatally injured, among them the Sheriff and County Recorder. The track of the storm was 300 yards wide, and it was swept clear of crops, fences, barns, outhouses and trees. A terrible rain, hail and lightning storm followed.

The question of woman suffrage in Washington Territory came up Friday before Judge Nash at Spokane Falls on a test case. The Judge delivered a lengthy opinion, in which he decided that the act of the Legislature extending the franchise to women is unconstitutional.

At Cincinnati, Friday, in the case against saloon-keeper Andrew Wetzel,for keeping open on Sunday,several witnesses testified for the prosecution. But notwithstanding that no testimony was presented in Wetzel's behalf the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

Reports received early last week at Quincy Ill ,record the drowning of Samuel Moore by the floods in the Indian Grave levee district and of two children in the Sny district. Two families living in the Sny district are unaccounted for and no trace of them can be found. It is probable that many fatalities will be recorded when all the facts regarding the flood are fully known. Much sickness prevails among the destitute people from the inundated districts, but the relief committees of Quincy are rendering every possible assistance to those in distress. The authorities are appealing for funds to relieve the sufferers.

Governor Martin of Kansas Tuesday pardoned Charles B. Rotrock, under life sentence for killing his wife while under the influence of liquor, attaching to the pardon a condition unheard of before in this State, that Rotrock forever abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors. If Rotrock should violate the condition he could be reimprisoned on an order from the Governor.

Heavy storms of rain, hail and wind visited large sections of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio last Sabbath, doing great damage in some localities. At Elgin the windows of churches, hotels and the watch factory were riddled.

FOREIGN.

The Emperor Frederick is still improving. He was fatigued by his attendance at the wedding of his son Henry Thursday, but is expected to go to Potsdam this week,and at the end of July to Hamburg.

Several of the wealthiest merchants of Moscow have been convicted of adulterating tea. One of them was deprived of his civil rights and banished to Siberia for life. The others convicted were sentenced to different terms of imprisonment. The adulteration of tea is being carried on to a great extent in Russia.

Dr Schweinfurth writes from Brussels that there is no reason to be uneasy about Stanley's fate. The government of the Congo State has received advices that Dr. Mangold, of Kielis, is about to start in search of Stanley.

Advices from Tunis say that no rain has fallen in that state for the last seven months, and that the Arabs are making a futile search for pasturage and water They are bringing camels,oxen and horses to the city and selling them for the merest song.

The Pope has issued an encyclical of twenty-seven pages dealing with the slavery question. After referring to the teachings of the Bible, he inculcates the abandonment of slave dealing in Egypt, the Soudan and Zanzibar, and reiterates his condemnation of the practice. He demands protection for missionaries in Africa,and eloquently refers to the labors of Peter Claver. In conclusion he praises Dom Pedro for abolishing slavery in Brazil.

NEWS OF THE WEEK..... 16

The election of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse as a member of the County Board of Education, in this city last week is an unmistakable sign of progress. Mrs. Carse is one of the most devoted of our gospel temperance workers. As president of the local W. C. T. U. she has carried forward varions missionary enterprises with great success, and her great effort to build a Temperance Temple worth several hundred thousand dollars is fairly and hopefully under way. She is a capable, worthy and pious woman and the County Board did themselves an honor by the selection.

The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, just met in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, has aroused the ire of the editors again, out of all proportion to its numbers. In declaring for the headship of Christ over the nation, and against the lodge and other evils, the Covenanter brethren are assailed by some as fanatics and by others with ridicule at the insignificance of their numbers. But something about this small body creates alarm, yet there is nothing formidable about them but the truth which they hold and can defend. But our editors should not fear the truth. Let them embrace it rather and and be free—especially from lodge vows.

The law providing for license courts in Pennsylvania works a temporary advantage for the temperance cause. Last Thursday there were 6,000 saloons in Philadelphia; next day only 1,340 were open. The license court had like a new broom swept clean the list of disreputable places as established by the police records. Now if the city of Brotherly Love will keep on in this line, in a year or two the license court will prove a prohibition court, and the old town of Penn will doubly deserve its name. In Chicago we have no tradition to help us in the liquor war. The saloons make laws for the saloons in the Council. Mayor Roche has vetoed the emasculated 200-feet ordinance, but at the same time he asked for the resignation of Mr. Onahan, City Collector, through whose efforts largely the present agitation was begun.

The Democratic National Convention is meeting in St. Louis as we go to press. President Cleveland's last message has made their task comparatively easy. No candidate is mentioned to contest the leading place with him, and the tariff will not be this year so vexatious a matter as four years ago. The sole contest is for the candidate for Vice President. Governor Gray of Indiana has been one of the first names for the place, but at last reports old Senator Thurman of Ohio is leading the race, and but one or two ballots will be needed to settle the question. The saloons expect an endorsement, although they were reluctantly compelled by law to close in the face of their visitors last Sabbath.

Carlton College at Northfield, Minnesota, has always been on the list as refusing to allow college secret societies among its students. There seems, however, to have been for years an organization of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity clandestinely supported by the students contrary to the rule of the college, to which they outwardly professed to conform. A few days since, whether conscience-smitten for the hypocritical position into which their experiment had brought them, or for some other reason, they applied to the faculty for recognition as a legitimate society. They were met with a firm refusal. The faculty maintained its rule and answered that secret societies could not be allowed at Carlton. The foolish young men were yet so besotted and bewitched by secretism that like the Mason who gives up church rather than lodge, they preferred, with one exception, to leave the institution and go elsewhere. Carlton will be much the gainer by this purgation. Young men of so little moral conviction would not probably add to the reputation of the college.

There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,

Scientists in every year of drought, have attempted to explain the cause of unusual weather. Deforestation, they say, diminishes rainfall. Tile-draining dries the surface, and the dry surface repels rain-clouds. Or, the weather, like circulating decimals, brings the same sort of a year, cold, wet, or dry, once in so long. An extraordinary hail-storm, cyclone, bursting out of volcanoes, etc., on the contrary, provoke prophecy that the end of time is at hand.

Eighty odd years ago Jefferson sent Lewis and Clark to explore the Northwest wilderness, and, in their book of travels, they record a hailstorm which, at a portage, "knocked down one of their men three times, and the whole party were bleeding freely." Last year was dry, and the scientists predicted general drought and desolation. This year, rainstorms are heavy and frequent, and large portions of the South are deluged and people homeless.

The prophets Joel and Amos, and indeed the whole Bible, speak of these phenomena as under the immediate providence of God.

Reports from New York correspondents in which we placed great confidence informed our readers years ago that the late Roscoe Conkling was a Knight Templar Mason. He has since been thus spoken of in these columns. But mention was made of the absence of Masonic ceremony at his funeral, and we are glad to now be able to say that the report was a mistake, and remove the stain of this report from Mr. Conkling's memory. A relative, who is a New York alderman, is reported by the press as saying that the ex-Senator was not a Mason nor a member of any other secret organization. His father, Alfred Conkling, was a public prosecutor in Montgomery county, New York, in the Morgan times, and while prosecuting a murder case the accused man threw him a Masonic sign of distress. Mr. Conkling was so disgusted that he left the Masonic lodge of which he was then a member, and, like the old missionary, Scudder, so effectually instructed his sons and sons' sons that "since that day no Conkling has ever joined the order."

Mr. Blaine, whose public carecr has been as eminent as Mr. Conkling's, also succeeded in maintaining his place among his fellow citizens without the false support of the lodge. The experience of these two leading citizens of our country gives the lie to the Masonic boast (or threat) that if a man would succeed in public life he must join their order. There is another view of this case in which we cannot give these gentlemen so much honor. Both, at times, were reported to the public as affiliating with the Knight Templar lodge, and thus their influence was used to promote the most despotic and un-American of organizations. Had they been more true to the principles taught them in youth, their convictions would have been understood and they would not for years have been placed in a false light before their fellow-citizens. It is well that our public men remember this, and especially pastors who are believed to be opposed on Christian principles to the un-Christian lodges, who yet are prevailed upon to preach memorial or annual sermons for these orders, and do not dare to speak freely in the name of Christ against the great evil which these orders cherish.

INFIDEL PERVERSIONS OF FACT AND HISTORY.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

A good cause can always be defended upon rational grounds, and by fair argument. A bad cause often necessitates false reasoning and unfair treatment in its defense. This truth is plainly visible in the conflict between Christianity and infidelity. Christianity, conscious of its doctrinal and ethical integrity, has nothing to fear from fair discussion; and it aims to meet the doubts and objections of candid skeptics with honest, straight-forward, convincing arguments. Infidelity, knowing its weakness, resorts to dishonest means in discussion; and its attacks consist mainly of groundless objections, spurious arguments, senseless cavils, shallow subterfuges, and contemptible pettifogger's tricks.

No other class of persons on earth, perhaps, are so indifferent to truth, and so unmindful of the laws of debate, as these doughty champions of unbelief. Their extreme ignorance, their want of candor, their gross misrepresentations of Christianity, their bold and reckless assertions and denials, and their supreme insensibility to the force of argument—all evince the inherent weakness of their cause.

My purpose is to notice a few of the most glaring perversions of fact and history of which modern infidel writers and lecturers have been guilty. I shall endeavor to show the falsity of some of their oft-repeated assertions, and the unfairness of the means they employ to disseminate their views. This will be proof of the moral imbecility of those who resort to such trickery for the sake of infidel propagandism.

THE COUNCIL OF NICE AND THE CANON OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

I shall first notice, as a specimen of these infidel humbugs, their account of the origin of the New Testament. They tell us that the canon of the New Testament Scriptures was defined and settled by the Council of Nice, in the year A. D. 325. They assert that up to that time there was an immense number of so-called Gospels, Acts, Epistles and Revelations; and that the Council, by some vote, or trick, or jugglery, separated the spurious writings from the genuine. This story is often found in infidel books, papers, pamphlets and tracts, and is continually harped upon and reiterated by their lecturers. It is, indeed, a favorite "sugar-stick" with them. I simply state that the story is totally false.

The first general assembly of Christian bishops from all parts of the world was this one, held at Nice, one of the principal cities of Bythinia. There were three hundred and eighteen of these bishops in attendance, beside a large number of subordinate ecclesiastics. They continued in session sixty-seven days, or from the 19th of June to the 25th of August, in the year of our Lord 325. The attention of the Council was given almost exclusively to the discussion of the Arian heresy. The question as to the inspiration or authenticity of the New Testament never came before them for consideration at all. The truth is, the canon of the Scriptures had been clearly defined, and very generally received, just as we now have it, long before the Council of Nice was ever thought of. And yet infidels continue to repeat this impudent falsehood, and to taunt Christians with their credulity in believing the Bible on such flimsy evidence..

THE EMPEROR CONSTANTINE.

Infidel writers are very fond of referring to Constantine, the Roman Emperor who reigned in the early part of the fourth century, and who patronized and befriended Christianity. They expatiate upon certain wicked and cruel deeds which he committed during his reign; and they tell us that these were done by a Christian Emperor in the name of religion. The facts in the case are these: Constantine was the son of a good Christian mother, and friendly to the religion so beautifully exemplified in her life, but not himself a real Christian, at the time of the events referred to. He assented to the truth of the Gospel intellectually, protected Christians in their religious worship, and did much to facilitate the progress of the new religion. Yet it appears that he had never been born of the Spirit, or accepted Christ as his personal Saviour. It was not until he was upon his death-bed that he truly repented, fully surrendered his heart, and realized pardon and acceptance with God. It was then that he assembled all the bishops of the neighboring churches in his palace, near the city of Nicomedia, and, with as much publicity as could be exercised without ostentation, confessed his Saviour before men, received the rite of baptism, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. From this time until his death, which occurred soon after, he lived a sincere and devoted follower of our Lord Jesus Christ. Let it be remembered, then, that it was before his conversion that he committed those errors and follies which marred the beauty of his reign. After that event, until his death, he conformed strictly to the requirements of the divine law.

THE CASE OF GALILEO.

It is asserted by these doughty champions of unbelief that Christianity has been a foe to the progress of science, and has persecuted those who have ventured to teach scientific truth contrary to the supposed teachings of the Bible. As an example of this, they refer to the case of Galileo, the great Italian astronomer, (1564–1642) who had some trouble with the ecclesiastics of his day on account of his alleged heretical teachings on scientific subjects. They tell us that he was frowned upon, denounced, and proscribed, because he taught that the sun was the center of the solar system, and that the earth moved, contrary to what was then erroneously understood to be the teachings of the Scriptures on the subject; and that he was compelled to abjure the Copernican theory, in order to save his life. I will here state the truth of the matter as recorded in the pages of history.

Galileo was a man of extraordinary genius, and far in advance of the age in which he lived. His grand discoveries and brilliant achievements excited the hatred of his scientific opponents. They made use of the bigotry of churchmen to compel his humiliating retraction. The first time he appeared before the Sacred College at Rome he was acquitted and allowed to return home, after promising not to teach the condemned doctrine any more. Some years afterward he published a book which caused him to be again arraigned, tried, and this time sentenced to incarceration in a dungeon. This sentence, however, was never executed. It was never ratified by the Pope. Galileo suffered no personal pains and penalties. He was himself a Christian believer; and his greatest enemies and persecutors were scientific opponents, and not religious bigots.

CALVIN AND SERVETUS.

Another favorite hobby with these infidel falsifiers of history is the burning of Michael Servetus, at Geneva, in 1553, for blasphemy and heresy. They assert that John Calvin, the great Presbyterian reformer, was the cause of this being done. Here, again, they blunder, as usual. Calvin did not burn Servetus; neither did he consent to his burning by others. The authority that pronounced the sentence upon Servetus was vested in the Senate of Geneva. Servetus left Vienna, in France, under sentence of death for blasphemy. Calvin warned him not to come to Geneva, and refused to pledge himself for his safety in case he should come. (See Calvin to Farel, Feb. 12, 1546.) Disregarding this advice, Servetus went to Geneva, was arrested under a charge of blasphemy, tried, convicted, and sentenced to be burned. Calvin, it is true, appeared against him as prosecuting attorney; but this made him no more responsible for his death than any other prosecuting attorney is responsible for the death of a criminal executed according to law. Calvin himself protested against the burning of Servetus as an "atrocity," and did his best to have the penalty mitigated to some quicker and less painful death. (Calvin to Farel, Aug. 20, 1553) It is true that the burning of Servetus cannot be justified, but must be condemned as wrong. It must be remembered, however, that at that time Christian theologians had not learned the lesson of religious toleration. They believed in punishing incorrigible heretics with death. Servetus himself cherished the same belief. Public opinion sanctioned it. So that Calvin's part in the Servetus affair was only in keeping with the spirit of the age, and should be judged in the light of his surroundings.

INFIDELS AND THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

In a little tract printed by the leading infidel publishing house in the United States, we find the statement that "Infidels gave to mankind the sublime Declaration of American Independence." This oft-repeated assertion is also without foundation in fact. The heroes and patriots who were chiefly instrumental in giving to the world that immortal document were not infidels, but very generally fervent Christians. Many of them were zealous advocates and defenders of Christianity; and a number of them were ministers of the Gospel. The Revolutionary War, by which our independence was established, was carried on and successfully terminated chiefly by men who believed in God and revered his Word.

Many other falsehoods and misrepresentations of like nature might be noticed, but these will suffice. They show the utter unreliability of the teachers of infidelity, and the blind credulity of their ignorant dupes. They seem to rely implicitly upon the most absurd and unreasonable statements by skeptical writers against Christianity. They make wild and reckless assertions, often basing them upon second-hand quotations from unknown persons. Sometimes they do not even give the correct titles of the books from which they profess to copy. They frequently make themselves ridiculous by repeating exploded nonsense, and by attempting to discuss things they know nothing about. The truth requires no such defense; Christianity can be defended by fair argument, and upon rational grounds.

CAN A JEW BE A FREEMASON?

Philo Judaeus, who is spoken of by Josephus as one of "the most eminent of his contemporary countrymen," was a philosopher, born at Alexandria about the time of the birth of Christ. He was a man of vast learning, a complete master of the literature of his nation, an advocate for the Jews at Rome, and an author whose numerous works are regarded as among the best examples of philosophical reasoning of ancient time. The following extract, selected by B. B. Blachly, is from Philo's "Treatise on those who offer sacrifice," as found in the translation of his works by C. D. Young, B. A., Vol. 3, p. 242, section XII. It emphatically condemns, on the authority of Moses, the great Lawgiver of the Jews, any participation in such initiations or other secret ceremonies as are practiced in secret lodges. This judgment is the more wonderful when we remember that nearly all Jews in America are Freemasons. Philo says:

"In addition to this the Lawgiver [Moses] also entirely removes out of his sacred code of laws all ordinances respecting initiations and mysteries, and all such trickery and buffoonery; not chosing that men who are brought up in such a constitution as that which he was giving should be busied about such matters, and, placing their dependence on mystic enchantments, should be led to neglect the truth, and to pursue those objects which have very naturally received night and darkness for their portion, passing over the things which are worthy of light and of day.

"Let no one, therefore, of the disciples or followers of Moses either be initiated himself into any mysterious rites of worship, or initiate any one else; for both the act of learning and that of teaching such initiations is an impiety of no slight order.

"For if these things are virtuous, and honorable, and profitable, why do ye, O ye men who are initiated, shut yourself up in dense darkness, and limit your benefits to just three or four men, when you might bring down the advantages which you have to bestow into the middle of the market place, and benefit all men; so that everyone might without hindrance partake of a better and more fortunate life? For envy is never found in conjunction with virtue. Let men who do injurious things be put to shame, and seek hiding-places and recesses in the earth, and deep darkness; hide themselves, concealing their lawless iniquity from sight, so that no one may behold it. But to those who do such things as are for the common advantage, let there be freedom of speech, and let them go by day through the middle of the market place where they will meet with the most numerous crowds, to display their own manner of life in the pure sun, and to do good to the assembled multitudes by means of the principal of the outward senses, given them to see those things the sight of which is most delightful and most impressive, and hearing and feasting upon salutary speeches which are accustomed to delight the minds even of those men who are not utterly illiterate.

"Do you not see see that Nature has concealed none of those works which are deservedly celebrated and honorable, but has exhibited openly the stars and the whole of heaven, so as to cause the sight pleasure, and to excite a desire for philosophy; and she also displays her seas, and fountains, and rivers, and the excellencies of the atmosphere, and the beautiful adaptation of the winds to the various seasons of the year, and of plants, and of animals and, moreover, the innumerable species of fruits, for the use and enjoyment of men? Would it not have been right, then, for you, following her example and design, to give to those who are worthy of it all things that are necessary for their advantage? But now it very often happens that no good men at all are initiated by them, but that sometimes robbers, and wreckers, and companies of debauched and polluted women are, when they have given money enough to those who initiate them, and who reveal to them the mysteries which they call sacred. But let all such men be driven away and expelled from the city, and denied all share in that constitution, in which honor and truth are reverenced for their own sake. And this is enough to say on this subject."

IS FREEMASONRY SUN-WORSHIP?

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Can it be possible that in the nineteenth century, under the full blaze of Gospel light and in the United States of America, sun-worship is still practiced? Let eminent Masons answer. "The number twelve was celebrated as a mystical number in the ancient systems of sun-worship, of which it has already been said that Masonry is a philosophical development."—Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, page 100.

Masonry, then, is a development of ancient sun-worship, not something like sun-worship. "Grand High Priest" Pierson said: "It is evident that the sun, either as an object of worship or of symbolism, has always formed an important part of both the mysteries and the system of Freemsonry."—Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, page 87.

Robert Morris, perhaps the most noted Masonic writer and teacher living, says: "The Worshipful Master himself is a representative of the sun."—Morris's Dictionary of Freemasonry, page 296. Not of something like the sun, but "a representative of the sun." He is a "Worshipful Master," and that word "worshipful" cannot be spoken without carrying with it the idea of worship. The letter G over his head in the east, with the rays of the sun radiating therefrom, and the emblem of the sun worn by the "Master," all point to the sun-god of Masonry. Remember, Masons do not worship the "Master," but the sun that he represents. Mackey says: "The Master and Wardens are symbols of the sun—the lodge, of the universe or the world; the point, also, is the same sun, and the surrounding circle of the universe; while the two parallel lines really point, not to two saints, but to the two northern and southern limits of the sun's course."—Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, page 63.

Every Saint John's day celebration is, in fact, a sun-worshiping occasion. The three principal officers are the Masonic trinity. "The emblematical foundations or supports of a Masonic lodge are the three pillars, denominated Wisdom, Strength and Beauty." "In the ancient mysteries these three pillars represented the great emblematical Triad of Deity, as with us they refer to the three principal officers of the lodge." "The corresponding pillars of the Hindu mysteries were also known by the names of Wisdom, Strength and Beauty, and were placed east, west and south, crowned with three human heads. They were jointly referred to the Creator, who was said to have planned the great work of his infinite wisdom, executed it by his strength, and to have adorned it with all its beauty and usefulness for the benefit of man. In these mysteries Brahma, Vishnu and Siva were considered as a Triune God, distinguished by the significant appellation, Tri-murti, or any shape or appearance assumed by a celestial being. Brahma was said to be the Creator, Vishnu the preserver, and Siva the judge or destroyer. In the east, as the pillar of wisdom, this deity was called Brahma; in the west, as the pillar of strength, Vishnu; in the South, as the pillar of beauty, Siva; and, hence, in the Indian initiations the representative of Brahma was seated in the east, that of Vishnu in the west, and that of Siva in the south. A very remarkable coincidence with the practice of ancient Freemasonry."—Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, pages 55 and 56.

And this is practiced also by modern Freemasonry, as every Entered Apprentice knows who ever heard the lodge regularly opened or closed on that degree. Everything about the lodge refers to sun-worship, and is a reproduction of it. "The three lights, like the three principal officers and the three principal supports, refer, undoubtedly, to the three stations of the sun—its rising in the east, its meridian in the south, and its setting in the west—and the symbolism of the lodge, as typical of the world, continues to be preserved."—Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, page 51.

THE BETTER PATRIOTISM.

Who serves his country best?
Not he who, for a brief and stormy space,
Leads forth her armies to the fierce affray.
Short is the time of turmoil and unrest,
Long years of peace succeed it and replace;
There is a better way.

Who serves his country best?
Not he who guides her senates in debate,
And makes the laws which are her prop and stay;
Not he who wears the poet's purple vest,
And sings her songs of love and grief and fate;
There is a better way.

He serves his country best,
Who joins the tide that lifts her nobly on;
For speech has myriad tongues for every day,
And song but one; and law within the breast
Is stronger than the graven law on stone;
There is a better way.

He serves his country best,
Who lives pure life, and doeth righteous deed;
And walks straight paths, however others stray,
And leaves his sons, as uttermost bequest,
A stainless record which all men may read;
That is the better way.

LABOR PARTIES.

The organization of political parties in the interest of the working class and composed in the main of members of that class seems likely, for a time at least, to continue in America. Such organization is in no way surprising, in view of the discontent among the working classes and of the tendency, now so common, to invoke the aid of Government for every scheme of social reform or amelioration. The capitalists of this country have not been backward in asking for Government help for all sorts of enterprises, and it is natural that working-men, if they have objects of their own to promote, should pursue a similiar course. But when we come to inquire what objects they are really seeking, we find ourselves somewhat at a loss for an answer. We find in the platforms adopted by the party caucuses strong denunciation of capitalists and corporations, and of Government officers for yielding to their influence; we find also the expression of a desire for higher wages for working men and women and for the removal of poverty, and various minor grievances are sometimes alluded to. But when we ask how the new party proposes to remove the evils it complains of, we get no adequate reply. The principal definite measures we have seen proposed are the confiscation of the rent of land and the purchase and operation of railways by the State. How much support the second of these measures may have among the working people we do not know, though we have seen no evidence of its popularity, but as for the land measure, we doubt if it has any great number of adherents outside of the large cities. In fact, we doubt if the workmen have any clear idea what they would do in case they could get control of the Government in state or nation. Indeed, the want of a definite policy and the disagreement known to exist among working-men in regard to protective tariffs, the ownership of land, and other matters, make it tolerably certain that the attempt to organize a national working-men's party will for the present have no great success. Nevertheless, such a party may be organized on a small scale, and in any case the movement in question cannot fail to have an influence on the older parties and thereby on the politics of the country in general. It is important, therefore, to ascertain as near as possible what the bases of the new movement are, in order that it may be resisted so far as it is wrong, and guided in a better way.

The charge that has been preferred against the new party in some quarters that it is composed of anarchists and organized in the interest of social disorder may be very briefly dismissed. There is no evidence that any considerable number of working-men are in favor of any but peaceful means for the promotion of their interests; indeed, the organization of a working-men's party may be taken as proof of the contrary. Men do not organize political parties in order to abolish government, but in order to get control of the Government; and if the history of trades-unions counts for anything, the tendency of a working-men's government would be rather toward despotism than toward anarchy.

Again, it is apprehended by some that the Labor party is socialistic in character, and aims at the abolition of private property; but this also we believe to be a mistake. There is a tendency to socialism in certain portions of our population; but it is not confined to laboring men, and we suspect that it is not really so powerful as it sometimes appears to be. The vast majority of our people, both native and foreignborn, are either owners of property or desirous of becoming so. The Irish, for instance, are prominent in the ranks of labor parties; but there is no man more eager to possess property of his own than an Irishman, and when he has got it he holds on to it. It is in the cities chiefly that socialism finds adherents; yet even in the cities they are a small minority of the population, while in the country districts they are rarely to be met with. The farmers, especially, are sure to oppose socialism, and no movement among working-men has any chance of success without the support of the farmers.

The truth seems to be that the political labor movement is merely one manifestation of the general discontent of the working people, and of their desire to improve their condition. Working-men are dissatisfied with their present life and earnestly desirous of improving it; but how to improve it and make it nobler and happier, they very imperfectly understand. At present they are intent on gaining material comfort and power, as, indeed, most other men are in our time. Many of their number, especially in the large cities, are in extreme poverty; and so to most working-men the question of improving their life seems to be mainly a question of increasing their income. The wisest of their number seek to effect this object by the sure method of industry, skill and economy; but even the wisest of them, and still more the unwise, think they can effect something in this direction by political and social influence. Hence the policy of strikes and combinations, which, however, have done little toward attaining the end in view; and hence, also, the tendency now visible toward political action.

The political labor movement is not a transient phenomenon, destined to speedily disappear, but a movement of more permanent character, which will continue in some form until its objects, so far as possible, have been attained. For this reason it behooves our statesmen, and the educated and thinking classes generally, to consider what they ought to do in order to guide the movement aright. An exclusively working-men's party is an undesirable thing, even if its aims are right; and no such party can be maintained for any length of time if an honest attempt is made by the educated people to help the working-men improve their lot. That much may be accomplished, if all classes will work together for this end, there can be no reasonable doubt. Moreover, the duty cannot be shirked. The question of improving the life of the toiling masses is the main political and social problem of the age, and will remain so until it is solved—if solution be possible; and it can only be solved by measures that are just to all other portions of society. While American working-men are desirous of attaining their ends by just means, they are liable to be misled by their passions or their supposed interest, or by designing men who pander to both. It is the duty of the best men among us to do all they can to help the working-men in their legitimate aspirations, and at the same time show them their errors and rebuke them when they go wrong. With popular leadership of the right sort, parties made up of laborers mainly would soon cease to exist, and working-men would attain their ends by means of parties composed of all classes and aiming at the good of all.—The Century.

SERIOUS CONSIDERATIONS.

But our objections to the lodge are serious. It makes men false, blind, blasphemous; it turns them aside from the worship of God to the worship of devils. What wickeder system can be conceived than that which dresses under the same badge of "brotherhood" the common church member, the skeptic, the preacher, and the blackguard? It is no surprise to us that even in God's sanctuary such a company should have in its number those whose breaths are hot with liquor. But what shall we say of the preacher who will put himself on a moral and religious equality with such "brethren," and who will violate his honor and betray confidence by talking lodgery when invited as a Christian minister to make a religious address? Will anybody wonder when we say that such a one can never regain our respect and confidence until he renounces and denounces the lodge?

We say these things not because we want to, but because faithfulness to our principles and to Christ requires the truth to be spoken. Our quarrel is not with men as such, but with the lodge. We know well that men otherwise honest and upright are dishonest and wicked as lodge-men. They must be. The things which we criticise are the legitimate fruits of the system. No one can belong to the lodge and be an honest man. No one can take the lodge into his heart and be a Christian. From beginning to end it is anti-Christ. In its first act it asks its candidate for membership to break one of God's commands—"Swear not at all." Read Matt. 14 : 9 and Lev. 5 : 4, 5.

The lodge claims to be charitable, beneficent. This claim has not the shadow of truth. Christian beneficence runs on this wise: "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Lodge beneficence would read, "especially unto lodge-men." Lodge benevolence is the "refinement of selfishness." Its crowning act and principle of wickedness is that it rejects Christ absolutely.

Now we appeal to Christians in the lodge. "Let us not be angry, but honest." If we are right, your position is awfully wicked; if we are wrong, it is your duty to show us the truth.

We believe the lodge to be an institution of the devil, and his best one. All can then understand, whether they agree with us or not, why we so desperately oppose it. We see with alarm the secret system fastening itself upon the church, and we call on all Christians "unequally yoked together with unbelievers" to throw off their yokes, and defend the cross which they now so grievously offend. "I am crucified with Christ."—The Aurora, Knoxville College, Tenn.

SALE OF TOBACCO TO MINORS.—A law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors was passed at the last session of the Illinois Legislature, and its good effects are already apparent, in Chicago at least. The Chicago Tribune having made an investigation of the subject says: It has put an end effectually in this city to the sale of cigarettes to school boys, a traffic from which the proprietors of the petty school stores derived considerable profit. One of the principals who had most reason to complain, says the effect of the law has been so beneficial that there is scarcely a boy in the school of which he has charge who now uses tobacco in any of its forms. The women principals have been specially zealous in securing observance of the law.

The following extract from a paper by Dr. Herrick Johnson shows the glaring inconsistency of Christians voting for license candidates and license measures:

"A pastor of one of our churches advocates the license law and votes for it, and under his influence his members vote for him. A prominent officer in the same church becomes by means of their votes a member of the Legislature that passes the law, and he aids in its passage. Another member of the same church is mayor of the city, or judge of the license court, or excise commissions, and gives 'under his own hand' the formal license to keep a saloon for one year. Pastor and officer and church member thus declare that in the actually existing circumstances, it is right to license. But it happens (why should it not happen? If it is right to license, it is right to be licensed. If it is right to authorize a man to keep a saloon, it is right to keep it)—it happens that the man 'of good moral character' who applies for the license, is also a member of the same church! What happens now? Why, the pastor and officer and church member proceed to expel the saloon keeper from the church. They, as Christians, excommunicate the man for doing what they, as citizens, have distinctly authorized him to do!"

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Could old Peter the Hermit have revisited the earth at Indianapolis last week, he would have found a crowd, an enthusiasm, and a cause as remarkable and as worthy as when he led the hosts of Europe against the Turk. The capital city of Indiana is not unaccustomed to great meetings, but it was fairly taken by surprise, when its hotels overflowed into all the boarding-houses, and the streets resounded with steady tramp of thousands who wore the Prohibition colors. The saloons of the city had put on air of bravado, and banteringly made special preparation for a great increase of patronage; but they soon went into mourning, when they heard ringing through the land the knell of the rum traffic. Public opinion given in the daily press of all parties showed marked deference for the vigorous young party that promises a half million votes in November. At least 3,000 people had come together from Maine to Texas and from Florida to Oregon, and 1,029 of them were delegates appointed from Congressional districts, three from each.

The National Committee, meeting on Tuesday, had settled the preliminary business of the convention, and when chairman Dickie rapped for order the great hall of the city building presented a magnificent sight. Flags, banners and inscriptions were tastefully arranged; but some of the latter were very awkwardly expressed. The central banner over the chairman's head was often referred to and always with an enthusiastic response. It bore the legend: "No Sectionalism in Politics. No Sex in Citizenship." Governor St. John was recognized as he entered to take his place with the Kansas delegation and was greeted with hearty cheers.

Prof. Dickie, chairman of the National Committee, rapped for order soon after ten o'clock, Wednesday morning, and called to the platform the members of National Committee and the executive officers W. C. T. U. Then he made way for the earProhibition candidates, Judge Black, John Russell, Neal Dow, with Dr. H. A. Thompson and finally St. John, the appearance of each calling out an outburst of applause which at the last was overwhelming. If St. John ever imagined that the last campaign damaged his reputation, he no longer had the least occasion to entertain such doubts. The vast audience then joined in the hymn "America" and Samuel W. Small, the Georgia evangelist, offered an earnest prayer for the guidance of God in the proceedings.

Chairman Dickie called attention to the fact that the eight men who had been Prohibition candidates for Presidential offices were all alive, while of the sixteen nominated by the old parties but four remained. As a fitting recognition of this blessing from God he suggested that the convention join in singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," which was done with great fervor. After a short address Mr. Dickie named Rev. H. A. Delano, of Norwich, Conn., as temporary chairman, who responded to an address of welcome by Capt. E. F. Ritter, an Indianapolis lawyer. A number of telegrams were read, one being a cablegram from London, and another a word of cheer from S. A. Kean, the Chicago banker and N. C. A. auditor. The convention seemed to be in no mood for work until they had a speech from St. John and he was obliged to respond to a general demand. Various committees on platform, permanent organization, rules and credentials were appointed.

The afternoon session was short, the early part as well as the evening being taken up with singing and speech-making. Rev. Mr. Gambrell of Mississippi, father of the brave young editor who was shot by the assassin Hamilton, was called upon the platform and responded to his introduction with the brief sentence that he esteemed the cause which the convention represented as worthy the life of any one.

"Walter Thomas Mills," the most aggressive of the lodge and anti-woman suffrage delegates, created a slight disturbance by attempting to read a resolution addressed to the brewers' convention sitting in St. Paul. "No! no!" shouted many voices. "We have nothing to do with them;" and after some minutes wrangling there was a unanimous vote that the chagrined Mr. Mills be allowed to withdraw his motion, which he protested he made for some other person.

The W. C. T. U., by Mrs. Buel, National Corresponding Secretary, presented a memorial in favor of declaring for the Bible in schools, for woman suffrage, and the condemnation of ordinary campaign vilification. Later the W. C. T. U. presented another resolution asking for shorter hours of labor, and the abolition of Sabbath labor.

The committee on credentials reported 1029 delegates present, and the committee on permanent organization handed up the name of John P. St. John for chairman of the convention, and Sam Small for secretary. This report was received with an ovation, and as St. John took his place he was the most popular man in Indianapolis.

A speech from Bishop Turner of the African Methodist Episcopal church closed the afternoon proceedings. He is an able speaker, and seems to deserve the popularity he enjoys among his own people at the South.

The evening of the first day was occupied by a meeting of the "Blue and the Gray," the new soldier's organization for prohibition. Addresses were made by Col. George W. Bain, the eloquent Kentuckian, by Miss F. E. Willard, Mrs. Merriwether of Tennessee, and others. Col. Cleghorn of Wisconsin opened his speech with a recollection of the honor he once enjoyed of speaking for the Good Templars. The rest of his remarks were on a par with this insignificant distinction and their conclusion was the most welcome part. Col. Bain aroused the utmost enthusiasm by his eloquence, and Miss Willard threw the opposers of woman sufferage into consternation by her references to the position of the party upon that question.

There was something grandly inspiring in the request of chairman St. John as business opened promptly the second morning: "Let the convention arise and be led in prayer to God by Rev. A. M. Richardson." W. T. Mills, who seems to have been called "the Little Giant" until his head is sadly turned, began a lively fight on the presentation of the report on rules, which provided for five-minute speeches in discussion of resolutions. He had planned a debate of the suffrage question by four speakers of four mortal hours long, as if the great convention had come together for his especial accommodation and could stay a week if it should please him. He was told that himself and his friends had filled the earth with their arguments and complaints for a year; what the convention wanted was not argument, but to vote. He contrived to squander the better part of an hour, before he was voted down and out of sight, a weak vote from the Wisconsin corner sustaining his conceited proposal.

The remainder of the forenoon was given to raising a campaign fund, which reached the $15,000 mark. Several $2,000 subscriptions were made and there was much good humor and enthusiasm while this business proceeded. An interesting incident was the subscription of $100 from a $500 salary by a young Catholic priest of Minnesota. "Father" Mahoney was called forward and addressed the convention from a reporter's chair.

The afternoon session was opened with prayer and Scripture reading. The vast hall was crowded to doors, aisles and lobbies. It is said to seat 4,000; hundreds more were packed in. It was to be the most exciting portion of the convention. It was the avowed determination of a few to make the hottest possible fight over the suffrage plank in the platform. The platform committee had wrestled for many hours over the difficulty, and every rumor tended to increase the anxiety of both parties. To control the turbulent and the explosive spirits was an overwhelming task, but Gov. St. John proved himself an able chairman, though the effort to keep the convention down to business exhausted him.

After a few items of business had been put out of the way, the platform committee, led by Judge Black and Miss Willard, came in dignified order to the platform. The hearing of their report was immediately taken up. Judge Black in a few words set forth the difficulty of their task, and the practical harmony of their conclusions; but one member refusing to agree with the report. The reading followed and Sam Small's clear tones carried every word to the farthest corner. Various portions were cheered and the suffrage plank was received with a whirlwind of applause. The temper of the convention was hot. No minority report was wanted. But St. John insisted on an orderly proceedure, and John M. Olin, the Wisconsin member of the committee, read an able argument against the suffrage plank. He is a fine speaker, of powerful voice and manly bearing, and met the difficulty of his situation like a brave man. After a point of order was raised that he had made no report but a speech, he produced a resolution turning over woman suffrage to a local option rule. Various conflicting motions were made. W. T. Mills wanted the minority report, and was quickly voted down. T. C. Richmond wanted two hours to consider the suffrage plank, and was ruled out of order.

The majority report was finally taken up in its order. A delegate moved to amend the preamble by adding the words, "believing that all human enactments should be framed in accordance with his law." It was not accepted.

The suffrage plank was at last reached and the debate began, led off by T. C. Richmond of Wisconsin. His main argument and that of Mr. Olin was the loss of votes in the South. The assumption of Northern men to answer for the South was repudiated in an impassioned manner by Mrs. Merriwether of Tennessee and Col. Bain of Kentucky. The latter in an eloquent argument impaled Olin and nailed him to the wall, charging him as a divider and fomenter of strife in the party. "They claim that the South is against suffrage," said Col. Bain; "but every Southern member of the platform committee has signed the majority report and only John M. Olin stands out against it." Mrs. Perkins of Ohio, "Mother" Stewart and Mrs. Matchett of Pennsylvania spoke for the plank, as did Fanning of Michigan, Cranfill of Texas, Evans of Illinois, who recalled the history of the party and claimed it to be bad faith to the Home Protection party of 1882 to leave out woman suffrage. Scomp of Georgia opposed it, also Tate of Tennessee and W. T. Mills, who climbed up to the reporters' stand and then pushing them aside mounted a table. Tate in his speech mentioned other great moral questions, one of which was secret societies, around which public sentiment is centering, and which must find their way into national politics.

Sam. Small made one of the most effective speeches for the majority report. He had come determined to oppose woman suffrage to the last, but after going over the ground inch by inch, that man, he said, would be a poltroon who would ask those women to retract another iota from their position, or concede any more to the minority. Miss Willard made the last speech, and St. John recognized a motion for the previous question. It was carried with a thundering aye, amid yells for a division from Mills and others. They had the satisfaction of counting about sixty votes. They wasted a half hour in dilatory measures before the final vote, when only about twenty cared to support what was now manifestly a mere factious opposition. After the roar of cheers had subsided the utmost confusion prevailed. Mills yelled out his contradictions to the chair so spitefully that some would not have been surprised to have seen him suppressed by a tap of the gavel. Chafin from the Wisconsin corner screamed "privilege" for a minute or two. A score demanded the floor and a multitude cried for order. St. John shamed them to silence and business proceeded. When the previous question was ordered Sam. Small reached across to Miss Willard and clasped her hand. Tumultuous applause broke out from floor and galleries to see the struggle thus ended in friendship. At the same time Mills was calling out to his friends to keep up the fight and carry their measure next time. His conduct was so offensive as to be the remark of numerous delegates. His every step in the convention seemed to lose him votes, influence and friends.

The evening opened with song by the Sky Lark quartette of students from Kansas. The quartette singing formed no inconsiderable part of the proceedings. The far-famed Silver Lake quartette; the Herbert quartette of Illinois; the Harmonia, four young Nebraska ladies; and Jewett's "Jinglers," a popular colored club, waked echoes of memory and tides of enthusiasm in every breast. Prohibition goes as well to music as Abolition, and this reform will go singing on to the forefront of the nation.

The business of the evening began with a sharp trick by the leader of the Pennsylvania delegation who moved an addition to the fifth plank and it was carried before the convention realized its force, and a vote to reconsider failed also. (The addition we put in brackets. The resolution makes a beautiful straddle.) Various resolutions of thanks were given to everybody—even to the railroads!—such was the good humor of the convention.

Nominations were at last reached and with some insignificant speaking Clinton B. Fisk was nominated by acclamation, banners bearing his portrait were run up, and the vast crowd exhausted itself in tremendous cheers for several minutes. A telegram from Mr. Fisk was read by Mr. Dickie explaining his absence on account of the M. E. General Conference. St. John was instructed to send him a dispatch announcing the nomination.

For Vice President Alabama nominated John T. Tanner, a delegate from that State. Georgia nominated George W. Bain of Kentucky in a speech of splendid eloquence, by Sam. W. Small, that found almost as hearty a response as when Fisk was named. Col. Bain after several minutes got the floor to decline the honor. Missouri nominated John A. Brooks. Kansas named Sam. Small and struck a popular chord for the response was tremendous. Mr. Small declined to allow the use of his name, but North Carolina, Ohio and Col. Moulton for the District of Columbia, seconded the nomination. Michigan supported Brooks, as did Mrs. Hoffman of St. Louis in a noble speech. Pennsylvania was first for Bain then Brooks, so was West Virginia. As Bain and Small insisted on declining, Tanner withdrew in favor of Brooks and Texas called in her nomination of Dahoney and the son of Missouri was nominated by acclamation. He was conducted to the platform, a fine-appearing man, with full beard and hair turning well to gray. He faced the thunder of the crowd with the calmness of a born commander, and responded to the honor conferred upon him in an able address.

The work of the convention was soon over. By 11 o'clock the great hall was empty and only the echoes of a great meeting remained.

PLATFORM.

"The Prohibition party, in national convention assembled, acknowledging Almighty God as the source of all power in government, does hereby declare:

"1. That the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of alcoholic beverages shall be made public crimes and prohibited and punished as such.

"2. That such prohibition must be secured through amendments of our National and State constitutions, enforced by adequate authority, and to this end the Prohibition party is imperatively demanded in State and Nation.

"3. That any form of license taxation or regulation of the liquor traffic is contrary to good government; that any party which supports regulation by license or tax enters into an alliance with such traffic and becomes the actual foe of the State's welfare, and that we arraign the Republican and Democratic parties for their persistent attitude in favor of the licensed iniquity, whereby they oppose the demand of the people for prohibition, and through open complicity with the liquor cause, defeat the enforcement of law.

"4. For the immediate abolition of the internal-revenue system, whereby our national government is deriving support from our greatest national vice.

"5. That an adequate public revenue being necessary, it may properly be raised by impost duties, but import duties should be so reduced that no surplus shall be accumulated in the Treasury, and the burdens of taxation should be removed from foods, clothing, and other comforts and necessaries of life [and imposed upon such articles of import as will give protection both to the manufacturer, employer and producing labor against the competition of the world].

"6. That civil-service appointments for all civil offices, chiefly clerical in their duties, should be based upon moral, intellectual and physical qualifications, and not upon party service or party necessity.

"7. That the right of suffrage rests on no mere circumstance of race, color, sex, or nationality, and that where, from any cause, it has been held from citizens who are of suitable age and mentally and morally qualified for the exercise of an intelligent ballot, it should be restored by the people through the legislatures of the several States on such educational basis as they may deem wise.

"8. For the abolition of polygamy and the establishment of uniform laws governing marriage and divorce.

"9. For prohibiting all combinations of capital to control and to increase the cost of products for popular consumption.

"10. For the preservation and defense of the Sabbath as a civil institution without oppressing any who religiously observe the same on any other day than the first day of the week.

"11. That arbitration is the Christian, wise and economic method of settling national differences, and the same method should, by judicious legislation, be applied to the settlement of disputes between large bodies of employes and employers; that the abolition of the saloon would remove the burdens, moral, physical, pecuniary, and social, which now oppress labor and rob it of its earnings, and would prove to be the wise and successful way of promoting labor reform; and we invite labor and capital to unite with us for the accomplishment thereof.

"12. That monopoly in land is a wrong to the people, and public land should be reserved to actual settlers, and that men and women should receive equal wages for equal work.

"13. That our immigration laws should be so enforced as to prevent the introduction into our country of all convicts, inmates of dependent institutions, and others physically incapacitated for self-support, and that no person shall have the ballot in any State who is not a citizen of the United States.

"Recognizing and declaring that prohibition of the liquor traffic has become the dominant issue in national politics, we invite to full party fellowship all those who, on this one dominant issue, are with us agreed, in the full belief that this party can and will remove sectional differences, promote national unity, and insure the best welfare of our native land."

Try to simpify truth. You can never be sure that truth is truth until it is simple. The doctrines of first importance are all simple; what cannot be simplified is not of first importance; put it to one side.—George W. Cable.

REFORM NEWS.

THE SACRED CARPET OF THE NOBLE GRAND.

May 26, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From North Page and Hepburn I went to College Springs. I have preached in the Wesleyan, Congregational and United Presbyterian churches of this place. I also spoke at two country places, about five miles each from Coin.

I had an appointment to lecture at Bradyville, but the rain, which is abundant here now, prevented. Dr. Wm. Johnston, pastor of the U. P. church, and president of the Iowa Christian Association, donated $5, as did also A. B. Milner, a lay brother of the M. E. church, I. S. Lavely of the Wesleyan Methodist church, and Geo. Berry of the U. P. church, besides others who gave smaller sums.

Thirty-two new subscriptions to the Cynosure have been secured since coming to College Springs, and the canvass is not completed yet. This makes ninety-one new subscriptions to the Cynosure, taken since coming to Page county, and I have not got through yet. Through tracts and Cynosures, we are scattering the salt of reform in Page county.

While canvassing for donors to the Iowa Association and subscribers, Bro. Henry said, "Can't you give us a lecture at Bradyville?" "Why, yes," I replied, "if you can secure a place, and make the announcement." "Oh, I can get the M. E. church," he said, "and I will see that the lecture is announced."

Accordingly he went to Bradyville and applied for the M. E. church, but was informed that the trustees had passed a resolution, sometime before, to admit nothing but temperance lecturers, besides the regular services. He then applied for the school house, but the director, who was an Odd-fellow, refused to have the lecture there, but thought the trustees might have opened the church, as they had been letting every thing in. "But," said he, "if they won't let you have the church, we will let you have the Odd-fellow's hall."

Bro. Henry, whose soul is spiced with Irish wit, replied, "To show that the Odd-fellows are more liberal than the church, I will accept your offer." "But," said the Odd-fellow, "if it should be muddy it would hardly do to have the lecture in our hall, it is so nicely carpeted." Then fearing that he might appear insincere in Mr. Henry's eyes, he said, "I will take you up to the hall and let you see for yourself how nicely it is carpeted, and you shall say whether it would be right to come in with the lecture if it should be muddy."

So they went up to the door of the ante-room and knocked, and after some delay, were admitted. It was lodge night, and part of the members had already gathered; but the door of the lodge-room was opened and Mr. Henry was bid to behold the fine carpet on the floor, and to say whether the hall ought to be opened to a lecture if it was muddy. My friend was so dazzled by the glory of the place that he was constrained to admit that it would be most too bad to come on to such a nice carpet with muddy feet. And so his guide led him out of the hall; and to fix the matter that the lecture against secret societies should not be announced to be in the Odd-fellows hall, for fear it might be muddy, he remarked, "You said yourself, when you saw the hall, that it would not do to open it for the lecture, if it was muddy." "Oh, yes!" said my friend, "I was like the fox, who, when he could not get the grapes, said, 'I don't want them, they are sour.'"

But Mr. Henry persevered and engaged an uncarpeted hall, and but for the fact that there was rain, as well as mud, the merits of secret societies, such as Freemasons and Odd-fellows, would have been discussed in Bradyville.

Having had the privilege of showing the unchristian character of the secret lodge system in M. E. churches, as well as in those of other denominations, I would not have my readers draw the conclusion that the trustees of the M. E. church of Bradyville were following an established precedent in refusing to open the church to the discussion of the relations of Freemasonry and its kindred orders to our holy Christianity.

Surely Satan is working through the secret lodge system to supplant Christ, and subvert Christianity, by educating our young men in a deistical ritual of worship, and building them up in self-righteousness. Will the friends of Christ work with Satan to keep this conspiracy from being exposed? They will not, when the eyes of their understanding are enlightened, and they comprehend the anti-Christian character of Freemasonry and its kindred orders.

C. F. HAWLEY.

A LOUISIANA CAMPAIGN.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 26, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The rumsellers and beer-drinkers are trying to get a sufficient memorial before the General Assembly to repeal the Sunday law. The Sunday law was very generally observed in the early part of 1887, but more recently it is hardly respected. Mr. Sherard, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., sent lists to every church in the city last Sabbath for endorsements praying the legislature not to repeal the Sunday law. I called on Mr. Sherard at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, 15 Camp St., Monday and was pleased to find him with a smile on his pleasant face. He said, "I am satisfied we have sufficient endorsements." This is another act of the lodge rumites to crush out of the statute books one day of rest.

I preached at Mount Moriah Baptist church on Sabbath at 3 P. M., and lectured on "Secrecy as a Hindrance to Christian Progress" at Elder Guy Beck's church at 7:30 P. M. Bro. Beck and the better part of his congregation heartily endorsed my sermon. Several young secretists attempted to raise a loud noise, but Elder Beck and his deacons demanded peace and in a moment all was quiet.

I have been very unwell this week, but praise the Lord I am able to get about and disturb the lodge by distributing tracts. I have in print a tract entitled, "The Colored People and Secret Orders." This tract will be very unsavory for a great many of my race, especially those inclined to immorality and secretism. I had an invitation from Rev. Hiram Wilson to come up to Kennerville, La., and preach for his people Thursday night. I expect to leave here Monday morning to lecture in the following places: New Texas, West Melville, Clinton, Bayou Sara, Baton Rouge, Plaquemine, Bayou Goula, Donaldsonville, Thibodeauxville, Morgan City, Pattersonville, Jeanerette, New Iberia and St. Martinsville. Pray for God to be with me.

The District Grand Tabernacles Lodge meets in Plaquemine the 31st. I am expecting to lecture at Macedonia Baptist church Tuesday, and at Pilgrim Rest Baptist church Thursday at 7:30 P. M. in Plaquemine. Friends can write me until about June 15th at Dorseyville, La.

I met Bro. R. Johnson, clerk of a prominent Baptist church. He has seen the evils of the lodge and thinks they ought to be rooted up. He would like to have the Cynosure, but can't subscribe for it. Dear Northern friends, if you want to educate the Southern Negro it will be well to educate him against the lodge that swears its candidates to have their throats cut across and their tongues torn out if they reveal the pretended secrets. If you want to save this poor people teach them temperance and morality. Can any Christian who has the Lord's money to spare do better with it than to swell the N. C. A. ministers' fund to $3,000, and send free 2,000 Cynosures? If you will furnish tracts and Cynosures, I will leaven Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas.

The Masons mustered twenty and the Odd-fellows twenty-seven last Saturday to attend the funeral of Mr. R. Hayes. I attended services at a prominent A. M. E. church, and after the sermon the pastor gave about ten minutes' lecture on the benefit of secret orders to the colored people. Among other unfounded statements he said, "Now, brothers and sisters, you jist haster pay $1.00 to jine and 25 cents er month. The society pays $500 to the widow of every member, and we pays that without any trouble. And in five years we can pay without the lodge members paying more than one cent each." Now let the mathematicians get their pencils and begin to reckon this up.

UP THE RIVER.

PLAQUEMINE, MAY 31, 1888.—I preached last Sabbath at the Laharpe St. M. E. church at 11 A. M.; at St. Marks Fourth Baptist church at 3 P. M.; and lectured at Pleasant Plain M. E. church, Rev. T. J. Johnson, pastor, at 8 P. M. The Old Baptist church gave an excursion from New Orleans to this place Monday 28th. I came up here on the excursion and distributed tracts on the train and freely spoke on the secrecy question. Revs. Foster and Williams and others on the train very strongly denounced the lodge system. The Son's and Daughter's of Iberville gave an excursion from here to New Orleans yesterday (Wednesday). The object of this excursion was to bring delegates to the District Grand Lodge meeting of the secret Tabernacles, which meets here on Friday, June 1st. I intended to lay over here until this district meeting adjourned, but my appointment at New Texas for Sunday compels me to leave here to-day via the steamer Warren.

I was very hospitably entertained here by brother

CORRESPONDENCE.

MASONIC OUTRAGE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:--The following is gathered from the lips of the person aggrieved, and from documents handed to me by him.

In the year 1867, in the month of April, the following note was given to Alexander Stebbins for money loaned in good faith to the representatives of Adrian Chapter, No. 10, Royal Arch Masons, for the construction of a costly Masonic Temple, which adorns (?) the city of Adrian to-day, and is used for the purpose for which it was erected, and toward the erection of which, and for such purpose, the above money was loaned from Mr. Stebbins.

(No. 378) ADRIAN, April 20, 1867.

Treasurer of Adrian Chapter, No 10:

On the first day of April next (1868) pay to Alexander Stebbins, or order, One Thousand Dollars with interest at ten per cent ($1,000).

A. HOWELL, Secretary.

Countersigned by W. S. LAWRENCE, President.

Upon the above note Mr. Stebbins received a payment of $500 in a manner to be explained hereafter. Mr. Stebbins is now above seventy years of age and is infirm. His companion is also aged and is an invalid. Her infirmity has been greatly increased by the treatment they have both received from the above-named charitable order.

Years since, when the country was new, Mr. Stebbins came into the vicinity of Adrian, purchased 160 acres of land, cleared it up, erected good buildings, and, being too old and infirm to work it himself, sold it, intending from the proceeds to live more at leisure with his companion for the rest of their days. By various means their resources had slipped away until the $1,000 above mentioned was the last payment from his land, upon which he hoped to sustain himself, assisted by what effort he might be able to put forth. The two are now virtually upon the charities of their children, and a cold world.

A neighbor of Mr. Stebbins, E. O. Cammet, by name, was treasurer of the Chapter, and had great confidence in the order. He was an honest man, and when Mr. Stebbins at the expiration of the year had received no money and was pressed, applying to Mr. Cammet, he paid to Mr. Stebbins $500, on his own responsibility, not officially, and the payment was indorsed on the back of the note in a proper manner by Mr. Stebbins.

In January of the following year Mr. Cammet paid $100 to apply as interest which was also properly indorsed. This was also done as a private individual, but with confidence in the order of which he was an officer. In March, 1869, Mr. Stebbins commenced suit against Adrian Chapter, No. 10, in the circuit court of Lenawee county. In May of that same year he procured a judgment for $566.73, being the amount then due. Not one dollar of this amount has he ever been paid, and Mr. Stebbins will probably be allowed to die without what, by common honesty, belongs to him. Mr. Cammet and his wife are both dead. They died in grief and poverty, $6,000 having gone from them into the beautiful Masonic Temple, for which they never recovered one dollar. Their deaths are said to be traceable to this gross dishonesty of the order. Their hard earnings have gone to sustain an institution based on corruption, sacrilege and fraud, and the craft sport themselves with crowns and plumes and various regalia to deceive the simple; meanwhile using the temple constructed in robbery and plunder for the purpose of blaspheming God and belittling manhood, while their plundered victims pine away and die. The judgment first obtained has been renewed at the proper time, but it is a hopeless case. There are evidently a few secrets which the uninitiated do not know.

The daily press of the city frequently refers to the temple as a Masonic Temple where many worthy (?) exploits are done; but the Masons, it seems, disclaim it, and credit it with belonging to some sort of an insurance company. Mr. Stebbins wrote to the agent of said insurance company and received the following reply last January:

GRAND RAPIDS, Jan. 20, 1888.

Alexander Stebbins, Adrian, Mich.,

SIR:—Yours of 19th received. In reply will say I investigated your matter and find that Royal Arch Chapter, No. 10., of Adrian, did not have your money; but a body of men undertook to build a Masonic Temple and claimed to [be] officers of Chapter No. 10 without any authority from said Royal Arch Chapter No. 10, and that the probabilities are your claim is not worth one cent, "as it would be" if the men were officers of Royal Arch Chapter No 10, your claim would have been paid long before this. Respectfully yours, etc., E. E. WAISOR.

Time fails to add more. When will the world learn to oppose these devilish institutions, and insist that their secret diabolism shall be exposed and banished forever from a free country?

H. A. DAY, Sec'y. M. C. A.

BRO. HINMAN'S WORK BEARS FRUIT.

EAST HAMPTON, Mass., May 27, 1888.

DEAR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—On our arrival home from a Southern tour we find lying on our table numbers of the Christian Cynosure. We have read their newsy, instructive and wholesome columns with much interest. We imagine we may be indebted to Rev.———, whom we met at Orangeburg, S. C., a few weeks since. If so, this gentleman will please accept our thanks—should this meet his eye. His name we do not recall. He gave the pupils of a colored school, at Orangeburg, in which the writer is interested, a nice little impromptu talk on one occasion. We think the children will remember the points of that talk.

We are in full accord with your sentiments as to secret societies, and we are heartily glad that such a League as the "A. A. L." is in existence. Long life to it in combating secret organizations among Christian people.

We have never been able to understand that if a thing was right to be done, why should it not be done openly and above-board? Every feeling in our nature rebels against secret organizations. They seem to us anti-Christian, anti-Government, and anti-common-sense. To the oft repeated question "Cui-bono"?—by the writer, no satisfactory answer has ever come yet.

The Master went about teaching in plain language. The Pharisees required a "sign," but he gave them none. Christ put no "tyler" at the doors of the Temple or the synagogues to shut out the uninitiated. No hieroglyphics barred the common people from his presence and his blessed teachings. He warned his disciples to be humble, harmless, to avoid offences; not to despise the little ones; taught how we are to deal with our brethren when they offend us. He reproved the scribes and Pharisees for transgressing God's commandments through their own traditions. He reproved unbelief. When asked who was greatest in the kingdom of heaven, he put the little unsophisticated child in the midst. Christ surrounded his doings and teachings with no mysteries. Strange that we think to improve upon Christ's methods of doing things! MRS. EMELINE R. STERLING.

GEN. JOHNSTON'S TACTICS.

YORK, Pa., May 17, '88.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The York Dispatch of April 28 says: "Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, the gallant ex Confederate officer, has been elected a contributing member of Gen. E. D. Baker Post, No. 8, of Philadelphia. Gen. Johnston is the only ex-Confederate soldier who has ever been received into the ranks of a Grand Army Post. When comrade John W. Frazier presented Gen. Johnston's petition to become a contributing member of the post at the regular monthly encampment of that body on Thursday evening last, the hall rang again and again with applause."

"WASHINGTON, April 20, 1888.

"To General E. D. Baker Post, No. 8, Department Pennsylvania, G. A. R.:

"For the purpose of enabling me to participate in the noble work of charity performed by the comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, I hereby make application for contributing membership to your post. Enclosed please find the sum of $10 for one year's dues.

"Very respectfully yours,

"JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON."

"The petition was unaccompanied by any other communication, and when presented to the members of the post for consideration, it went through with a rush amid the cheers of the veterans."

As Gen. Johnston is a Royal Arch Mason, and as the G. A. R. is a Masonic army, it is very proper for the ex-Confederate to join the G. A. R. The Department Commander of Pennsylvania, who sees that everybody is looking at this rather queer blunder of the childish old veterans of Post No. 8, comes to the front and tells the G. A. R. and the public that such foolishness cannot be endured.

If Gen. Johnston desires to participate in a "noble work of charity," he had better keep clear of all secret rings and societies and give all his money to the widows and orphans that he ruined by his foolish treason. Charity should always begin at home,

Gen. Johnston's axe must need grinding very much. Uncle Sam has plenty of good grindstones, and the G. A. R. boys can beat all at turning a good grindstone. This is the truth, and there is no poetry about it. Yours, EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

PITH AND POINT.

A MISSIONARY'S JUDGMENT ON THE WORST ENEMIES OF THE NEGRO.

When a boy on a New England farm I was a constant reader of the Cynosure. It saved me from secret societies. I entered upon an examination of them, so far as I was able, and the knowledge I gained saved me from them. Now as a worker under the A. M. A., among the colored people of the South, I am convinced that the two worst enemies of the Negro's progress ARE RUM AND SECRET SOCIETIES. If the Cynosure would like it, I should like to contribute something occasionally toward the general knowledge of the evil among the Negroes.—REV. G. S. ROLLINS, Wilmington, N. C.

THE WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS.

Can the ritual of the W. R C. be had, or have you secured it yet? I do wish you would get it. They have organized a corps here, and many are joining. They are to have the memorial services in the M. E. church by the G. A. R. Sons of Veterans and the W. R. C. Now, in that corps there are infidels who make no hesitancy to tell what they believe or don't believe. I cannot see how Christian women can truly love Jesus and stay in such an order. Am I too radical? I wish to do right, but I cannot think of becoming a member. They say all the "bon tons" are coming in; with me there is no greatness only in goodness. To me the Cynosure is the best Christian paper I ever read. Do get all their so called secrets and let the world know there is but one true religion. Brother W. B. Stoddard stopped over night with us when here, and I know that he is doing a vast amount of good; more than he realizes now. It does me good to talk with a young man who is opposed to the lodge. We have a few here, and they are our best moral boys. The lodge boys, as a general thing, play cards and visit saloons. This I know to be a fact.—MRS. M. F. CARR, Greenfield, Ohio.

TRACTS FOR NEBRASKA.

A few lines of explanation are due from me, as I seem to have been doing so little in the reform work. I have been afflicted with dropsy. For the last two or three years my health has been very poor; but I am now better and able to get around again. I am going up into Nebraska in a few days. Please send me all the tracts you can, as wife and I are going in a buggy, and we can distribute them all along the road. I feel my time is short and I want to do all I can for the honor of Christ while I live. If the way is open I will preach and lecture while in Nebraska, God willing. Pray for me that I may be an humble instrument in God's hands in doing good and glorifying his name.—JOHN THOMPSON, Sabetha, Kansas.

LITERATURE.

MARVELS OF THE NEW WEST. Comprising Marvels of Nature, of Race, of Enterprise, of Mining, of Stock-raising, and of Agriculture. Six books in one volume. By William M. Thayer. Henry Bill Publishing Co., Norwich, Conn.

The compiler of this sumptuous volume the boys of twenty-five years ago will remember as the author of the popular juveniles "The Bobbin Boy," "The Pioneer Boy," "The Tanner Boy," etc. They will be pleased to see a work of such artistic perfection, of such immense information and of such absorbing interest from their old friend. Taking up the series of marvels in their order, there is gathered in this work a very thorough and entertaining account of the great Western marvels with a careful and particular description of the various enterprises of mining, stock-raising, etc. The whole is profusely and finely illustrated, and the publishers have spared no pains to make it a reliable and beautiful encyclopedia of the vast and marvelous region it describes.

Our Day, to which multitudes are now turning month by month for their "record and review of current reform," opens its current number with "The Use and Abuse of Creeds," by Rev. Joseph Parker of England. The editorial notes on the paper help us into much clearer light than the article itself. Anthony Comstock, the iconoclast in the devil's workshop of vice, aims a blow at the champion of infidelity, Ingersoll, which Mr. Gladstone will do well to read before he again demeans his great abilities to an encounter with a man whose moral character is on a par with his religion. In the controversy between Rev. C. M. Brown and Ingersoll, the latter is shown to be an audacious falsifier. Mr. Cook's Monday-lecture prelude is on the case of the evangelist Davis and preaching on public grounds. The documents of permanent value which have place, are the report of the committee appointed by Boston pastors on preaching on the Common, and an address by Sir W. W. Hunter, before the Society of Arts, London, on "The Religions of India."

The Report of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture for the quarter ending March 31st last is of special value, because of the report of the special committee appointed by the Board on the subject of "Silos and Ensilage." The papers on various subjects are numerous and valuable, and their wide circulation among farmers must be of great value to Kansas. The report is issued by M. Mohler, secretary of the Board, Topeka.

Vick's Magazine for June remembers the season with a handsome lithograph of a white rose, and suitable articles on the Queen of the flowers. The account of a century-old date palm, still to be seen near the corner of Orleans and Dauphin streets, New Orleans, is full of curious interest. It is called "Pere Antoine's Palm," after a Spanish priest who died many years ago, lamented by the whole city, and even the Masonic lodges attended his funeral in full regalia and joined the procession—the only occasion, it is said, where this was ever done in this country.

The London Illustrated News devotes considerable space in its last issue to the International Exposition at Glasgow in Scotland, which is now fairly under way and promises to be a successful enterprise.

OBITUARY.

SAMUEL HAWTHORNE died in Volga, Iowa, April 21, 1888, from internal injuries, received from the kick of a vicious horse, five days previous to his death.

Mr. Hawthorne was born in County Armagh, Ireland, March 18, 1820, an only son. He was married in 1845 to Mary Anne Henry; they had nine children, six of whom survive him, and five of them were permitted to receive a father's assurance that, "My trust is in Jesus, my Saviour, in Jesus only. He is an all-wise, merciful Father and God." He was a man of few words, but of sterling ability and worth, with sound judgment, guided by an enlightened conscience.

He was a sincere Christian, an upright citizen, and will be missed in the church and Sabbath-school and in his family. The deceased sought and found the Saviour when quite young, and was a teacher in the Sabbath-school before he was eighteen, and kept it up ever since, and was a ruling elder in the United Presbyterian church when he died. He held a great many offices of trust wherever he lived, and in Volga, where he lived for thirty-four years. He was a lover of the Christian Cynosure and the principles it inculcates. He was greatly opposed to any secret organization, especially Masonry. He reasoned and talked boldly against it; and gave all his influence in favor of justice and truth.

We realize in our bereavement the great and all-wise plan of our Creator; for he knows the end from the beginning, and knows just what is best for his glory and our good. M. A. H.

HOME AND HEALTH.

DANGER IN THUNDER-STORMS.

The chief danger incurred by human beings and other animals is due to their bodies being better than some objects, although they are bad conductors in the sense that they afford considerable resistance to electrical discharges passing through them, and, therefore, give rise to the development of heat and mechanical, molecular disturbance. A man standing, walking, or riding upon an open plain during a thunder-storm is in a dangerous position, because his body is apt to be made a stepping-stone for the discharge, offering less resistance to it than the air. The danger is increased by the near presence of large masses of metal in the ground. Dry, low-lying positions are safer than such as are elevated and exposed. The close neighborhood of water-courses should always be avoided. It is better to lie flat upon the ground than it is to stand or sit. If shelter is near, the individual should get at once completely under cover. To stand under the lee of a house, wall, hay-stack, or thicket of trees is more dangerous than to remain altogether exposed in the open. The inside of a barn or out-house, well away from the walls, is comparatively safe. A distance of two or three yards away from the trunks and branches of trees is a comparatively safe position; but to lean against the trunk of a tree during prevelance of a thunder-storm is especially dangerous. In the interior of a house not adequately protected by a lightning conductor it is the best to keep to the lower rooms during a thunder-storm, to remain as far as practicable in the middle of the room, to avoid objects hung from metal chains, gilt frames, fire-places, looking-glasses with amalgamated backs, and iron pillars and balustrades.

HOT WATER FOR BLACK EYES.

There is a world-wide superstition that as soon as a man gets a black eye he must use cold applications for hours, and that the best cold application possible is raw beef. I call it a superstition because it is without reason and against reason. Everybody knows that what makes a discoloration of the skin by a bruise is the congestion of the part with the blood that cannot get away again, so that it decomposes and changes its color, and everybody ought to know that the way to prevent such a result is to facilitate and stimulate the circulation in the bruised part.

A cold application retards the circulation, and the best thing to stimulate it is hot applications. Twice in my life I was threatened with a black eye. On the first occasion I applied raw beef and other cold applications and succeeded in producing the blackest eye I ever saw. On the second occasion I got some hot water right away and bathed the eye for about half an hour in it. The result was that there was not the slightest discoloration visible at any time. These hints are well worth pasting in the hats of some people in Chicago.—Chicago Journal.

CURE FOR SEA-SICKNESS.

Dr. Wm. F. Hutchinson, in the American Magazine, gives a simple prescription which he has often found efficacious in sea-sickness. He declares, however, that for certain persons there is no preventive. They will be sick anyway, and it generally does them good. He says that heavy doses of bromide and also the much-vaunted antipyrine are dangerous, and he would not advocate their use. His prescription is the following:

Into a tumbler of pure water put five grains of bromide of soda, two drops of tincture of nux vomica, and two drops of wine of ipecacuanha. This must be taken in tea-spoonful doses every five minutes—best from the hands of a medical man who will attend to his business and not leave his patient. In half an hour the nausea usually disappears; in another, the headache is gone and sleep comes.

A recipe for improving unruly boys. A young mother once said to me: "When Harry is very naughty I always curl his hair and put on his best clothes, for he seems to put on his good behavior with them"

A young teacher, confiding to a friend her trouble in governing some unruly boys between twelve and fourteen years of age, said: "The only way I get along at all is to wear my best clothes every day; and when I have had a particularly trying time, I always wear something especially pretty the next day, and the boys are sure to behave better. I never could account for it, but just as soon as I wear anything common they are uncommonly troublesome"—Mrs. Winchett.

THE MISTAKES OF MOSES

and Ingersoll, are common topics of conversation, but the mistake we wish to comment on here is the great one so many people labor under that consumption (which is really only Scrofula of the Lungs) is an incurable disease, and that there is no hope for one suffering from it. This terrible malady, that yearly fills so many graves, can be surely cured, if not too long neglected. Be wise in time, if you are afflicted with it, and arrest the undermining influence that is sapping your life-blood, and hurrying you to an untimely grave, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a remedy that never fails in its life-giving mission, if taken in time. All druggists.

A sound body and a contented mind are necessary to perfect happiness. If you wish to possess these, cleanse your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is perfectly safe to take, and is a thoroughly reliable, highly concentrated, and powerful blood purifier.

EXCURSION RATES.

A very complete list of tourist round-trip rates and routes to western points for 1888, has just been issued for free distribution by C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. P. M. & M. Ry., St. Paul, Minn.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

PRES. E. F. REID Ohio Central College.—We believe secret societies to be anti-republican as well as anti-Christian.

REV. A. L. CHAPIN, D. D., Beloit.—It has been the uniform policy of Beloit College to exclude secret socities.

ALBERT BARNES, 1849:—Any good cause, I think, can be promoted openly; any secret association is liable, at least, to abuse and danger.

REV. JUSTIN EDWARDS, D D., author and head of Andover Seminary:—Whenever the cause of temperance is veiled in darkness and secrecy, it must lose its hold on the public confidence and sympathy.

REV. M. BENNETT, long presiding elder M. E. church—I am pleased to be counted in for the movement which is being inaugurated against tyrannical organizations and factitious distinctions in society.

DR. THOMAS SCOTT, the great commentator:—Rash oaths are above all things to be avoided; but if men are entangled by them, they ought rather to infringe the sinful oaths than to add sin to sin and ruin to their own souls.

REV. J. C. K MILLIGAN, editor of "Our Banner:"—Through such silence, secret connivance and horrid oaths "ever to conceal and never reveal," the state of our country is rapidly becoming such as to alarm every Christian philanthropist.

REV. B. T. ROBERTS, editor of the Free Methodist:—For us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ.

JOHN G. FEE, Berea College, 1868—It is Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and kindred associations that have spawned and now lend respectability to "Regulators," "Ku Klux Klans," and other bands of midnight assassins now ranging through Kentucky and other portions of the South.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D. D.:—Masonry has damned all who ever trusted in it for salvation. It is now leading away thousands from the church, and from paths of virtue by association with the intemperate, unclean and profane, and is dragging them down the road which leads to the chambers of eternal death.

REV. EDWARD BEECHER, D.D.:—If on such anti-Christian grounds, prayers are framed, rites established and chaplains appointed, ignoring Christ and his intercession, God regards it as a mockery and an insult to himself and his church. In it is revealed the hatred of Satan to Christ. By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted.

REV. W. W. PATTON, D. D., 1869:—However secret societies may differ among themselves, yet they are all anti-republican in their tendencies; and are all leading to the same results, viz., a substitution of worldly and selfish innovations for moral and religious influences, and, ultimately, to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity.

REV. JAMES H. FAIRCHILD, D.D., Pittsburg address:—The point is not that the working of a secret organization may be perverted to selfish ends, but that in its very nature it strongly tends to such perversion. A worthy institution may be perverted, but an institution in which the tendency to perversion is inherent and constitutional, is not a good institution.

REV. DR. JAMES. B. WALKER, author of "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation."—There is probably not one in a thousand who enter the lodge, who know, when blindfolded they take the terrible oaths, that Masonry is an anti-Christ and one of the most powerful enemies of Christ that exists. But this is put beyond the possibility of a doubt by the highest Masonic authorities.

REV. NATHAN BROWN, Editor "Am. Baptist" and missionary to Japan.—If Freemasonry had existed in the days of Christ, and in the same form that it exists with us, he could not have condemned it more distinctly than he did in his Sermon on the Mount: "If ye do good to them that do good to you, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?" The Gospel is at war with every system of clique or clan, caste or combination that seeks to create distinctions in the human family.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1888.

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE is meeting with no opposition, but with general and earnest co-operation by friends of American principles and opponents of the secret sworn despotism of the lodge. For information and blank forms for local leagues, write to W. I. Phillips, at the Cynosure office. The grand excellence of the league is, that it unites all the foes of lodge-despotism and furnishes something for every one to do. Though there should be but ten members in some remote State, they can begin to question candidates and scratch tickets; and, as soon as, and wherever practicable, nominate candidates, and get up electoral tickets of their own, as the right wing of American prohibition.

FRANCES WILLARD'S MOTHER.—We called on this venerable lady at their home in Evanston last week. She first professed Christ with the Freewill Baptists in the State of New York when that Baptist body were the picket-guard of reform; and her husband and herself felt the shudder of that State when it was found that it had societies which murdered their members for violating their by-laws. With the sainted David Marks and others of the same persuasion the Willards were borne to Oberlin as a grand intellectual center of reform, and they joined the Oberlin church with Finney, Mahan, Morgan, Cowles and their associates. Enlarged by discussion, and finding that the furnace of reform made Christians one in Christ, they have since belonged to and worshiped with Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Methodists, when change of residence made it convenient.

This is the religious history of a wonderful mother of a more wonderful daughter. The religion of Mrs. Willard was rocked in the cradle of reform. In 1832 228,000 votes were cast by the people for Wirt and Ellmaker, the Anti-masonic Federal candidates, and the New England Anti-slavery Society was formed by Mr. Garrison the same year. Immense interests hung on the issue whenever slavery was named in a prayer or sermon, and it was impossible for Christians to become worldly while thus antagonizing the world. Mother Willard must be past the allotted three score and ten; but her mind is clear, her countenance calm, and she reminds one of the sun when approaching the horizon, which grows clearer and brighter as it descends.

THE ILLINOIS GENERAL CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION.—This body met at Evanston, last week. The Evanston church has built a costly and beautiful church edifice, and their committee had made all possible arrangements for the comfort and convenience of ministers and delegates, and the ladies provided a sumptuous repast for 400 people in the church parlors on Tuesday evening. The town of Evanston is built up with elegance, and as it is the seat of the Northwestern Methodist University, and lulled by the roar of the clear pure waters of Lake Michigan, the families of Chicago business men find it a rare and attractive place of residence. It is the home, too, of Frances E. Willard and her mother; and seems likely to become the Mecca of woman's suffrage.

The pastor and delegate from Wheaton College Church were received and enrolled without objection; and earnest discussions were had on Sabbath observance, and the phases of the prohibition question. The members of this Association are mostly young and vigorous, well-educated men. Women delegates were received from Rockford and other churches, and judging from its past records and present membership this body will yet become a leader in the cause of Christian reform. The final resolution on prohibition was a compromise, and therefore weak. It was adopted as follows:

"Recognizing in the traffic in intoxicating liquors one of the most efficient causes of poverty, suffering, and crime, and one of the greatest obstacles to the political, social, moral, and spiritual advancement of our people, we pledge ourselves to labor earnestly to secure the most effectual means for prohibiting and abolishing such traffic in this State. We are earnestly opposed to the sanction of such traffic by National or State legislation, and we will use our most earnest efforts as good citizens to remove this prolific source of evil from among us."

—It is proposed in the Christian Nation that contributions be made for a monument or memorial to the memory of Prof. J. R. W. Sloane who died two years ago.

THE IRISH AGAINST THE POPE.

Last week Thursday night a meeting of several thousand well-dressed Irish Catholic men and women assembled in Battery D, Chicago, to protest against the Pope's rescript against boycotting English landlords by Irish peasants. The forty Irish members of the British Parliament have already issued their protest; and the people of Ireland are holding similar meetings all over the island.

Forty-four years ago the Irish people were excited to a similar extent by the eloquence of O'Connell for "The Repeal of the Union," by which, in the year 1800 (eighty-eight years ago), Mr. Pitt abolished the Irish Home Parliament, and joined Ireland to England.

This time it is the Irish against the Pope, and for Home Rule; and the Chicago meeting last week has never been excelled in the importance of its bearings on Irish destiny, or in the wildness of its enthusiasm. The speaking was eloquent and the principle of the speeches one. They professed perfect submission to the Pope in religion, but denounced his interference in politics. Mr. Finerty read English authorities which showed that during the reign of Victoria, 1,225,000 Irish people had died by famine; 4,186,000 had immigrated; and over seventy-five per cent of the whole population had been evicted! He said, "Against these terrible wrongs the peasant had but one recourse, the wild justice of revenge. To avoid this shot-gun revenge, O'Brien, Dillon, and Davitt, had given the people 'the Plan of Campaign,' and the 'Boycott,' which the Pope's rescript inhibits." We give Mr. Finerty's words:

"When we had no papal rescripts in Ireland our nation was a free one. Not until Henry II. came to Ireland with the bull of Pope Adrian IV. did our troubles begin; and from that day to this, we have been tossed from the horns of John Bull to those of the Roman Bull. When one bull got through with us the other began. Now, I say, we have had all we are going to stand of it. (Immense cheers.) God was before the nations; the nations before popes; and God reigns eternally still."

"We stand here to-day to tell Leo XIII. if he wants to reform and save souls, let him send his College of Cardinals to England."...."Let these cardinals see the blackened foundations of the homes of the Irish. Let them look at the graves of our people starved to death; and the emigrant ships carrying away the stream of emigrants."...."While we reverence the faith brought us by Patrick, we cannot surrender our people to be exterminated by a foreign foe."...."No power on earth can sever the love of our people from the cradle of their race. The English could not do it; the Italians cannot do it." (At this point the cheering was so loud and prolonged that the speaker had to pause for some time.) "We tell these Italian gentlemen, if they are so anxious to bring Catholics into the fold, let them begin at home. We do not need their care."

This is a new style of language from Catholics to the Pope. In 1155 Pope Adrian IV. by a bull authorized Henry II. of England to take possession of Ireland on condition of paying an annual tribute, which, of course, was wrung and is still wrung from the Irish. For in England, men die, but taxes are immortal. And Mr. Finerty tells Leo that the Irish were free till they had popes; which is simply historic truth.

What is to be the outcome of this political cyclone? We could easily foretell, if it was not blowing against priestism, which, like thistles, is too supple to break, but will only bend before the blast and scatter and spread its pestilent seeds by the very storm which rends it. The papacy has always, as in this case, collided with the civil interests of men. And, five hundred and eighty years ago, a brave prince, Philip the Fair, defied Pope Boniface, as Finerty now defies Leo XIII. Boniface had issued a bull declaring that "Jesus Christ had granted a two-fold power or sword to the church, a spiritual and temporal, and all who dissented from that doctrine were heretics, and could not be saved." Philip retorted by prosecuting the Pope in his own Curia for "heresy, simony, dishonesty, and other enormities." And when Boniface died, through vexation and anguish, from his rough handling, Philip made a Frenchman pope by the title of Clement V., and removed the seat of the papacy from Rome to Avignon, in France, where it remained seventy years. But popery survived all this and much more: as Mormonism survives the death of Joseph Smith; its conflicting revelations about polygamy; its expulsion from Missouri; and its pilgrimage to Salt Lake.

So this present outburst against the Pope will effect but little while the leaders of the foray acknowledge him as their "spiritual guide." For spirit is more real than matter and will subsist when the material worlds have passed away, and the priest who governs men for eternity will find means to govern them in time. While two hundred and twenty-five thousand Irishmen have been dying of famine, the Pope has drawn a million pounds a year from Ireland in annats and Peter's pence. And the despotism of English landlords, though bad enough, is lighter than down compared with the despotism of priests, aye, of American priests now in our midst. The Romish Bishop held a sort of "spiritual retreat" or institute in Kankakee, Ill., in a school building engaged for that purpose. All the priests of the diocese must attend, except a few left to attend funerals, etc. A young priest who had just returned from that meeting of days told us, among other regulations, that intimate friends were not permitted to speak or exchange greetings as they passed each other in the halls during the sessions of the meeting! In that fearful system the very free agency of inferiors is absorbed into the superior and the subjugation and submission are complete. And those superiors transact the affairs of common concernment in the dense midnight of concealment from all below.

But we know from the Scriptures that this mystic Babylon must fall, and we see by bare inspection that its dissolution is begun. The old Inquisition has lost its teeth; and cases are multiplying, like that of McGlynn, where priests cast off the pope's jurisdiction without loss of life or limb; whereas leaving the Romish communion long endangered both.

The tokens hourly increase of the coming of that hour when the terrific symbols of the fall of the mystic Babylon, the mother of false religions, given in the Apocalypse, shall become realities; when, "in one hour," her "mysteries," "murders" and "sorceries" shall cease. See Rev., chap 18.

While slavery was silently growing, it was silent. But when the Abolitionists, though but a handful of printers in a garret, struck the keynote of its destruction, the ebullition of the whole slave system resembled the tempest which ushered in the fall of ancient Troy, when

> "Through all her summits trembled Ida's woods,
> And from their sources boiled her hundred floods."

Such is this Irish tempest which precedes and presages the fall of popery. The assault made which is awaking this turmoil is the fundamental truth that all worships invented by men in lodges, convents, churches or Mormon temples is Gentile worship, not paid to Christ but to devils. This is the truth which is disturbing devils, producing an overflow of secret worships and public parades in the United States, and everything which promises salvation by ceremonies is astir.

These Irish orators who reverence the Pope as a priest but denounce him as a ruler are putting the people upon a false scent. English aristocracy is bad but popery infinitely worse. The republic of Paraguay in South America, with the finest soil and climate in the world, was founded and held by Jesuits, and the public debt of that republic is now more than the soil of the whole country would sell for! The talk of relieving Ireland while retaining popery is as vain as Mr. Lincoln's project of saving the Union with slavery. But the day of Ireland's deliverance hastens and it is coming from Christ, who wore no priest's tiara, but only a carpenter's frock, till his priestly murderers put on him a king-and-priestly regalia in mockery.

FISK AND BROOKS.

What does their nomination at Indianapolis mean for Americans who vote and pray against the lodge?

Much every way. General Fisk last year in an interview with the Cynosure editor expressed himself in substantial agreement with our reform principles. He is a warm friend of John G. Fee, and in writing assures Mr. Fee that he is not a member of any secret society.

Of Mr. Brooks we know little. He was years ago reported as a Good Templar, and when young lectured against temperance under their auspices. So did Col. Bain and others who now believe the order obsolete and useless and are in favor of all open work. We hope to learn as much of Mr. Brooks. He is a man of great power, and his appearance belies him if he has any love for the secret ways of lodgery.

At the convention were a host of Anti-masons—John G. Fee of Kentucky, Dr. H. A. Thompson and C. M. Strickler of Ohio, Wheelock, Johnston, Mrs. McPherson and others from Washington, Gilley and Reed of Iowa, Loveless and Countryman from Illinois, Wylie and scores more from Indiana, Jordan of Texas, etc., etc.

The memorial approved by the National Association Board was circulated by thousands in the convention as was also Mr. Fee's protest against the nomination of Green Clay Smith because he is a Freemason. These were noticed in the daily press of Indianapolis and Chicago as having a marked effect upon the delegates. Mr. Smith's name was announced withdrawn. These memorials were preserved and read while other bills and circulars littered the floors by the hundred thousand. The speech of Mr. Tate of Tennessee showed the effect of the lodge discussion, and the whole convention felt his words to be true, that this is one of the issues for the nation.

These were some of the encouragements. There were others in a negative way. From the public announcements of Mr. W. T. Mills of his lodge relation; the fact that Mr. Chafin is Grand Chief of the Good Templars of Wisconsin and has written in the Prohibition papers in defense of the lodge against the Cynosure; and the further fact that Mr. Richmond is reported a leader of the same order and was its candidate as successor of John B. Finch as chairman of the National committee—for these and other reasons we have been jealous of their influence, and have preferred that the measures they champion should not succeed if in the interest of the lodge. The Cynosure has given some reasons why it is to be believed that their opposition to woman suffrage is a lodge measure. The list is not exhausted. Their utter and overwhelming defeat at Indianapolis is, therefore, to us of great significance. We believe it is a promise that the Prohibition party will not be controlled by the secret methods or councils of the lodge; and that more and more the friends who support the secret temperance orders will come to see that the great temperance reform requires no longer any such agency—that the orders are, as old Dr. Jewett long ago said, a clog and an injury rather than an aid to this holy cause.

NOTICE.

The Maine Christian Association will meet in a hall in Journal Block, Lisbon St., Lewiston, Me., June 19th, at 9 A M., to continue in session one day, and to be followed by a two-days' holiness convention. Elder S. C. Kimball, of Newmarket, N. H, and other able speakers are expected to be present and address the convention and preach the Gospel. All New England friends who are interested in holiness and reform work are invited to be present. By order of the Executive Committee.

I. D. HAINES, Sec'y.

—To the list of old Anti-masonic papers published last week we may add the Gazette of Erie, Pennsylvania. Bro. Albert Taylor of Wauwatosa, Wisconsin, who called at this office a few days since, used to read it when a boy, his father being a subscriber.

—In a business letter Secretary Stoddard presents the matter of a reading room in the Washington building, which is approved by some of the Washington friends. The location he thinks is excellent, and the class of people likely to be attracted would be such as would seek for some permanent benefit rather than for a place to haunt. There is no public reading room in that part of the city.

—It is quite a disappointment that no report of the excellent Michigan State Convention had been received up to the time of going to press. We learn indirectly that the meeting, though small in numbers, was filled with the Holy Ghost and with his power so that it was felt to be one of the best and most profitable of our reform meetings.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—President C. H. Kiracofe of Hartsville College, is the Prohibition candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction in Indiana.

—Bro. E. R. Worrell of the N. C. A. Board has been assistant pastor at Washington Heights for several months. He has just been invited to undertake the full pastoral work.

—Elder J. L. Barlow, who is for the time being located at Wheaton, preached last Sabbath at Bloomington, Wisconsin. The Sabbath before he was with his old church at Bloomingdale, Ill., to which he ministered some eighteen years ago.

—Elder Freeman of Downer's Grove, near this city, returns this week to scenes of his early labors in Jefferson county, New York. Bro. Freeman feels deeply the loss of his beloved wife who passed hence in March. He may spend much of the summer season with Eastern friends.

—Greetings and welcome were given last week in the office to Dr. T. G. Roberts of Washington, Iowa; Rev. John Lee, author of a work on Romanism; Bro. Alexander Thompson of the National Board; and Rev. L. I. Crawford, editor of the Sandy Lake, Pa., News, who was just returning home from the United Presbyterian General Assembly at Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

and sister J. A. Porter. It surprised me very much to learn that Bro. Porter had been initiated into the order of Knights of Labor. He says the K. of L. is a good thing, but we fear he will be convinced of their secret follies. I attended an exhibition of the free school, Monday evening, at the Macedonia Baptist church. The exercises were very interesting. I am glad to see my race progressing so rapidly in education, but I am sorry to see so many of the young men and women being deceived into these secret orders. I called on the following pastors: Revs. Geo. Holmes, A. Hubbs, L. H. Williams, Chas. Williams, M. Dunlap, Wm. Ellis, John Brown and Z. T. Gayden. Most of these brethren are opposed to lodgery. Rev. Z. T. Gayden, the M. E. church pastor, thinks the minor lodges an injury to the churches, but he thinks the higher lodges all right. I was invited by Rev. L. H. Williams, principal of the town school, to address his students on the benefit of education. I spoke for fifteen minutes. Bro. Williams endorsed what I said and gave a brief illustration of our work. He is entirely in accord with our reform. I preached at St. Peters Baptist church, Rev. Geo. Holmes, pastor, on Tuesday evening.

Secretism seems to have taken a strong hold here the past six months as some of the preachers have been stumping and canvassing for the old lodge rum parties, but thank God we will try and open fire on the secret forts again. I am invited to preach in four of the colored churches here when I return from Clinton. The Cynosures sent here are doing much good, but many more are wanted.

NATIONAL REFORM WORK IN THE WEST.

The Association year just closed has been a busy one with lecturers of the National Reform Association. Four of us have given our whole time to the work, and three others have given such time as their other duties would allow. The Cynosure readers are so much interested in the progress of this movement, that I send the following report of my last year's work.

After attending the Lake Bluff Convocation of W. C. T. U. and Prohibition workers, I made two extended lecture tours through Wisconsin, and one through Michigan, and attended the joint convention of W. C. T. U. and National Reform workers at Lake Side, Ohio. During the fall and winter, I made a lecture tour in Illinois, and one in Minnesota, three in Iowa, and one in Missouri. Altogether I have lectured and preached 215 times, and on Sabbath evening usually to large audiences at union services. I lectured during the year in nine colleges, and at fourteen conventions and conferences. The voluntary collections taken at these meetings amounted to $597.06. My expenses, including railroad fare, hotel bills and postage, amounted to $253.19, or about $20 a month.

I have written 97 articles for the press, but my strength has been mainly employed in reaching the people through lectures and sermons. Nearly all these were arranged by the W. C. T. U. This great reform organization, with its 10,000 local organizations, and its 200,000 members, is admirably adapted to do all kinds of reform work. They were born of the spirit of prayer and devotion to moral reform, and working for the home versus the saloon, and their freedom from party ambition, and political intrigue, makes them the most reliable and efficient reform organization. In co-operating with them, they arrange for my lectures, provide for my entertainment, and give a collection for the National Reform cause. I allow no fees or tickets of admission, for this shuts out many that I want to reach.

My object has been to stir the public conscience on questions of moral reform. My main theme has been the Prohibition and the Sabbath questions, considered from the standpoint of the divine law. My lectures on "Bible Politics" and "Dangers which threaten the Republic," which I give most frequently, contain warnings against the influence of secret societies. I emphasize the dangerous example of the government in substituting the will of the people for the law of Christ, in ignoring the law of the Sabbath, and in legalizing the liquor traffic. These are the greatest obstacles in the way of moral reform.

What a wonderful experience one gets in this National Reform work, sleeping in so many beds, eating at such a variety of tables, meeting so many new friends, interviewing so many brainy preachers and editors, speaking before so many audiences and visiting so many colleges. But the time is short. These are crucial years. As the waters of Niagara go plunging down the rapids, so events in these years go leaping toward some grand revolution.

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1888.

The talk at the capital on Monday was Judge Thurman, of Ohio, and the Vice Presidency. Some few members thought that the sudden prominence given to Mr. Thurman's name meant a cut-and-dried convention. In other words, that the President has said he would like Mr. Thurman on the ticket and that the convention would act accordingly. "The office of Vice President would not confer any additional honor on him," said Representative Campbell, of Ohio, and it does seem that Mr. Thurman's latest famous remark that "all he cared for now was a seat in heaven," would prove that he had gone entirely out of politics.

All is not well with the tariff bill. It will have a hard time if it gets through, and will come out, if it comes at all, in a battered condition. Doubtless the Democrats of the House, however, are tolerably well satisfied with their work as it is. In its main features the bill seems to be an acceptable measure. Naturally amendments are desired to suit particular localities, but even if these do cause delay and controversy, or even if the bill does not pass at the present session, it cannot be denied that the revenue reformers have done more in the direction suggested by the President's message, than has been done in many years.

The latest bill introduced by Senator Blair, regulates the observance of the Sabbath. It prohibits any corporation or person from performing any duty on that day, except works of necessity. It shall not be lawful for any person to receive pay for services rendered on that day; no mails shall be collected or transported except such letters as concern the life, health or peace of some one, and the Postmaster-General shall supply special deliveries for the same. He also proposes to amend the pool-selling bill, to extend its provisions so as to prevent betting of every kind in the whole District of Columbia. The present bill prohibits betting only in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and of course the people have only to go across the city boundaries to patronize the pool-rooms still.

It must be regretted that the much-needed effort of the New Hampshire Senator is likely to be like seed by the wayside. The men whom the people send here for their lawmakers do not often fairly represent the religious ideas of their constituents, and do not scruple to have their fun at the expense of serious subjects. For instance, the Legislative Appropriation bill proposed to increase the Chaplain's salary from $900 to $1,000. Browne of Indiana inquired if there was increased necessity for prayer. Springer, of Illinois, replied that members had no idea what great power was required to bring salvation to such a body as the House of Representatives. Grosvenor suggested that if the increase be made it should not be a permanent thing, because the next House would not need so much praying as the present one. Another flippant member, Strube, of Iowa, wanted to know if it was necessary to have a very able man for Chaplain. Another equally flippant member from Michigan answered that it always took a high order of ability to deal with an immature mind; therefore he thought the House Chaplain should be a man of considerable ability. Holman, of Indiana, said $10 a day was to much for the House to pay for prayer, and the majority voted with him to this effect.

Washington has always been the political center of the country, but within the last fortnight it became the center religiously. We had all the Baptists in the country here (speaking extravagantly) for about ten days. Then Dr. Bullock was made Moderator of the Southern Presbyterian Assembly. Dr. Leonard of Washington was elected a bishop in the Episcopal church. Dr. Newman, General Grant's former pastor here, was made a bishop in the Methodist church, and the interests of the entire Catholic church of the world were centered in the laying of the corner stone of the Divinity school of their new university here on last Thursday. *

The Senate Committee on Agriculture has decided to make a favorable report on the bill introduced by Senator George, of Mississippi, to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and make the head of that Department a member of the Cabinet. It is the same bill that the Senate passed during the last Congress.

THE HOME.

LABOR IS WORSHIP.

Pause not to dream of the future before us,
Pause not to weep the wild cares that come o'er us,
  Hark! how creation's deep musical chorus,
  Unintermitting goes up into heaven!
Never the ocean wave falters in flowing;
Never the little seed stops in its growing;
More and more richly the rose-heart keeps glowing,
  Till from its nourishing stem it is riven.

"Labor is worship," the robin is singing;
"Labor is worship," the wild bee is ringing.
Listen! that eloquent whisper upspringing,
  Speaks to thy soul from out nature's great heart;
From the dark cloud flows the life-giving shower;
From the rough sod blows the soft-breathing flower;
From the smallest insect, the rich coral bower;
  Only man in the plan shrinks from his part.

Labor is life! 'Tis the still water faileth;
Idleness ever despaireth, bewaileth;
Keep the watch wound, for the dark rust assaileth;
  Flowers droop and die in the stillness of noon.
Labor is glory! The flying cloud lightens;
Only the waving wind changes and brightens;
Idle hearts only the dark future frightens;
  Play the sweet keys wouldst thou keep them in tune!

Labor is rest from the sorrows that greet us;
Rest from the petty vexations that meet us;
Rest from sin promptings that ever entreat us;
  Rest from the world-sirens that lure us to ill.
Work, and pure slumbers shall wait on thy pillow;
Work, thou shalt ride over care's coming billow.
Lie not down wearied 'neath woe's weeping-willow;
  Work with a stout heart and resolute will!

Labor is health! lo, the husbandman reaping;
How through his veins goes the life-current leaping;
How his strong arm in its stalwart pride sweeping,
  True as a sunbeam the swift sickle guides.
Labor is wealth! in the sea the pearl groweth,
Rich the queen's robe from the frail cocoon floweth;
From the fine acorn the strong forest bloweth;
  Temple and statue the marble block hides.

Droop not; though shame, sin and anguish are round thee,
Bravely fling off the cold stain that hath bound thee!
Look to yon pure heaven smiling beyond thee.
  Rest not content in thy darkness—a clod!
Work for some good be it ever so slowly;
Cherish some flower be it ever so lowly;
Labor! for labor is noble and holy;
  Let thy good deeds be prayers to thy God.

RELIGIOUS RITES IN MEXICO.

BY MRS. H M. BISSELL, MISSIONARY.

Pueblo ceremonies are often quite different from observances in the city and bear quite striking testimony to the charge that those who planted Catholicism here only adapted it to and engrafted it on the former heathen worship of the native Indians.

For example, during December there is held a feast of the Virgin for a week. Part of the ceremonies consist of a "danza" executed by six or seven men, fantastically attired, with headband stuck full of feathers, etc. They pass along the street, one bearing a flag and all keeping time to a low, weird strain from some sort of a stringed instrument, meanwhile uttering low cries and whirling themselves about in a curious fashion. On the church grounds they continue the exercises. There is a huge old building formerly used as a monastery. Since the laws of the "Reforma" have abolished such institutions, it is kept out of the hands of the government by a nominal occupation. Within it is an image of the Virgin and her gorgeous trosseau—also the Virgin's cat; all of which must be tenderly cared for. So a company of five men each year enter an obligation to spend a week at a time in turn, living in the building to care for it and its treasures.

This cat is a real flesh and blood animal—no humbug about her. She has a fine cradle in which she is exhibited on state occasions, decorated with flowers and ribbons. She is daintily fed, and, like the King of England, never dies. In this building chiefly the feast of the Virgin was held.

In January is the celebration of the Three Wise Men. Three men go about the streets wearing masks and tinsel-trimmed garments, apparently half crazy. They represent the Magi, who became insane for joy at seeing the infant Christ.

The week before Lent is crowded with dances and weddings, attended with more or less finery and feasting, according to the resources of the bridegroom (which will include both cash and credit); for it is his task to furnish not only the eatables and drinkables but the outfit of the bride and also of her god-mother, who, dressed like the bride, now officiates as bridesmaid.

Then comes Ash Wednesday, when the devotees go to church and receive in their foreheads the mark of moist ashes, an emblem of penitence, and the feast of Lent is begun. During the forty days that follow, scarcely more than the noonday meal is eaten, and on Thursday and Friday no meat is allowed. During the last part, Holy Week, the scenes of the last days of the Saviour's life are enacted, washing the feet of the disciples (though they wash only one foot), the last supper, the arrest, trial, crowning with thorns, and even the crucifixion. In some places a man is actually suspended on the cross. In others a figure with movable limbs serves, and after being taken down is placed in a coffin and remains in the church an object of veneration for a year, surrounded with candles from noon of Friday till 10 o'clock Saturday morning. The "Gloria" is said to be shut up, and in city or pueblo no bell is heard, their place being supplied by a wooden affair which makes a hideous noise, and is jocosely said to be grinding the bones of Judas.

At the hour for letting out the "Gloria" begins a great clamor of bells, and innumerable effigies of Judas are burned. These are rude paper images, large and small, body and limbs made of explosives. They are hung upon lines stretched across the street, and are touched off to the great glee of the crowd of spectators. Shouts and screams greet the whirling figures as they begin to explode. Thus practically ends as a farce what should be a tender, solemn occasion. The glorious Resurrection day has apparently no recognition except as the great market day of the year, an occasion for a brilliant promenade; and this is typical of their religion. The truth they have is perverted to extravagance and superstition so that it has not, nor is it expected to have, any effect in bettering their lives or leading them to the Son of God.

On Easter day began a cock-fight, which was to continue every afternoon for eight days, but had to close Thursday because the poor things were all killed, and they must wait till more could be brought in. Probably there were not less than fifty victims.

Monday morning again began the din of weddings; a troupe of acrobats arrived, and so the days went on as if trying to obliterate every serious impression. Holy Thursday is a great market day for the native ware made in Guadalajara. Sixteen cartloads, besides uncounted loads brought on donkeys and men's backs, filled the market place and made a lively scene. This was repeated on a smaller scale two weeks later on Sabbath. These two are the only times in the year that the ware is sold except in the stores and at an advertised price.

A very high and steep mountain near the pueblo is surmounted by a large wooden cross. In the last week of April it is brought down and lodged in the house opposite ours, whose owner is its patroness. May 3rd it will be decorated with a rosary of flowers; carried to church, where mass will be said; then it will be blessed and returned to its mountain, accompanied by a crowd of the faithful who thus gain an indulgence. Mr. Bissell and I made an ascent of the mountain early one morning. It required one and a half hours hard climbing, including a few breathing spells. Much of the way is as steep as stairs, yet it becomes a cornfield a month hence.

MOHAMMEDAN DEVOTION.

The editor of the Christian Standard of Cincinnati has been traveling in Europe, Africa and Palestine during the winter and spring, and is writing a series of articles for his paper. In a late one we find these statements about the heroic devotion of the Mohammedan teachers and preachers to their work:

"And this leads us to speak of the Mohammedan University, the Gami el Azhar mosque being used for that purpose. It is claimed that 10,000 students attend here. This is probably an exaggeration; there are, we judge, about 7,000. The students remain from three to six years. They pay no fees, being supported by an annual subsidy from the endowments of the mosque—though it cannot cost much to maintain them in their style of living. The professors receive no salary, but support themselves by outside work. Ye Christian educators who complain of slender support, see what self-sacrifice Mohammedan enthusiasm begets! Go into this building. You will see hundreds of little children busy in copying sentences from the Koran; and youths and grown men squatting in circles on the stone floor, listening to lectures on theology, law, logic, poetry, or studying Arabic grammar; or swaying to and fro as they study their lessons and prepare for recitation. They have no chairs, no desks, no anything but books. When they are through with their studies and are weary, you will find them probably stretched on the stone floor asleep, wrapped in their robes, and their heads resting on a block of wood or stone for a pillow! And their instruction is largely in the Koran, or in a few side studies to enable them to explain and defend and propagate it. And then they go out to preach it, barefooted, moneyless, ill-clad, but fired with an enthusiasm for Islamism which makes it a joy to give their life in its advocacy and defense. And, from this one center hundreds are continually going out to propagate and support the religion of the Prophet. Think of that, ye candidates for the Christian ministry, who are continually mourning over your hard fate! A tithe of the fervent enthusiasm of these disciples of Mohammed would enable the Christian ministry to shake the world with the might of their advocacy."

PATTY'S CABBAGE.

Grandmother Eaton sat in her easy chair knitting. Her old hands were twisted and knotted from years of hard work, and seemed not to belong with her satin dress and lace cap and her luxuriant room. They were busy still from the long habit of work, and were weaving in and out the white wool which was growing into some fleecy covering for the pretty head which nestled caressingly at her side.

"Grandma," said the little girl, presently, "please tell me that nice story of your coming to Colorado, and of the first start you made toward making your fortune."

"Why, dear, you've heard that story time and again," answered grandmamma.

"But I feel just like hearing you tell it again tonight. So please, grandmamma, do."

"Well, well," said grandmamma, "it is a rather good story I think myself. It was long ago before you were born, when your mother was about fourteen years old—just your age. Gold had been found in Colorado, and that same year your grandpa lost everything we had, so we determined to try our fortune out here. We sold our furniture for enough to pay our traveling expenses, and give us a little after we reached here. Everything but our bedding. 'Keep your bedding, Marie,' my mother said. She had rather a mania for collecting sheets and blankets. So I kept two beds and all my sheets and spreads, and Aunt Sarah, good soul, presented me with five new patchwork quilts, which she had been years in making, and mother gave me seven pairs of blankets, and had two pieces of sheeting made up for me. So I may safely say that we had more bedding than any family that came here. Your grandpa was quite horrified at our taking so much, but mother paid the cost of our boxes to Fort Independence.

"Here we bought our wagon and put all the bedding in the bottom, and as we had not much of anything else, we had room for it. 'Don't know what we will ever do with it all,' said grandpa.

"'Dress up in them, when our clothes wear out,' said Patty to mother. 'Can't you fancy me arrayed in one of Aunt Sarah's quilts; the one with the yellow calico orange and the green leaves, for instance?' She could always joke her father into a good humor, and in those days he was very much depressed. He felt troubled at taking us over such a hard journey and to such a rough life.

"Well, we tucked all that bedding in the bottom of our wagon—we had no thought then of what use we really should put it to before we got through with it—and started on our journey. It was three months before we reached Denver, then only a mining camp. Grandpa at once pre-empted his one hundred and sixty acres and put up a little shanty for us to live in. Then he began washing for gold; he found but little, barely making day's wages. 'The thing that would pay best here,' he said one day, 'would be to grow something to eat.'

"They were just finding out that with irrigation the plains were productive. Food was prodigiously high. Nearly everything was carted across the plains, and of course it was worth a great deal of money by the time it reached us. So in one of your grandpa's times of discouragement about gold, he dug some ditches and arranged to supply several acres of our land with water. Then he plowed and harrowed quite a large piece of ground; made it ready for our garden. But we could only get cabbage seed. However, Patty and I were not discouraged. We made a bed and planted these. They came up wonderfully, and we had a fine lot of plants. I don't think any flower garden we ever had afterwards gave us the pleasure those plants did. It was so pleasant to see something that looked like home growing, in place of buffalo grass and the cactus.

"But how hard we worked over them! Patty and I had it all to do, for grandpa had nothing ahead and felt compelled to make his day's wages. We lifted the plants from the bed and put them in straight rows—then the hoeing and the weeding! I can remember now how tired we used to get over those cabbages. 'Seems to me that all the world is nothing but a cabbage patch,' said Patty. It was the first hard work we had ever done. You cannot understand how fond we became of those cabbages. Every morning before breakfast Patty would run out to see how much they had grown in the night.

"But soon there came rumors of grasshoppers. They were across the range, some said; others that they were hatching in the lower mountains. Not much was known of them, only that they destroyed every green thing they lighted upon. 'O dear, our cabbages!' said Patty. One morning she came running into the house: 'They've come! They're in the next field,' she cried excitedly.

"'What!' I exclaimed in terror, 'the Indians?' for we lived in more or less fear of the Indians all the time in those days.

"'No,' she said, 'not Indians—grasshoppers!' She threw herself down on a low stool, clasping her hands and thinking. Patty had the brightest, bravest spirit I ever knew. It had to be a close corner that she could see no way out of! 'I know what we will do! The patchwork quilts!'

"I caught at her idea, and in a moment we were covering those blessed cabbages with quilts, sheets, spreads, blankets, everything there was in the house. Even grandpa's Sunday hat, and my best bonnet, were turned over cabbage heads, and every old hat of Patty's was used in the same way. We worked until we were out of breath, nor were we a moment too soon. As we stood looking at our garden and regretting that a small portion of it must remain uncovered, we heard a whirr of wings and saw a dark cloud arise from the next field; in a moment more they were settling down upon our land. We watched the great army feed, and the rapidity with which every green thing disappeared before them was something marvelous. We nervously watched them lest they should bite the blankets even, and not until we saw that this was impossible could we laugh heartily over two or three old fat fellows who were trying to eat the yellow oranges and the green leaves of Aunt Sarah's best bed-quilt.

"When grandpa heard that the grasshoppers had come he hurried home to comfort Patty, for he knew how she would feel to lose her cabbages. As he neared the place and saw the array of bedclothes and hats and bonnets and dresses covering the garden, and the discomfited grasshoppers hanging around outside of it, he stopped in amazement. 'Whew!' he said, 'if that little girl of mine hasn't got more wit than a—well, than a grasshopper, I'll give it up.'

"So our cabbages were saved and they were the only green thing saved in that region. Before the winter was over we had realized nearly nine hundred dollars from them. There were so scarce that nobody thought of buying a whole cabbage at a time—they took a half or a quarter of one, and the gold dust was weighed out for it. There was not much money here in circulation those days.

"We took that money, 'Patty's money,' we called it, and bought more land adjoining ours.

"Next year your grandpa gave up washing for gold, and devoted himself to the garden. Your mother and I worked with him, for there was nobody to hire even if we had the money to pay for the labor. So we worked on, holding on to our land, and each year making a little more than a living. The people gave up hunting here for gold, and began to build houses, and Denver became the point from which supplies were drawn for the mountain camp in the mountains. Finally the railroad reached here, and since this city has come into existence."

"And the banks stand where you grew the cabbages?" said Edith.

"Yes; and handsome blocks of houses where your mother used to hoe, and weed, and play."

"And grandpa and father and mother all died before the fortune came," said Edith regretfully.

"Yes; your mother died just after you were born, and your father and grandpa a few months after. None of them knew anything but hard work; but we were happy together when we sat down to rest in the evening with our few books and papers."

"Yes; you all worked hard, grandmamma, and I reap the benefit. I dare say their hands looked as yours do—while, look at mine!" And she placed her soft tapered fingers beside the crippled old ones.

"I am ashamed of mine," she said. "Grandmamma," she added, "when you get to the gates of heaven, just show them your hands and they'll let you in!"

Grandmamma only smiled at her odd conceit.—Wide Awake.

MOODY AS A TEMPERANCE WORKER.

Mr. Moody, in returning recently from an evangelistic tour to his home in Northfield, Mass., found the town in danger of going for license. He went into the campaign with heart and soul, and the no-license majority was chiefly due to him. The Springfield Republican says of his efforts:

"After making an earnest appeal to the voters a day or two before town-meeting, he followed up his preaching with practice. Up bright and early election day, he drove about town all day long, tiring out several horses in drumming up the voters. His frank, pushing, business-like way and honesty of purpose, has made him a favorite with the Irishmen of the town, and among the drinking men he was particularly busy in importuning them to so vote that the doors of temptation would not be legally thrown open before them. His zeal and energy were simply irresistible, and he went through the town like a tornado. While the license men were hovering about the town-hall trying to make votes, Moody was driving men in from the highways and hedges, first having sent them on their way with a pleasant chat, a practical appeal, and his cheery 'God bless you,' of course victory was assured. Mr. Moody was not in the hall when the result was declared, but a glib Hibernian, who loves Mr. Moody, and his cider, too, arose and called out: 'Mr. Chairman, I move the thanks of this town to the Honorable Mister Moody,' a motion that, of course, brought down the house."

A SUICIDE'S LAST WORDS.

A man was run over and killed on the Troy and Boston Railroad, near Valley Falls, his body being horribly mutilated; near him was found the following:

"This paper I leave on the road near where my body will be found. I have selected this place because the curve is large, and I cannot be seen until it is too late to stop the engine. Thus I shall go out of the world with a rush! I have fortified myself with some forty-rod whisky, which I got at the Hollow, where may be found some more of the same sort. Whoever finds my dead body and this paper, will know who I am. Send my personal effects to my wife, Gertrude Nutting, Sansingburg. I did this by my own hand. Rum is the cause. I have but one regret; that is my wife; for she has been a wife to me in every sense of the word; but I cannot live any longer. So now, farewell to the world. FRANK NUTTING.

"I write this on the top of the rail. Bury me in my clothes, as I am; I am not worthy of a shroud or coffin. I have twenty-five cents in my vest pocket. Send that and the other things to my wife as before directed. I have a brother at Johnsville. I hope he will shed one tear in my memory, and then let me be forgotten! Father—I wish I could live to fulfill your hopes and wishes, but I cannot! Oh, rum! rum! rum!"—Sel.

THE METHODISTS AGAINST THE SALOON.

FROM THE BISHOP'S ADDRESS, 1888.

From the beginning, Methodism has borne testimony against tippling-houses and dram-drinking. At an early day our church took advanced ground in favor of total abstinence, and our preachers were among the first in the field contending for the legal suppression of the liquor traffic. It gives us pleasure to note that indications abound that our people occupy no doubtful position on this subject, and will hold no second place in the pending struggles for constitutional prohibition. The liquor traffic is so pernicious in all its bearings, so inimical to the interests of honest trade, so repugnant to the moral sense, so injurious to the peace and order of society, so hurtful to the homes, to the church and to the body politic, and so utterly antagonistic to all that is precious in life, that the only proper attitude toward it for Christians is that of relentless hostility. It can never be legalized without sin. No temporary device for regulating it can become a substitute for prohibition. License, high or low, is vicious in principle and powerless as a remedy.

THE DISCIPLINE.

The discussion of the report of the committee on temperance in the late General Conference was completed by the passage of the following resolution which was ordered placed in the Discipline of 1888:

"We are unalterably opposed to the enactment of laws that propose, by license taxing, or otherwise, to regulate the drink traffic, because they provide for its continuance and afford no protection against its ravages. We hold that the proper attitude of Christians toward the traffic is one of uncompromising opposition, and while we do not presume to dictate to our people as to their political affiliations, we do express the opinion that they should not permit themselves to be controlled by party organizations that are managed in the interests of the liquor traffic. We advise the members of our church to aid in the enforcement of such laws as do not legalize or indorse the manufacture and sale of intoxicants to be used as beverages; and to this end we must favor the organization of law and order leagues wherever practicable. We proclaim as our motto 'Voluntary total abstinence from all intoxicants' as the true ground of personal temperance; and complete legal prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating drinks as the duty of civil government."

ANTI-SALOON POLITICS.

There are apparently two parties in this country, the one for and the other against the saloon. That the latter is the larger and more respectable one admits of no doubt. Its weakness and inefficiency is due to the fact that its members cannot harmonize upon any general plan of action, and that the factions hate each other worse than they despise the saloon. Prohibition, anti-saloon, local option, high license, and limitation of the number of saloons, each have their advocates and champions. Massachusetts is trying the last idea and a bill has passed the State Senate limiting saloons in Boston to one for each 500 of population, and in the State to one for each 1,000 inhabitants. This project will compel the toper to tramp a little farther for his drink, but it provides ample accommodations for him when he gets there.

There is one plan of license that might be tried probably with success. Why not compel a man to have a license to purchase, as well as the vender one to sell, liquor? There is no patent right in this idea, and any State not yet committed to prohibition, high license, no license, local option, or limitation, is welcome to adopt and try it. It would serve to confuse State politics a little more, but that may be desirable.—Chicago Daily News.

SCARE THEM.

All New Hampshire liquor-dealers have had a scare. Some of them have not only smelled the battle afar, but have felt its hard shot crashing into their midst. The legislature passed a "Nuisance Law" last year. Among public nuisances were liquor saloons, or any place for the illegal sale of liquor, also gambling dens and houses of ill-fame. Any twenty legal voters have the right to bring in a petition setting forth specified facts in this law, the county solicitors are enjoined to receive these and prosecute the cases, and the Supreme Court has jurisdiction in equity. This Nuisance Law thus made it possible for any twenty righteous men to make it hot for a rumseller, and in Manchester and Concord the atmosphere has been very warm. New Hampshire is a prohibition State, but public sentiment in some localities has blocked the wheels of the law. As an illustration, in the beautiful old town of Portsmouth, beer and rum have rioted as freely as if there were no special law against saloons within a hundred miles. It looks as if a day of judgment was coming for some folks.—Intelligencer.

The liquor traffic is an organized and law-protected nuisance! The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that any State has the constitutional right to declare it a nuisance.

The Grand Jury of Cook county in which Chicago is included, two months ago reported to the honorable Court that of all the cases of murder and manslaughter which they had examined, the leading cause of them all (except one) came directly from the saloons. With the large number of such horrors as there have been lately, the people are sure to lose their last mite of patience with any administration, municipal, State or national, that refuses to grapple with the destroyer, and deliver the imperiled. The dethronement of the demijohn cannot be accomplished in a day. But something toward it needs to be done every day, until it is entirely done away.—Rev. Dr. Withrow in the Advance.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON XII. Second Quarter.—June 17.

SUBJECT.—The Great Commission.—Matt. 28: 16-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord gave the word; great was the company of those who published it.—Psa. 68: 11.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Meeting with the Disciples. vs. 16, 17. Among the five hundred who assembled on this mountain-top in Galilee were all shades of temperament, all varieties of spiritual experience. It is not strange that among them should be some doubting Thomases, and this recording of the fact in Matthew's narrative is one of its highest proofs of genuineness. Doubt is not necessarily skepticism, and all "honest doubt" is to be respected. But the people who are fond of quoting Tennyson's famous phrase usually forget the prime essential to honest doubt, —that there should be an honest man behind it—one who will neither deceive himself nor others, who will keep his mind open to the truth and stand ready to welcome her, come in what guise she may. An honest doubter, unlike the mere skeptic, no more thinks of priding himself on his doubts than he would on a physical infirmity. One is humble; conscious of his weakness and ignorance; the other is "is proud, knowing nothing." Our Lord comes to us now, not in bodily form, but in the persons of his poor, to whom we can minister, or of some righteous cause that we can defend. Do not let us be doubting Thomases, letting slip the opportunities which are as the hem of his garment, vanishing forever if we refuse to recognize them by an earnest hold. May we rather join that great host who are battling for truth against every form of wrong and evil and injustice, and at the head of the line we shall always see our Captain.

2. The Ground of Christian Courage. vs. 18. Ruskin says than virtue, traced to its Latin derivation, means literally nerve, vital courage, and that "the essential idea of real virtue is that of a vital human strength." Ruskin is right. Virtue is no negative quality; it is a positive one. No man or woman is truly virtuous who is not truly courageous, who would not stand against the world, if need be, rather than give up a principle. But how is poor, weak human nature to get this virtue or this courage? How did the martyrs get it? How did Paul or Luther or any who have dared and sacrificed for Truth's sake? They served an all-powerful Saviour. It is lack of trust that breeds panic. Perfect faith means perfect courage. When we realize that we serve One unto whom all power is given both in heaven and in earth, neither Satan nor the world can do anything to disturb our peace. More backbone is the great need of Christians. It is the mission of the church to reform abuses, to put down wrong, and always and everywhere to lift up her voice against iniquity. Why are her ministers so often "dumb dogs?" Because they believe more in the power of man to hurt than in the power of Christ to defend. For the same reason men are afraid to renounce the lodge after they have been convinced of its anti-Christian tendencies. They fear loss of reputation or injury to their business; whereas, if they fully believed this wonderful declaration they would be willing to leave business, reputation, even life itself, in his hands. This is the trouble with many so-called temperance men who vote for high license, because, they say, entire prohibition is impossible. If they all believed with their hearts in this omnipotent King Christ, they would all unite at our next Presidential election to bring in his reign by electing a man who represents Christian principle, instead of one who represents only political chicanery. They pray, "Thy kingdom come," while this lack of faith is all the while hindering and delaying that kingdom.

3. The Divine Commission. vs 19, 20. It is natural that the church which believes this inspiring truth will be a missionary church. She will know neither color-line nor caste-line, nor will she teach the commandments or traditions of men, but the pure, unadulterated Gospel. And in the great conflict between light and darkness, with the promise of our Lord to be with us all the days, why should the weakest Christian fear for the result?

"To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

FROM THE CENTER OF ASIA MINOR.

HOPEFUL MISSIONARY WORK.

Bro. G. H. Gregorian, a student at Wheaton and Chicago Theological Seminary, who returned a few months since to his native Armenia as a missionary, writes the following interesting letter:

YOZGAT, Asia Minor, May 1, 1888.

The following lines I desire to address to my many friends in America through the Christian Cynosure.

MY DEAR FRIENDS:—To keep up our acquaintance and gain interest and sympathy afresh with our work and with the missionary work at large, I borrow a few minutes from my pressing duties to write you a few lines.

Starting from Boston on Jan. 5th across the Atlantic, through England and France, then sailing from Marseilles to Constantinople, my traveling has been both safe and pleasant. The rest of the journey, though hindered a little on account of winter, was also pleasant. After paying a short visit to my home, I am already at Yozgat at my work.

This work is hopeful, having already signs of progress and promise of greater things for the future. The people received me cordially. They crowd into our meetings to listen to the words of life with almost breathless interest, preaching falling on them like rain on a parched ground. We have two prayer-meetings during the week which meet with sun-rise. The people attend these meetings in great numbers and take part in the services. The interest is such, that not a minute during the whole hour is lost. All run like a continuous flow.

I am much pleased with our friends outside, who sympathize with us, especially in our school enterprise. There are many outside of our church and congregation that know and respect the truth, and glory in its triumph. Of this class, I met the most interesting one last Sabbath. He is an intelligent Turkish teacher, from a noble family. He both has learned the truth respecting Christ and his salvation, and earnestly seeks for further light. As I spoke to him about Christ being our only righteousness, at the conviction his eyes looked brighter, and I felt the thrill of his heart, as he shook my hand warmly.

Our school-work is most encouraging. It is approved by the annual meeting of the ministers and missionaries to have a high school opened at Yozgat, the expenses to be paid half and half from Board and people. We have already the assurance given to us from both sources to supply the necessary needs for starting the school and am now making preparations for the work. The number of students has increased from 30 to 80 since the coming of our new teacher, and we hope for an increase in future even in greater proportions.

The work is hopeful, and the harvest is ripe in all directions, but our enemy is in our own midst. So long neglect of the work, the contentions of some wicked ones in the church has injured the work and its influence to the outsiders. And now I hear that the brother, who tried to bewitch the brethren, is coming this spring. His coming may prove a damage to the work on account of the ignorance of the people in regard to the different denominations; and especially, the disposition of the man and his friends to raise strife and contentions in the church: thus giving a chance to our adversary to have an advantage over us. The wounds that our Lord receives from his own people are often most painful. Brethren, pray for me and for the work of the Master at this place.

It will be refreshing to hear from my friends, sealing their interest and sympathy with their occasional letters. Yours sincerely, G. H. GREGORIAN.

Address Yozgat, Asia Minor, via Constantinople.

—The Methodist General Conference closed its sessions Thursday at New York. The bishops were empowered to appoint any commissions not provided for. Japan was empowered to organize a church of its own, and a resolution appointing a commission to prepare a plan for insurance of church property was passed.

—William Taylor is no longer alone in the enjoyment of the distinction of being a missionary bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church. The General Conference has elected Dr. James Mills Thoburn missionary bishop, for India and Malasia. He was 23 years old when sent to India as a missionary. When elected bishop Dr. Thoburn was a Presiding Elder of the Bengal Conference. He has been in the United States some months busily preaching and preparing for the conference which sends him back to India with an increase of labor and responsibility. One pleasing fact in relation to his election is his long intimacy and co-operation in India with William Taylor, the other missionary bishop.

—Rev. S. P. Halliday, for twenty-two years pastoral helper of Henry Ward Beecher, has resigned. The deacons of Plymouth church will probably pension the superannuated preacher.

—A resolution was unanimously adopted at the meeting yesterday of the Congregationalists' State Association, at Evanston, censuring Secretary Vilas' methods in conducting the Indian office.

—The Reformed Presbyterian Synod meeting at Allegheny City elected Rev. Dr. J. W. Sproull moderator. The forenoon of Thursday was consumed by a discussion of the report of the committee on union with the United Presbyterian church. The decision was unanimous on the point that the church cannot unite with the United Presbyterian church. In the afternoon the regular order of business was the hearing of reports of national reform and secret societies.

—The greatest and most successful revival movement ever known in the Northwest, says the Independent, has just been concluded in St. Paul. Minn., after a month's vigorous work. Six Presbyterian, six Methodist, four Baptist, four Congregational and two Evangelical Association churches were united in the movement, under the direction of Messrs. Munhall and Towner. Fully 2,000 persons publicly confessed conversion; of these 1,363 gave in their names and declared their church preferences, 370 were for the Methodist Episcopal; 356, Presbyterian; 176, Baptist; 103, Congregational; 82, Lutheran; 53, Episcopal; 40, Catholic; 58, Evangelical Association; 35, miscellaneous; and 70, none in particular.

—The McAll meetings in Paris have a total attendance of about 43,000. The American McAll Association raised the past year nearly $39,000 for the work.

—There is in China on every hand a growing and marked willingness to hear and to assent to the truth of Christ. This is evidence that the good lesson is pervading the people, and that in due time multitudes of them will accept the Gospel. Although all Japan seems turning toward Christianity, yet it is interesting to see that such is the vastness of the field, and the great number of mission stations and out-stations in the Chinese Empire, that the slow increments of China, still equal or even exceed the rapid ones of Japan, the yearly accessions here being a little in advance of theirs. The whole number of communicants in China is now over 32,000 while those in Japan are over 19,000. In each country over four thousand were added during 1887.

—The American Tract Society, at its last anniversary, reported a year of successful work. A hundred and ninety-four colporteurs were employed.

—Rev. C. Purington, of Irving Park, Ill., has a new plan for Christian union. Denominations, he says, will not give up their organization to unite with other bodies, but it is possible, he thinks, to overcome the difficulty by instituting an organic Christian fellowship. This would interfere with no honorable Christian's privilege. The growth of organic Christian fellowship would ultimately overpower denominational barriers. Mr. Purington has prepared a form of constitution for Christian fellowships.

—Dr. Donald Frazer says there are more Presbyterian congregations in France than in Ireland, and more in Wales than in either. There are 1,500 in the Netherlands, 2,000 in Hungary, while the church is well represented in Belgium, Bohemia, Moravia, Spain, Italy and Switzerland. The principal Dutch church at the Cape of Good Hope is Presbyterian, and in Australia and New Zealand, in Persia, India, China, Japan, and the New Hebrides, there are either Presbyterian churches or Presbyterian missions; while in the United States and Canada there are 13,000 congregations connected with the church.

—The American Bible Society received $557,340 last year and paid out $506,453. In the seventy-two years of its history 49,829,563 issues have been made, and during the last year more than half a million volumes of Scripture were distributed in foreign lands and 427,346 destitute families were supplied. In South America the Society was especially successful last year. Two new Bible centers have been established there. To meet expenses incurred in translating, publishing and distributing the Scriptures in foreign lands $143,570.58 was paid to the Secretary's correspondents and agents, and $39,707 was received from foreign lands.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

FARM NOTES.

CURRANTS AND GOOSEBERRIES.

It is surprising that these fruits are not more generally cultivated for market; the currant, especially, finding ready sale at good prices. They are easily raised, thriving in every kind of soil, even heavy clay, and the only important enemy is the currant worm, which, however, may be easily destroyed. Quite likely their lack of popularity on our fruit farms is partly owing to the method of their cultivation, which is commonly of the "slip-shod" variety. No other fruits will bear snubbing and neglect with more obliging good-nature than these, yet none will respond to proper treatment with greater promptness and generosity. They should be cultivated, pruned, thinned out, enriched, mulched, and cared for generally, to insure the same satisfactory results demanded of other fruits; and thus treated, are found to pay quite as well, often better than they.

The most favorable conditions for their culture are moist, loamy, rich soil, the richer the better, and free exposure to sunlight, although they succeed very well in the partial shade of houses, fences, etc.

One method of propagation is by cuttings, six to ten inches long, taken from wood of the previous season's growth. These should be planted down to the terminal bud, and if the single-stem system of growth is desired, all the buds below this should be removed.

Press the earth firmly around the plants, and apply a mulch of coarse litter. This should be done in the spring, and by fall the plants will be well rooted. Gooseberries, however, are best propagated by layering the young wood just after the young fruit is gathered. By spring this will be sufficiently rooted to transplant.

Bushes trained according to the single-stem or tree system, have the advantage of beauty, of producing large, fine fruit, and are more conveniently managed than when trained by the old "brush" method.

The only objection to this plan is that the grub may get into the single stem and destroy it. On this account some growers prefer to leave two or three stems and thus diminish the chances of loss. But if the plants are carefully watched, and worked around often, and salt and ashes applied near the stem, the grub will not be likely to injure them.

To train bushes into the tree form, the stem should be six or eight inches high, and three of the most favorably located branches selected to form the top—all the others being cut out. These branches are cut back to two or three buds and only one shoot on each branch is permitted to grow if the plant is to be transplanted in the fall; otherwise two may remain.

At the next pruning these branches are cut back to three or four buds and two shoots are allowed to grow from each. This leaves, at the end of the season, six stout shoots situated at equal distances apart. At the third pruning these should be cut off about one-half, to produce lateral branches and fruit spurs. At the fourth pruning the leading shoot is shortened one-third or more.

Of the lateral branches, those not required to make the bush symmetrical should be cut back to three or four buds to form fruit branches It should be remembered that the fruit is produced only on wood two or more years old, and, therefore, the new growth should be cut back in this manner from year to year. Also any old canes that show signs of failing should be promptly removed.

This method of pruning insures large bushes, strong growth in the fruiting part, large berries and rank foliage which is retained till frost, and which prevents the fruit from sun-scalding. The vitality of the bush is thus maintained for many years, and regular bearing may be counted on, unless from too close pruning it has grown too much to wood; in which case pruning may be omitted for a year. However, this method of pruning currants applies only to the red and white varieties, as the black currant is produced on wood of the previous season's growth, thus requiring the young wood to be preserved, and the older branches to be cut back so as to produce new bearing wood.

Pruning may be done in late fall or winter, or even in spring if attended to before growth commences.

Currants and gooseberries are gross feeders and require an annual dressing of well-decomposed manure. This should be three or four inches deep, extend as far as the roots go, and be carefully worked in with a digging fork. The two fruits are closely related, botanically, and in most respects require the same treatment.

The currant worm infests both—appearing first in the middle of the bush—and may be destroyed by mixing a spoonful of powdered white hellebore (a poison) in a pailful of water and showering the bushes with it, or it may be applied dry when the bushes are damp from rain or dew. A spoonful of kerosene in a gallon of soapsuds is another remedy. Wood ashes or soot will also destroy them. Still another method is to mix an ounce of crude carbolic acid in half a pailful of warm soapsuds. Skim milk or brine are also used with good effect; but care should be taken not to apply the salts or carbolic acid mixtures too strong or too often, and not to use poisonous remedies after the fruit begins to ripen or has attained large size. Mildew is very prone to affect gooseberries, especially the foreign kinds; but a mulch of coal ashes tends to prevent this. However, the great point to be observed in avoiding mildew is to keep the plants in a vigorous, healthy condition If the disease does appear the crop can sometimes be saved by sprinkling salt about the roots and slacked lime or sulphur on the bushes. Old currant bushes that have suffered from neglect, may be revived by cutting out much of the old wood and thoroughly digging up and enriching the soil, or, the bushes may be taken up, cut back severely, and the roots divided to transplant in new soil. In both cases, scatter a handful of salt around the bushes and mulch with coal ashes.—Independent.

FOR SWEET HOME'S SAKE.

Mothers, wives, sisters! why that patient, hopeless suffering, those pinched, melancholy faces that sadden home and cause anxiety to loved ones, while so potent and harmless a remedy as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can be obtained of your druggist? It is a panacea for all "female complaints," of marvelous efficacy and health-giving qualities. The debilitated, and sufferers from those excrutiating periodical pains, "dragging down" feelings, backache and kindred female disorders, should use this certain remedy at once, and be restored to the blessings of health, for home's sake. Of druggists.

The Teacher

Who advised her pupils to strengthen their minds by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, appreciated the truth that bodily health is essential to mental vigor. For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is remarkably beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. James H. Eastman, Stoneham, Mass.

"I have taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great benefit to my general health."—Miss Thirza L. Crerar, Palmyra, Md.

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Moluncus, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Moffitt, Killingly, Conn.

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 79 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

OF

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal by tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, gripe, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp..... ....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents, per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the Incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams. LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason, and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes all a million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen $1.00

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are concinsive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Prest Blanchard, the addresses of Prest H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The debate upon the fishery treaty in open session in the Senate begun Tuesday last. It is the announced purpose of the Democrats to postpone the consideration of the treaty until next winter. The Republican policy is to discuss the fishery treaty until it shall be disposed of, and to permit no change or amendment to it whatever. To adopt an amendment would make a postponement necessary.

The House Committee on Military Affairs has ordered a favorable report on the bill appropriating $25,000 to defray the expenses of the Gettysburg anniversary in July.

The illness of General Sheridan, which seemed to be broken at one time last week, has resumed its course, and on Monday all hope was given up, and it was hardly thought he would live till morning.

CHICAGO.

Judge Magruder was re-elected to the State Supreme Court bench Monday, with no opposition worth counting. It was feared that the anarchist element would rally and give its support to a man in sympathy with themselves, and thus secure a footing in the highest court of the State.

A young man named Colbert, two weeks married, shot his young bride through the heart while fooling with a revolver.

There is much dissatisfaction with Chief Arthur among the men who struck on the Burlington road three months ago.

The City Council is still under control of the whisky ring. Last week Monday the anti-saloon forces rallied again and a restrictive ordinance was passed as to the location of saloons. It does not apply to saloons now located, but prohibits the location in the future of saloons within 200 feet of a church or school-house. This will not be satisfactory to the people, but it indicates on the part of the Council some respect for aroused public opinion.

The new auditorium building is nearly ready for the Republican convention. It is fire-proof and will hold 8,000 people.

STORMS.

Fatalities and disasters from rain, wind and hail-storms on the 27th and 28th ult. are reported from various parts of the country. Near New Orleans, La., Sunday evening, a tent in which a dozen people had taken refuge from the rain was struck by lightning and one man killed and ten injured, one of them mortally. Near Beatrice, Neb., two children, who with their mother were trying to escape a threatened rise of the stream on which they lived, fell into a gully while going to higher ground in the dark and were drowned, and three children who were swept away by the swollen flood of Solomon Creek in Kansas were also drowned. Great damage was done by hail and lightning in various parts of Kansas and at Des Moines, Iowa. At Canton, Ohio, buildings were blow down by the high wind, and losses amounting to $70,000 caused. The heavy rains have flooded farm lands and done great damage to crops in many parts of Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana.

A terrific thunder-storm, accompanied by high winds and hail, passed over Western Pennsylvania Monday evening, doing great damage. Churches, public buildings and dwellings were unroofed, trees uprooted and fences and barns blown down. A number of persons were injured, but so far as could be learned there were no fatalities.

Twenty business blocks were unroofed by a cyclone which struck Wellisville, N. Y., Monday afternoon. The Baptist church, a fine brick struture, was badly injured. The church and several buildings were wrecked at Allentown, N. Y., and many oil derricks in the Alleghany field were blown down.

At Canton, Ohio, one of the big buildings of the Dueber Watch Company, which had just been completed, was blown down. The structure, which was of brick, 230 feet long, 30 feet wide and three stories in height, was completely wrecked, entailing a loss of $50,000. Other buildings were unroofed, fences blown down and trees snapped off like pipe-stems. It was the worst storm ever known in Canton.

COUNTRY.

The Supreme Court of Kansas Tuesday rendered a decision declaring invalid an ordinance passed recently by the City Council of Topeka, forbidding the sale on Sundy of anything besides drugs and medicines. Several cigar-keepers and restaurateurs had been arrested under the ordinance and had appealed the case.

The melter of the Helena mint reports that Montana's output of gold and silver for 1887 was nearly $24,000,000.

The Democratic Nominating Convention meets in St. Louis this week. No opposition is made to Cleveland for first place on the ticket.

The Supreme Court of North Carolina has handed down an opinion declaring that a woman who has murdered her husband is entitled to a widow's share of his property.

Dr. A L. Chapin, ex-president of Beloit College, aged 73, suffered a paralytic stroke Thursday evening while leading college prayers, which it was at first feared would result fatally, but he regained consciousness Friday and showed signs of recovery.

It has been made plain that some time ago the house of the Hon. James G. Blaine, at Augusta, Me., was entered, and his private papers overhauled, and some of them carried off. It is supposed that the robber expected to find some documents that could, if necessary, be used for the political injury of Mr. Blaine.

At Wyandotte, Mich., early Friday morning, the boiler in the plate mill of the Eureka Iron and Steel Works exploded, wrecking the entire building at a loss of $10,000, killing three employes and seriously injuring a number.

Cut worms are reported by Professor Forbes, State Entomologist, to be more numerous in Illinois this year than for many years, and he also reports the root web worm to be doing an immense amount of damage in certain sections of the State.

Instructions have been issued to all the division superintendents of the Pennsylvania railroad on the lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie to discharge all employes whose services can be dispensed with. About 5,000 men will be discharged.

At Sharon, Pa., Wednesday night, Samuel Clark, waking up at midnight from a drunken sleep, missed his wife and went to the house of his brother, James Clark, broke in the door, and seeing his wife sitting at the fire drew a revolver and shot at her, the bullet hitting Mrs. James Clark instead, killing her almost instantly.

While the Mississippi river steamer Iverness, owned by the McDonald Brothers, of LaCrosse, Wis., was towing a raft to Hannibal, Mo., the two lower flues collapsed, and ten men were blown overboard, or jumped into the water to escape the deluge of steam. Five of them were downed.

Erastus Snow, one of the twelve apostles of the Mormon church, died May 27, aged 70. He was among the earliest converts to Smith, and very soon became one of the leading men.

At Cincinnati, Ohio, Judge Taft, of the Superior Court, decided that boycotting was illegal.

Information from Evansville, Indiana, states that the "White Caps" have made proclamation against certain offenses and offenders, from 50 to 250 lashes being duly fixed as punishment to be inflicted. Editors have been commanded to publish the document.

In Kickapoo, Wis, Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Drake, an old couple, were shot dead in their own house, and the throats of their two little grandchildren were cut from ear to ear. Everything was turned upside down inside the house, and it is supposed that the murder was the result of an attempt at robbery. A young man, owner of a neighboring farm, was arrested and confessed the crime. He was lynched by the exasperated people.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Zanzibar states that messengers have arrived there. They reported that Stanley and all his party were well and had a plentiful supply of food.

The city of Samarcand was the scene of great rejoicing last week over the opening of the new railway to the Caspian Sea.

It is understood that a number of Irish priests, who have recently attended league meetings, have been reprimanded by the pope.

The amount expended up to date on the Panama Canal is $177,910,000, and it is estimated that it will require $230,000,000 and four years more labor for its completion.

After signing his name to the quinquennial bill prolonging the term of the Prussian Parliament, the German Emperor, says the Inter Ocean report, withdrew his signature. Prince Bismarck and the Ministry, at their sitting, resolved to resign unless the bill was signed and published. As soon as the Emperor was assured of the prolongation of his life the hostile influences to Prince Bismarck have been renewed. The conflict between the liberal tendencies of the Emperor and the Chancellor's policy now threaten to end in open rupture. The Emperor is swayed by the Empress Bismarck had warning of the storm in a recent communication from the Emperor. In two long interviews Bismarck found the Emperor anxious for a reconstruction of the Ministry, and also opposed to the quinquennial bill. Under the advice of Dr. Friedberg the Emperor signed the bill, at the same time informing Bismarck that he hoped the concession would be followed by reform in the Ministry. The Emperor postponed the promulgation of the bill, and on Bismarck and his associate Ministers consulting concerning the crisis, it was rumored that the Emperor had withdrawn his signature. The Progressists rejoice at the advent of a Liberal regime. Until a further consultation between the Emperor and Bismarck the issue is doubtful, but the situation is grave enough to cause profound uneasiness. The Emperor's fever has returned, probably owing to the fatigue incidental to the ministerial crisis.

COME TO CHICAGO NEXT WEEK.

The occurrence of the National Republican Convention in Chicago June 19, provides an unusual opportunity for every member of the incorporate National Christian Association to be present at the annual meeting next Thursday. The railroads all give half-fare or less to the Republican convention. Let all friends of the reform who can take advantage of this low rate make an earnest effort to come to Chicago. They will not be able to get into the Convention hall to see the Republican party nominate its candidate; but what is better they can attend Commencement at Wheaton Wednesday and the N. C. A. annual meeting Thursday, beside seeing a great city full of politicians.

The Iowa State Agricultural College, like many institutions supported by State funds, is a breeding place for college fraternities, and they are so obnoxious to the majority of the students that the latter rebelled and began to fight the devil with fire. Masked they assailed the rooms where three lodge meetings were held and broke them up, and in the row windows were broken, stones and eggs thrown, and clubs and revolvers flourished. The lodge men secured the arrest of five of their opponents, and the college faculty and students are said to be seriously divided between the factions. Such troubles have so often attended the work of secret societies in colleges that they are excluded from the best institutions in America.

The Catholic Union and Times prints a letter from Rome describing the visit of Mr. Blaine to the American Catholic College in that city. It is this institution for which President Arthur made a special plea with the Italian government that it be made an exception to the rule of taxation adopted by that government, because American Catholics contributed to its support. Mr. Blaine's visit was expected, and the hall of the college was draped with flags. He made a short address to the students, whom he wished a prosperous career in their great mission in the Catholic church,a church "so profoundly respected by all." Evidently Mr. Blaine expects his two letters declining the Republican nomination to be final, or he would not so boldly challenge Dr. Burchard and the three Rs, who made such havoc for him four years ago.

Dr. J. E. Roy, Western Secretary of the American Missionary Association, has written a letter to the Chicago Tribune on the late attempted assassination of Prof. G. W. Lawrence, of Jellico, Tenn., who had charge of the white high school of the A. M. A. in that place. Prof. Lawrence had visited a family from whom tuition was due and was driven away by the woman. Next day the husband came to the school building, and after demanding an apology followed Prof. Lawrence into the school room and fired four shots at him, three of which took effect. "Jellico," says Dr. Roy, "has always been ruled by the saloon element, and there have been sixty-three men shot there within six years. This affair was evidently brought about by the worst part of the saloon element, as a method of taking revenge for the aggressive work of the missionaries there, especially of Rev. A. A. Myers, brother-in-law of Prof. Lawrence." The citizens are aroused and mean that the desperado shall be punished;but with the result of the Haddock and Gambrell trials before us there is little hope of justice. But, at least, we pray that the saloon demon may not have another victim.

The nomination of Cleveland and Thurman by the Democratic convention at St. Louis last week is no surprise to the country. There has been no question about the re-nomination of the former; and the word being given from Washington in favor of the old ex-Senator from Ohio, no other name could be got upon equal footing. The platform threatened to bring up an issue on the tariff plank, but again the administration influence was seen to be overwhelming, and there was no division of opinion worth mention. This document, in laborious sentences, contrives, between the clauses condemning Republicans, to extol the Cleveland administration; it claims, also, the exclusion of Chinese labor by Democratic legislation, and asserts that under Democratic control the interests of the government and the people, at home and abroad, have been guarded and defended. In regard to the tariff, it reaffirms the platform of 1884, and approves the President's recent message; declares that all unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation, and asserts that a "careful revision of the tax laws, with due allowance for the difference of American and foreign labor, must promote and encourage industry."

Arthur and Sargent, who are called "chiefs" of the combinations of railway engineers and firemen, were back in Chicago a few days since to attempt a final settlement of the ruinous strike they began in February. Their present occupation is figuring up the losses of that affair to the lodges they represented. It is said the engineers' brotherhood had when the Burlington strike began $350,000 in its treasury. This was used up and a large amount of voluntary contributions as well. When the funds were exhausted assessments were made of $10, and later $5, upon each of the 22,000 members, but either the members do not pay, or there are bad holes in the treasury bag, for the funds are yet low. While the engineers of other roads gave up the quarrel long since, those of the Burlington system have never owned themselves beaten and in some localities cause much trouble. A striking engineer was lately shot dead in Galesburg by a young fireman whom he assaulted.

The Knights of Labor are hardly in better condition than the engineers. Powderly, in a late number of his Journal of United Labor, says over his own signature that nearly $400,000 were paid out by his order last year "in support of strikes and lock-outs that were in the main suicidal and foolish; yes, in some cases criminal." And, "It cost the member of ten years' standing $3.06 to know that workingmen can be wrong in a dispute as well as the employer, and that it is not always the best to act hastily." This is well spoken, and had it been said years ago would have been better. Sad experience now forces it from Powderly, and gains a hearing from once unwilling ears. Just as the Knights of Labor are learning that strikes and boycotts may be ruinous to themselves and a crime toward the community at large, they must also learn that their false oaths of secrecy and despotism are also ruin and crime. And for the trouble that must come upon innocent men and their households before this lesson is learned, we believe the leaders like Powderly should be held responsible. They are not so blind that they may not avoid leading their blind followers into the ditch.

If the Knights of Labor cannot adapt themselves to plans for the improvement of labor in every possible direction they are not friends of labor. It is ominous for the order that they have rejected the plan for profit-sharing offered to the men in Mr. Carnegie's steel works in Braddock, Penn., and as a consequence the thirty-five hundred men have accepted profit-sharing and surrendered their charters. It is of a piece with the refusal of the order to allow the sons of members to learn trades freely as apprentices.—Independent.

WHEN SECRECY IS SINFUL.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

They greatly err who think opposition to secret societies involves the sinfulness of secrecy. There are times and circumstances when its superiority is as manifest as its rarity. In business relations, in the neighborhood, in the confidential intercourse of friendship, in the family, in the church, and even in regard to ourselves there is much that is commendable in the highest degree to keep private. To be a tale-bearer shows a malicious disposition, or a lack of good common sense, and sometimes both. The Scriptures plainly teach that secrecy is a virtue of rare excellence, when used in a lawful way. And in considering when it becomes sinful in its unlawful use in secret societies we do not wish to be understood as teaching that it is their chiefest or most dangerous evil.

First, secrecy is sinful when it conceals what ought to be known, or pretends to have a secret that is not a secret. In our day, in this respect, it is an alarming evil. Society is honeycombed with its poisonous work; and secret societies are the guardian parent and nursing mother of this evil that casts a blight upon our fairest hopes and fondest expectations.

Second, secrecy is sinful when it unnecessarily strengthens evil. Whatever is good, as a rule, can be done most successfully in an open way. It is to be admitted that there are times when to conceal our plans helps to accomplish good more successfully; but oftener than otherwise such measures fail. Truth loves the light, and secures her greatest victories in open conflict. Then some secret societies are like the babe just born—weak and powerless. By development the babe becomes a man. In the same way the constituent elements that characterize all secret societies become giant forces for evil.

In the various intoxicating liquors that threaten to ruin our country it is the alcohol in them that does the mischief; so the secrecy in the different secret organizations is the source of their power; and the band of affiliation is so strong between secret societies that what helps one helps the other; hence their secrecy is turned to an evil account and is sinful.

Thirdly, secrecy becomes sinful when there is a liability that it will ensnare us in evil.

"In vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird." Satan is seldom more successful than when he lures the unwary into ways that appear well, but end in sin; and under the cover of secrecy these doubtful ways double their power to draw us astray. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." The sentiment of these words of Solomon are oftener true in secret than anywhere else. For many an evil way that seems right in secret, in open day would appear in its true light.

Fourthly, secrecy is sinful when it requires the concealment of the unknown.

Usually when we take an oath it is to attest to what we know. Exceptions occur in the oath of office and in the marriage covenant, when what our act involves is unknown to us. Sometimes, as in the case of George Washington's oath of allegiance to King George III., it involves what in conscience we cannot do. As the law of right supercedes all other law, in such instances the obligation ceases; hence, George Washington was justified in drawing his sword against the man he had sworn to defend.

The nature of such covenants plainly teach we should be exceedingly cautious in promising to do what the future alone can reveal as devolving upon us. But as such obligations arise from the natural relations of life they are in accord with the will of God and we are justified in assuming them.

But we are not justified from such considerations in promising to conceal what is unknown to us except in extreme cases, such as transpire in war, or circumstances of a similar nature. Christ often told his disciples to keep his teachings private for a time. But he never entered into a secret conclave with them, saying, you must never reveal anything that is said or done in this meeting. No! Never! In this view of his life and teaching we see the literal truthfulness of his declaration, "In secret have I said nothing."

You may say the society I propose to join assures me I shall not be required to conceal anything that is evil. Do not Freemasonry and Mormonism give the same assurance? Many kinds of religion are like India rubber; they stretch easily; and there is scarcely anything that conflicts with them except the truth. So what may not be inconsistent with them may be with the religion of Christ.

The question to consider is, Are we justified in putting the keeping of our conscience under the control of another? When we do we annul the right of private judgment, which is the key-stone in the arch of liberty. The principle involved is altogether too sacred to be sacrificed in such an unnecessary way; especially the child of God, whose freedom from the condemnation of sin has been purchased by the precious blood of Jesus Christ, should not trifle with it in such a careless manner.

Granting you may walk safely over this bridge and ascend to heaven, your example, like the example of the moderate drinker, may send many others to ruin. Just here we need a conscientious regard for the right, lest the bias of self-interest turn us in the wrong way.

Fortunately in this intricate matter we are not left to the light of our own feeble judgment, as in other moral questions, where a nice discrimination is needed to decide between good and evil to tell us what course to take. For it is written, "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him, when he knoweth it, then shall he be guilty in one of these." Lev. 5: 4.

Fifthly, secrecy is sinful when it unnecessarily leads to action that is a grief to the Lord's dear children.

Consider how many of the Lord's most intelligent, cultured and pious disciples are conscientiously opposed to secret societies. Consider what heart-piercing grief it causes them to see their near and dear friends unite with them. Christ says: "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." Matt. 18: 6. Paul says: "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend."1 Cor.8:13. On the supposition that we think that a secret society is righteous in its character and claims and we consider it our duty to unite with it, this obligation ceases; for we ought to obey God rather than man. However, in the exercise of the broadest charity it appears that self-interest, love of display or popularity, the gratification of questionable desires or protection in iniquity leads the vast majority to unite with secret societies.

Without any doubt there are honorable exceptions; but the exceptions are so rare that it strengthens rather than weakens the force of the fact that sin is committed in uniting with secret societies, to the grief of so many who love the Lord in sincerity and truth. And there is no secret society in which secrecy does not become sinful in one or more of the ways we have spoken of. In some it is used in all the ways referred to. Hence, all secret societies are sinful on account of the sinful use they make of secrecy.

ROME AND AMERICAN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

BY AN OLD LAWYER.

The power of Roman Catholicism is a marked feature in every political struggle for office throughout these United States, the moral effect of which is most damaging to a free, liberal and confiding people. It is not the rule amongst true-born Americans to despise a man because his coat may be out at the elbows or he wears a patch upon the knee of his pantaloons. He is just as much considered entitled to the guarantees of our Constitution as the citizen who is driven to and from his business by a fine equestrian outfit and liveried attendants. He may rise from the canal tow-path, like a Garfield,to sit in the White House President of these United States. Yet there are citizens in this nation who have for the sake of filthy lucre and high office betrayed this confidence; this was particularly the case in Chicago under the rule of Carter Harrison, the late Mayor, in that he not only permitted anarchy to bud and blossom, but fostered it until it brought forth its legitimate fruit, blood, murder, widows and orphans, and victims for the gallows.

But a more terrible disaster than that of the Haymarket awaits the people of this nation throughout its entire length and breadth, and like anarchism it has budded, blossomed and become flippant, and has a leader bold enough to say "if he knew who controlled the schools of a country he would be able to say what the future of the country would be." (Inter-Ocean, Sept. 7th, 1887)

Spannhorst says, "As freedom in the United States had supported Catholicism so would the Catholic church be the salvation of this great country. He was glad that every Catholic church had its parochial school. He felt that the Catholics were on the right road; that they occupied a fortress that could not be assailed." This is as bold as anarchism, and as damnable to a republican form of government.

In perfect keeping with these facts the Open Court says (page 525): "In Massachusetts,where the Irish and Canadian Roman Catholics make up a considerable part of the population, there is a steady increase in the number of Roman Catholic parochial schools, and in some communities they have greatly depleted the public schools. Particularly is this the case in Malden, where in one ward the parochial school grew too large for its building and applied for some of the unoccupied rooms in the public school building. In the Northwest the Roman Catholics are making determined war upon the public school system, and in isolated cases with some success. In Barton, Wis., last year (1886) they were able to carry a resolution at the annual meeting that no public school should be maintained during the year, and none was held. This year (1887), taking advantage of the law giving women the right to vote at school elections, they brought out all their women and in spite of opposition carried the same resolution again. At Melrose, Minn., a movement was led by the Catholic priests(who are never revolutionists) to shorten the school year of the public schools in order to compel children to attend the Roman Catholic parochial school."

"Throughout Stearns county, Minn.," says an exchange, "the Roman catechism is said to be taught openly in the public schools and either the opening or the closing hours of the session are devoted to religious instruction given by the priests, all this being in direct violation of the State Constitution adopted in 1877 to meet this very condition." "The evidences of a carefully planned assault upon our public school system are so clear that its friends are beginning to consider how best to meet this assault."

It is only a short time ago that the "Roman Catholic priest of St. Malachi's church was elected and installed as principal in one of the public school wards of Pittsburgh, Pa., and as soon as the priest was installed Catholic children were ordered to attend," notwithstanding our public schools and our school system have been all along anathematized as "wicked" and "infidel." The next step was to get the nuns installed as teachers, and had they, on examination,come up to the standard required of teachers in these public schools the scheme would have been a success, but it failed because of the inefficiency of the nuns; and "rather than carry on the schools without the nuns as teachers the priest resigned the principalship and started the Catholic schools as before." (Zion's Watchtower, Dec. 1887.)

"The plan is not considered dead,"the Tower says, "but merely sleeping until a more convenient season when preparations will be more complete." In this attempt to capture the public schools Rome discovered her weak points and will come up doubly armed and drilled next time.

Ex-President Hayes said a short time ago in the Academy of Music at Philadelphia that "The source of our strength is our loyal citizenship," and that "The Constitution is not worshiped as a fetich, but reverence for law as the safeguard of liberty is deeply ingrained in the hearts of all true Americans." This is greatly to be desired indeed, but with the rising generation under the tuition and control of the Romish church how long would it last? Hayes also said,"It is the glory of America under the Constitution to be the great pacific power of the globe —able without an army or navy to keep peace at home and to command respect and consideration abroad." To-day this is a glorious truth; but unless the people quickly take the papal bull "by the horns," as they were lately forced to do with anarchy, the whole land will be filled with blood and widows and orphans far outnumbering those so made by the late Rebellion.

HOW OLD IS FREEMASONRY?

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Practically the question is of no great importance. Masonry is to be held responsible for what it is and what it does, rather than for the date of its birth. Nevertheless, many are deceived; among colored Masons, especially, are many who have profound faith in the antiquity of the order, and who conclude that an institution which has had the sanction (as they have been told) of Solomon and the Saints John, must be most excellent.

The following extracts from the Grand Lodge Report for Iowa, 1887, will throw light on this question. In reviewing the report of the Grand Lodge of California, Grand Secretary Parvin of Iowa says: "Bro. Drummond may assert, but cannot find proof of his assertion, that there ever was a Grand Master of Masons or a Grand Lodge of Masons prior to 1717, when the first Grand Lodge was constituted, and the first Grand Master created. Of all the humbugs that have ever been presented in a Masonic paper, none is so great or foolish as that which proclaims the existence or prerogatives of Grand Master prior to that date....The day of those who declare Solomon to have been the Grand Master of Masons has long since been relegated to contempt."

In the report of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, the orator had said: "The institution existed at the time, and was even old in history, when Abraham, a wandering shepherd, trod the yet unpeopled wilds of Palestine." The Grand Secretary says: "Such language may be spoken to the ignorant, but they fall like chaff when cast before well-read Masons." The orator had said that the "name Freemasonry originated 2,500 years ago, and Accepted Mason at least 1,200 years ago." The truth is, that the word "freemason" is first found in print in the year 1636, or 2,300 years later than the claim here made. Past Grand Master Gurney, of Illinois, speaking of the degrees of the Royal Arch Chapter, says: "They have no record farther back than the latter part of the 18th century." And yet Chapter Masonry claims to have originated at the time of the return of the Jews from the Babylonian Captivity! Its apology for excluding Christ from its prayers and Scripture readings is that at the time of its institution the world had never heard of Jesus of Nazareth. What nonsense!

The Grand Secretary of Quebec in his report quotes from an imaginary American writer who says: "Freemasonry was directly a secret society for more than 2,000 years; that its members were forbidden to publish anything, either in relation to the body's origin or teachings; and yet, through all that period its history was transmitted from generation to generation, unspotted by time and unadulterated by the hand of the innovator. From the commencement of the world we may trace the foundation of Freemasonry."

To this the learned secretary of Iowa responds: "How easy it is for brethren, ignorant of history, to make bold and senseless assertions, for which there is not the shadow of truth to support. Not a single allegation in the quotation of this eminent American writer has even a tinge of truth to support it."

The Grand Secretary of Connecticut protests against "the nonsensical theory that our institution came to us from Solomon or his ancestors." To which Mr. Parvin adds: "We are sick of the constant outcropping of this nonsensical theory which we read in a majority of the addresses of orators, and in some of the Grand Masters."

One more extract. The Grand Orator of Wyoming Territory says: "It is well to look back into our past, and prior to 715 before Christ [that is, 2,602 years ago] the Masonic order is more or less mythical." That is, since that date it is historical. "The theory that traces the order back to Solomon has a line of fact to rest upon, and the theory that traces it beyond him to the commencement of Hebrew history in Egypt....has a line of fact to rest upon." To which the Iowa secretary replies: "We recommend the Grand Lodge to purchase Gould's recent work, 'History of Freemasonry,' and compel its Grand (?) Orator to read it, and hereafter exclude from its pages such myths and nonsense. The school-master is abroad in the land and the boys are no fools."

Such are some of the recent utterances on this subject. Nearly all Masons who make any claim to scholarship have, for shame's sake, renounced the theory of the Solomonic origin of the order.

A SECRET ORGANIZATION A SIN "PER SE."

Is the secret organization of a select number of a community a sin per se? Risking the stigma of being called an old fogy or an egotist, I say, Yes.

1. A political party is organized opinion, and is composed of all classes of men,rich and poor,whose political opinions harmonize with the platform of principles adopted by the party. The object of the party is to propagate such principles and adopt such measures as will promote the general good of society as a whole, having no reference to class distinctions.

2. A church is organized faith, and is composed of all persons who may choose to join, whose faith is in harmony with the established faith of the organization. The object of the church is to save all mankind from sin and suffering without any respect of persons.

3. But a secret combination is organized selfishness. Its object is to help themselves at the expense of the uninitiated; if this were not so, why exclude forever all outsiders from even the slightest knowledge of their inside workings? It will not be denied that selfishness is a sin per se. The following scriptures may be given as proof of this assertion:"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you,do ye even so them." These scriptures exclude selfishness from the heart of a Christian, and stamp it as a sin. If we can show that secret combinations are selfish, then we have proved they are sinful. Selfishness is the main disturbing element in human society,and would,if allowed to enter heaven,demolish the throne of God and overturn the foundations of the celestial city.

All secret orders of which I have any knowledge are organized on a selfish basis. They all exclude all outsiders from the benefits of their organization. They make it an imperative duty to help a brother, and not wrong him or see him wronged without giving him warning, but they are not required to help anybody else, neither are they forbidden to wrong anybody else. This leaves them free to take advantage of anybody outside of their order if they choose to do so; and the numerous strikes and boycotts show that they are not slow to do so.

It is an encroachment upon the social rights of a community for a select number to organize themselves into a secret clique bound by oath or solemn pledge, to keep their neighbors and even their own families in profound ignorance of all they do and say in the lodge. This cannot be done without exciting suspicion that some advantage is to be taken of the uninitiated, and this has in it the appearance of evil, which God's Word says must be avoided. A secret order has in it the quality of a monopoly and conspiracy against the outside world, which is the essence of selfishness. The very life of a secret society depends on the fact that it remain shut up in its selfish shell forever, for the moment it throws open its doors and extends the invitation to all the world to come and share in its boasted privileges that moment it dies, and this fact proves its essential selfishness.

There are other elements in these orders in addition to their secrecy which augment their sinfulness. Every one of them that has a ritual and worships according to that ritual; has a religion, but they are all outside of and independent of the religion of Christ, consequently idolatrous.

All secret orders are composed of persons, a majority of whom are ungodly; therefore,they must be ungodly institutions, and every Chritian that joins them is yoked together with unbelievers, which is forbidden in God's Word.

The oath or affirmation administered in the lodge is extra-judicial, and is contrary to the Word of God, which says, "Swear not at all." There are now about two hundred different secret orders in this country, each one bound by a solemn oath or pledge to keep their purposes and plans absolutely hid from the other one hundred and ninety-nine lodges, and the residue of mankind,until Gabriel sounds his mighty trump. The only hope of ever getting rid of these two hundred nests of human bats is based on the fate of the Kilkenny cats that were said to have been tied tail to tail, and slung over the clothes line, where they fought until nothing was left but the tails. So it is hoped these midnight clans will bite and devour each other till they are consumed.

Now, Mr. Editor, whether I have proved that secret combinations are a sin per se or not, I believe it nevertheless.—W. S. Titus in the Conservator.

THE LION'S PAW.

Much has been written upon the antiquity of Masonry by the brightest Masonic intellects of the age, and different opinions advanced by the different theorists,and with these divers opinions the diligent craftsman,seeking after knowledge,is often at a loss to decide which to accept or which to reject. The adherents of the theory that Masonry had its origin in the building guilds of the 14th century meet with many difficulties in trying to reconcile the fact that the symbols of Masonry, even its passwords, grips and signs, clearly show an earlier and very remote origin.

The above emblematic drawing was published in the Masonic Newspaper in 1880,and concerning which Bro. Wm. S. Paterson,32nd.,says,"This emblem was found in the sarcophagus of one of the great kings of Egypt, entombed in the pyramid erected to his everlasting remembrance. It brings to mind the representation of the king's initiation into those greater mysteries of Osiris held to be the highest aim of the wise and devout Egyptian." Bro. Paterson also says in the same article that "the Hebrews were probably instructed in the legend of Osiris,and afterwards changed the whole to accord with the wonderful and wise Solomon and his master architect, Hiram."

The emblem may be thus explained. The form that lies dead before the altar is that of Osiris, the personified sun-god, whom the candidate represents in the drama of raising,lying dead at the winter solstice, slain by the grim archer in November, the fatal month in the year of the sun. The figure of the lion grasping the dead sun-god alludes to the constellation Leo,which did prevail 4,000 years ago, to raise the sun-god to his place of power and glory on the summit of the grand royal arch of heaven at the summer solstice, and denoted then as it does now that the sun or the candidate is about to be raised from a symbolical death to life and power by the strong grip of the lion's paw, or as it has later been termed,"the lion of the tribe of Judah."

The cross which the lion holds in his other paw is the ancient Egyptian symbol of eternal life. The figure erect at the altar is doubtless that of the grand hierophant,with his hand raised in an attitude of command forming a right angle, with eyes fixed upon the emblematic lion as he gives the sign of command that Osiris or the candidate be raised from death and darkness to light and life.

This ancient Egyptian drawing is a strong testimonial of the correctness of the theory held by most of the intelligent Masons of the day of the great antiquity of Masonry,and is the correct solution of the legend of Osiris, the sun-god, and also that of Hiram.

It is indeed almost impossible to make an emblematic drawing which would be in more perfect harmony with it, or to more perfectly give an idea of how correctly this ancient symbol has been handed down to the present day. The intelligent Mason of the present time will recognize it, nor seek for further proofs.—The Freemason, Detroit.

HOME RULE IN NEW IRELAND.

The Catholic Review is quoted as saying, "A marvelous change is coming over the New England that was. They say it has become a new Ireland."

There are probably nearly as many men of Irish birth and blood in America as in Ireland; and while Home Rule agitates Great Britain, it is possible for careful students to investigate the subject in New England as well as in old Ireland.

Home Rule is but another expression for local self-government; and this method of government has many important advantages. The best kind of government is no government at all; that is, when all are so self-governed and self-controlled that they need no external restraint. There are multitudes of such men, who have never in their lives come within the grasp of the law, and who have no desire to violate its provisions. The laws that rule them are written in their hearts and in their minds. They do the things which law requires, not because the law commands them, but because their obedient hearts prompt them to do no evil.

If all persons were of this character, there would be little need of law or of lawyers. Every man would rule well his own house, and well-governed families would constitute a well-governed community and commonwealth. But if a man does not have the law of God written in his own heart; if he lacks conscience and wisdom and sound judgment,it may not be safe to allow him to rule even his own house, much less those around him. The man who suffers himself to be made a maniac by strong drink, who in ruling his home smashes the furniture, whose presence is the signal for violence and uproar, and who is a brute at home and a bully abroad, ready to drink and fight, and lie and swear,is not fit for home rule or any other kind of rule, only the strong rule of rigorous law, which is made for the lawless and the disobedient.

This is the reason why certain people come under severe if not tyrannical control. No man is fit for freedom until he can govern himself; and no man governs himself until he is governed of God. So long as men are ruled by appetite, by passion, by priestcraft, by ignorance, by prejudice, and by secret and irresponsible clans, leagues, and organizations, so long they are unfit to be trusted with government. They cannot rule, and hence they must be ruled. Even the intelligence and education of a few by no means fits them to be the governors of the many, unless the few are ruled from on high by that law which says, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Hence there are men who are utterly unfit to rule. They break law, they disturb order,they drink whisky, they abuse their wives, they neglect their children, and then to defend themselves against the poverty, misery, helplessness and stupidity brought on them by their ignorance and intemperance,they join some secret clan, pay their money to some leader who earns his living by doing hard work with his mouth; and then go on strikes,hang around saloons, mob peaceable people, and commit crimes and depredations,which violate law, disturb order, and finally bring trouble and ruin upon them.

If men want Home Rule let them learn to rule their own homes,and live in peace and sobriety. Let them learn the fear of God,and follow the teachings of his Word. Let them remember that the foundation of all decent Home Rule is the Bible; and that no people who did not read the Bible ever had liberty and Home Rule, because no people who do not read the Bible are fit for liberty or Home Rule. A man who depends on others to find out his duty for him and tell him what he must do,is unfit for freedom. A man who knows nothing of his Bible or his God must expect to be ruled by tyrants and misled by priests; and if he comes into power himself he will tyrannize over others.—Christian Safeguard.

The National Bureau of Statistics shows that on the $700,000,000 which annually passes into the tills of the retailers of intoxicating liquors in this country there is a profit of one hundred and thirty-three and one-fourth per cent. If poor people had to pay such a tax as that on bread, there would be a rebellion. But when a man tosses off a glass of whisky and pays five cents for the drink, and seven or eight cents to the barkeeper for the trouble of handing it to him, he generally thinks the barkeeper an awfully good fellow.

THE N. C. A. WORK IN THE SOUTH.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SOUTHERN AGENT.

To the Board of Directors of the N. C. A.,

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have, as your agent, during the last year visited and labored in the following States: Illinois, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky, and also in the District of Columbia. I have traveled, approximately, 8,000 miles and delivered 149 lectures and sermons in all of the principal cities from Philadelphia, Pa., to Houston, Texas. I have visited and addressed forty-two schools and colleges and numerous ministers' meetings. A national convention was held in February in the city of New Orleans, of which I will not now farther speak.

My work has been mainly among the colored people, and I have found almost everywhere an open door, especially among those of the cotton-growing States, where the great body of them reside. Scarcely any event in history since the Hebrew exodus is a more wonderful providence, and surely none ever carried with it greater responsibilities than the emancipation of this people. They greatly need our instruction and are quite ready to receive it. I have found that even those who were members of Masonic and other secret orders, as a rule, received me most kindly, and listened with respectful attention to what I had to say. In many instances they have been convinced, and quite a number of pastors have made formal renunciation before their people. Northern men and women engaged in missionary and educational work in the South, have been among our warmest supporters. Whatever may have been their relations to and convictions of the character of the secret lodge system, a residence of but a few months in the South has convinced them that, whatever may have been their ostensible or real objects, the system, as such, is working great evil to the colored people. Nor has there been any material difference in this respect among the various religious denominations.

The American Missionary Association, which took the lead in the educational work in the South, has, through its secretaries, its field agents, and college presidents, nearly everywhere given me a cordial recognition and Christian sympathy. No Congregational pastor under the care of this Association has so far failed to welcome my labors. There are many secret society people in their churches, but their influence is diminishing.

Next to, if not equal in this great work, is that of the Baptist Home Missionary Society. It has had great advantages for work in the South and is improving them. The largest class of colored Christians there are the Baptists. In every school in the South that is sustained by this missionary society I have found a warm, fraternal greeting and a hearty God-speed. Very many Baptist ministers, both white and colored, are Freemasons, but the order receives no sympathy from the representatives of this society; and this is perhaps more than could be said of any other of the large organizations.

Next in importance is the work of the M. E. church. This great denomination has not been remiss in its duty to the colored people. Some of the largest and best equipped of the Southern colleges have been planted and are being sustained by its funds. I have visited nearly all their schools for the colored, and with very few exceptions have been cordially welcomed for my work's sake. And this is true of the great body of their pastors in the South. At least two of their bishops have commended our principles to their annual conferences.

Northern Presbyterians, though not so numerous, are doing also an admirable work among both white and colored on the Southern field. Their workers among the freedmen are heartily with us.

Nor should I fail to mention the excellent institutions of the United Presbyterians at Knoxville, Tenn., and at Norfolk, Chase City and Abbeyville, Va.; Knox Academy, the Reformed Presbyterian school at Selma, Ala., and the admirable Friends' schools at New Garden, N. C., Maryville, Tenn., and Helena, Ark., in all of which the distinctive anti-secrecy principles of these denominations have a pronounced enforcement.

Besides the work of the Northern missionary societies the distinctively Southern churches have been stirred up to increased efforts for the evangelization and education of the poor. Nor have they failed to discover the malign influence of the lodge system. There is also a considerable and increasing number of schools of high grade that have been established, manned, and are sustained by the colored people. One of the best of these is Livingstone College, Rev. J. C. Price, D. D., president, at Salisbury, N. C. These especially need our fraternal sympathy and aid.

It is noteworthy that within the past year two institutions, Howe Institute at New Iberia, La., and a Baptist College at Memphis, Tenn., have been established with distinct testimonies against secret orders.

The work of evangelization, education and social reform must go hand in hand and keep pace. The best interests of all classes, both in the South and in the entire Nation, demands it. We can never have true national unity, or the harmonious working of a free government until we get rid of sectional animosities, the caste spirit, and, above all, the separating of the people into secret, selfish and exclusive clans, each seeking to promote its own interests regardless of the rights of others. In the work of evangelization and education we must depend mainly, if not wholly, on these great religious denominations; but surely it must be supplemented. We must vitalize the entire movement with the principles of our reform.

In furtherance of this cause I desire to make some suggestions.

1. The work in the South has been carried on mainly among the colored people. It should not be exclusively so. We owe duties to, and need the co-operation of our white as well as our colored brethren. The way is open for such work, especially in the mountain region of North Carolina and Tennessee. As soon as practicable a laborer should be employed to give his time mainly to the white schools and churches of this region. Above every other part of the South the people of this section have been patriotic, loyal and favorable to Christian reforms.

2. It is eminently desirable that there should be, somewhere in the South, a permanent office and a depository of our publications. After looking over the whole field, I would suggest New Orleans, La., as the most desirable point, and that such an office could be kept up there during the school year—say from October 1st to June 1st. It is believed that an agent located in that city could do a most important local work, and that it might be made a center of vast reformatory influence. There are five institutions known as universities in that one city, for the education of the colored youth. To nearly, or quite all, we can have free access.

3. There ought to be a great enlargement of our business of publication in the South. The great mass of the people, both white and colored, have never heard of the Christian Cynosure, nor of the N. C. A. To many it is a new and wonderful revelation that there are men who dare face and resist the power of the secret lodge. Our paper has been a most important aid in the pastoral and Sunday-school work. It has brought a pure and dignified Christian literature into the homes of many who, but for its pages, would have little knowledge of the great moral world. Above all it has aided many in the great conflict with the power of the lodge. No one agency is more economical and important than the Cynosure. We need also a large extension of our tract department. Not only our present excellent tracts should have a wider circulation, but there should be prepared some others with special reference to the South. I suggest brief expositions, illustrated, if practicable, of such orders as are peculiar to the colored people; such as "The Grand United Order of Odd-fellowship," "The Tabernacle," "The Knights of Tabor," etc.

4. There should be sought for, and as far as practicable secured, a harmonious co-operation with kindred reform movements; such as the W. C. T. U., the White Cross League, the American Peace Society, the National Reform Association, and any other that seeks the furtherance of the Redeemer's Kingdom. We should distribute their literature and persuade them to distribute ours. All true reformers are kindred in Christ, who is our pattern, and should be made to feel that their work is one. Far more than we are apt to think, they do feel so, and mutual helpfulness will make this kinship more apparent.

H. H. HINMAN.

—One of our religious exchanges boasts of a certain church possessing a lady who saves the congregation where she worships $10,000 a year. A woman of wealth and of high social culture and position, she makes it her rule and the fashion to dress for church in so plain and inexpensive a manner as to throw the whole social influence of the congregation against extravagance in dress. If she can overthrow the cultus of dress in our modern churches and replace it with the worship of God, she has a mission greater than that of Kimball or of Moody and Sankey.—Hartford Religious Herald.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—At Wasioja Seminary commencement exercises occur this week. Among the speakers are Rev. S. A. Manwell, an early graduate of this institution and of Wheaton Theological Seminary.

—Commencement exercises at Western College, Lisbon, Iowa, occur this week. The Baccalaureate sermon is by Pres. Beardshear; the annual sermon, by Rev. M. R. Drury, of Dayton, Ohio; the Alumnal address, by Hon. Jos. Bookwalter, of Minneapolis, and graduating exercises Wednesday, with concerts Tuesday and Wednesday.

—Senator Stanford, in speaking of his plans for his California University, said that he desired to have the students understand the evil consequences of intemperance. He believed there are in California to-day more adult men selling liquors than there are tilling the land, and the loss from this source is equal to 25 per cent. of the power of production.

—The German Lutheran Synod, in session last week at Madison, Wis., has decided to remove its seminary from Mendota, Ill., to Dubuque, Iowa, if that city will add $10,000 in cash to its offer of thirty acres of land and a large residence. Prof. Fritchell, at the head of this institution, has been heartily co-operating in labors against the lodge. Last year he made a systematic and profound study of Masonry while writing an argument for the theological students on the evil nature of secret orders.

—Evangelist D. L. Moody, on June 2, conducted exercises at Northfield, Mass., dedicating the new library; Dr. Behrends and Dr. Curtis, of Brooklyn, were to speak. The Bible School will open June 30 and continue to July 16, and it is expected that there will be a larger attendance than ever before. Students from Alabama and many Southern and Western States have made arrangements to come. The Northern colleges will send nearly double the number in their delegations of last year. Many expect to camp out, and the New York Young Men's Christian Association alone will have three large tents full of young men.

—The program for commencement week at Wheaton begins with examinations Thursday, June 15; musical rehearsal Saturday evening; Baccalaureate sermon by Pres. J. Blanchard Sabbath morning; missionary address by Rev. J. D. Wyckoff, Galesburg, Ill.; Board of Trustees meet Tuesday; Alumni meeting same day, afternoon and evening; Commencement exercises, Wednesday, June 20; Rev. E. R. Worrell, of Washington Heights delivers the Master's Oration. There is to be, also, an address by Rev. T. R. Trowbridge, of Aurora, before the Art School. The Baccalaureate address before the Theological Seminary occurs Sabbath afternoon.

WASHINGTON LETTERS.

PROHIBITION RATIFICATION MEETING.

WASHINGTON, June 7, 1888.

Prohibition Hall, at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and 4½ street, N. W., was beautifully decorated and densely packed last evening in honor of the nominees at the Indianapolis convention. Hon. H. B. Moulton, president of the District Prohibition Club, called the meeting to order, and the audience joined in singing "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Rev. C. H. Mytinger led in prayer. W. E. Carr was introduced, and in a neat little speech commended the work of the Indianapolis convention and the delegates from the District for the part they had taken in that work. Rev. S. H. Cummings Kingsly of Florida was justly severe in his strictures on the Republicans who selected R. G. Ingersoll, a man who insulted God and outraged every sentiment of the Christian conscience of the people, to pronounce a eulogy on Roscoe Conkling. His endorsement of the no-sex plank in the platform in behalf of the women of the South was received with hearty applause.

Next came Major Walker, delegate from the District and now a member of the National Committee. The Major was brim full of enthusiasm and decidedly practical and pointed in his remarks. He knows the inside as well as the surface of Washington social life and the city government. He is a power in the reforms attempted in this city, a devoted Christian, and tolerates only open methods. His fidelity to principle cost him his place at the head of the police force of this city; because, as he said in regard to Prohibition, "I know what is right and dare to do it." We must acknowledge God in all our ways, stand upon principle, and organize and work for victory. Rev. Dr. Baldwin voted for St. John and Daniels, and endorsed the Indianapolis nominees.

Major Hilton made the most lengthy speech of the evening, full of incidents, points and happy hits. He had no love for either of the old parties, but considered the Democrats most honorable because they nailed their colors to the masthead, while the Republicans worked in the dark, sought to deceive the people and stab Prohibition in the back. He liked open, fair work, and respected an avowed enemy far more than a deceitful, treacherous betrayer of his friends. Mrs. La Fetra, president of the District W. C. T. U., was introduced and spoke briefly of the women's work and of its fitting recognition in the Prohibition platform of 1888.

Repeated calls brought Hon. H. B. Moulton to the front, who showed that he not only excels as a presiding officer, but is a "minute man" loaded to the brim and ready to sweep the field with his "Gatling gun." Had the honors of second place on the national ticket fallen to him the Prohibition cause would have been fittingly and nobly represented.

The recognition of God's law as the true basis of civil government was the dominant thought in the meeting, and every allusion to woman's work and her inherent right to protect her home and country at the polls was heartily cheered. The meeting closed with the "Doxology" and benediction, and was supplemented with congratulations and hearty hand-shaking, every one feeling that it was a grand success. J. P. STODDARD.

GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, June 8, 1888.

Convention week in St. Louis necessarily meant a dull week at the Capital. Many Senators and Representatives in Congress were in attendance upon the National Convention, and more still would have gone had they not been unwilling to leave the pending tariff debate in the House. The Senate has not been idle, however. On Monday it disposed of seventy-eight bills on the calendar, about forty of which were pensions. Among them was one creating an additional retired list of the army. for eighty officers now on the active list, but incapacitated for active service.

Mr. Bliss, the Chairman of the House Committee on Pensions, thinks his duties are very onerous. A reporter who was hunting news asked him one day for some paragraphs on pension legislation. The New York Congressman said: "Well, I have been laboring so hard for weeks past that I have not had time to think of anything except pensions." Speaking of the hundreds of bills which had been referred to his committee for action, he said the private one embraced Mexican claims, Revolutionary claims, claims of 1812 and army and navy claims prior to the war and subsequent. The amount of pension asked varies from $8 to $50 per month. Some of these claims have been introduced in Congress after Congress, without ever securing even a report, and Mr. Bliss says most of them are meritorious and ought to have been honored years ago. Another class of claims which have increased Mr. Bliss's work pertains to the life-saving service. It remains to be seen whether the House will look with favor on legislation to pension the widows and orphans of men who have lost their lives in this branch of the public service. Of course this sort of law making is in the sentimental vein to some extent, and the success of the measure will depend on the amount of sympathy that can be raised in the House of Representatives.

The House Committee on Public Buildings hold that they have far better facilities for ascertaining the needs of the towns in which it is proposed to erect buildings than the President, and they have unanimously agreed to recommend the passage of the Allentown (Pa.) public building bill over his veto. The report claims to contain no reflection whatever on the course he has taken in the matter.

Inauguration Day is to be a holiday in the District of Columbia. The Senate seconds the House motion and the House seconds the Senate's motion. Each passes the other's bill. Such Congressional unanimity in respect to a matter of District legislation is unusual.

The Prohibitionists count on casting 740,000 votes this year. In 1884 Governor St. John got 150,000, and the vote at the Congressional and State elections in 1886 was not quite 300,000. Such an enormous increase will necessarily make some States doubtful that are now reckoned in one way or the other as certain. Among them are California, Minnesota, Michigan and even Illinois, in which latter State, it is said, the Prohibitionists will go to the polls 50,000 strong. Another petition praying for Prohibition in the District of Columbia was presented to the Senate during the week. It contained the names of 7,000, from various parts of the country. *

REFORM NEWS.

THE MOVEMENT IN THE SOUTH.

THE OLD FORT HELD BY GEN. PHELPS—AMONG THE CHURCHES UP THE RIVER.

I visited Camp Parapet, about eight miles above the city on the Mississippi river. This old fort was established by the Confederates in 1860, and captured by Gen. B. F. Butler after his capture of New Orleans. Just across the river was Fort Banks. Federal troops remained at Camp Parapet until 1868, when they were removed. Gen. J. W. Phelps was in command at this fort, and is well remembered by the old settlers. There remains nothing of this fort to make one understand that this was at one time a federal stronghold, saving the most excellent magazine, which seems to be ready for immediate use.

This is a very trifling-looking town, with 450 inhabitants, nine-tenths of whom are colored, all owning their own homes and gardens, with a few exceptions. There are two liquor places; three colored churches, two Baptist and one Methodist; and one young men's secret lodge (colored). The women mostly seem to be afraid of the lodges.

I met Rev. Wm. Ellis, pastor of Ebenezer Baptist church of Seymourville, near Plaquemine, where I labored last year. He invited me to come up to his church. I walked from house to house and distributed N. C. A. literature and conversed freely on the secrecy question. Bro. Ellis and I walked down to Carrollton, and I lectured there last night on minor secret orders in Zion First Free Mission Baptist church, Rev. Henry Davis, pastor. This church is well mixed with the lodge, although Rev. Davis and his deacons are Anti-masons. Some of the sisters grew very uneasy while I was speaking against their secret societies. Strange to see how deluded these poor people are! Elders Davis and Ellis very heartily endorsed my lecture. I distributed tracts and Cynosures to the congregation. I met Rev. Guy Beck, pastor of the First Free Mission Baptist church. He had read of my Amite City difficulty with the lodge and thought it an outrage. He said, "Keep up courage, my son. God is with you; go on."

NEW TEXAS, LA, JUNE 4TH, 1888.—I left Plaquemine last Thursday morning on the steamer Warren. I met Bro. A. Sumner of Odenburg, La., on the steamer, who had never joined the lodge because he thought it wrong for Christians. He said the lodges in Atchafalaya are on the decline, and if I come up there and lecture I would kill out lodgery. I also met Mr. F. O. Boyer, of Moreauville, La., a student of New Orleans University. He was also opposed to lodgery, and invited me to come to his home and lecture.

I distributed tracts on the boat, and handed Captain Kennison of the steamer a copy of "Facts Stated by Thurlow Weed," which he kindly received. The captain talked very freely on the oppressed condition of the Negro and his intemperate habits. One young man on the boat, after reading one tract, said, "That won't amount to anything. That's a Prohibition movement. I was in Texas last last year during the Prohibition fight, and I tell you the whisky men beat them ten to one. The idea of oppressing a man so that he can't drink what he pleases is unjust." I tried to explain the object of our work, when he denounced it all as a Prohibition movement. I was glad to learn from this whisky man that to disturb the lodge disturbs King Alcohol. We trust our Prohibition friends will give the language of this New Orleans whisky lodge man a thorough investigation.

I landed at New Texas late Thursday evening and was kindly received by Rev. Pierre Johuson and his kind wife. I found Bro. Johnson very busy about his farm work, but he took time to drive with me around the country. The crops are in fine condition. Bro. Johnson owns a little farm of sixty acres with a comfortable dwelling. He reads the Cynosure and highly commends our work. I preached at Bright Morning Star Baptist church, Rev. P. Johnson, acting pastor, Sabbath at 10 A. M., to a crowded house. The people endorsed my sermon in strongest terms. Bro. Johnson drove me in his buggy ten miles down Bayou Fordoche to Zion Traveler Baptist church, Rev. Jack Gibbs, pastor, where Rev. W. Carter, with his congregation, had joined Bro. Gibbs, and they were patiently awaiting my arrival to preach at 7:30 P. M. Bro. Gibbs said to me, "For God's sake say something to touch their secrets." The church was crowded until some had to stand on the outside. There is a Methodist lodge fisherman a few miles below Bro. Gibbs who has been fishing with lodge bait; but, thank God, the fish didn't bite, and now I think his great teeth are broken. I distributed tracts freely in both churches and also gave each pastor "Freemasonry Illustrated." Bro. Gibbs's church made up $2.00 and gave me, also Bro. Johnson's church, $1.75. The colored people, with some few exceptions, are very poor and hardly live above starvation, many of them working the whole year and not getting $5.

The State authorities allow the penitentiary lessees to work convicts on all the public works, and on some farms too; and for the most trifling offense a poor Negro is arrested, convicted and placed in the convict gang. As long as our governments tolerate this convict labor system, the penitentiaries will continue to be filled. The poor Negroes here are compelled to work on the plantations for such wages as the farmer chooses to pay them, and pay whatever price they are charged at the plantation stores for rations and other necessaries of life. But, notwithstanding all this, there are men claiming to be ministers of the Gospel and lodge missionaries going through these parts trying to organize secret lodges to rob these poor people yet more. It is a shame, but I am writing facts.

Thank God, lodgery has been kept out of New Texas thus far. Hundreds here would gladly read the Cynosure, but they are not able to subscribe for it. Now is a time and here is a place where our reform friends can do much good by sending the Cynosure free. If you send tracts and Cynosures here, the country for miles around will be leavened.

RACCOURCI, LA., JUNE 6TH.—I stopped at New Texas postoffice to get some stamps and mucilage. I had to pay 25cts for a 5-cent bottle of mucilage. If the poor people have to pay 75 per cent cash above the regular price, what must the yearly hands pay? Surely not less than 150 per cent.

I preached at Little Rock Baptist church Tuesday evening to a large and attentive congregation. Rev. A. Lewis, the pastor, and the better part of his congregation heartily endorsed the sermon. However, there were a few objectors. The church made up $1.15 and gave me, and I distributed tracts and gave away several books. The lodge is paralyzed in Raccourci. FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BRO. COUNTEE SICK.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Weary and worn, the Master has said to me, Lie down and rest. So I am now confined to my bed. I hope to be up soon and about the Master's business.

The enemy is again at work and last Friday night we had to exclude one of our members for joining a secret lodge. The season of picnics and midnight revelries is upon us, and our young people are in danger of being entrapped by these wiles of the devil; hence I have to be constantly on the watch. I have had no chance to hold up since I preached my first sermon against the lodge in June, 1885. It has been and is yet a hard fight. Memphis is a hot bed of secrecy and our church is in the center of it.

In our church meeting last Friday night we excluded a dear one to us all; but we are determined no matter what the cost, no man nor woman who attends theatres, circuses, balls, midnight picnics and secret or worldly societies can be fellowshiped as a member of the Tabernacle Baptist church.

I am now down and need rest, and hope to get away as soon as possible. My physician says I must have absolute rest. R. N. COUNTEE.

NEEDS OF WEST AFRICAN MISSIONS.

KOOLONG STATION, SHAINGAY DISTRICT,
Sherbro Missions, W. C. Africa,
April 18th, 1888.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR SIR:—I have received from the Superintendent of this mission "Lyrics on Secrecy" and other pamphlets, which were read with a great deal of interest, and to advantage, since my ideas on the subject have been enlarged and my belief strengthened that secret societies in all forms and spheres are a curse to the human family.

It has very much puzzled me to conceive how ministers of the religion which has its foundation in our blessed Lord Jesus, and whose servants they profess to be, could reconcile themselves to the idea of being connected with, as supporters and promoters of, institutions whose very existence is opposed to truth and justice, liberty and a free conscience; whereas they preach "salvation" to their congregations through "Jesus Christ," other than whom is "no name given under heaven whereby we must be saved," and who has declared, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." Could those be said to be walking worthy of the vocation to which they have been called? Fie on their religion!

Your Association has taken a good and bold stand "on the Lord's side," and success to it! Would there were many more Christians and associations that have moral courage to fight, with "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon," for country, home and God. The end of all Christians should be, "the glory of the Lord."

In Africa there are numerous secret orders for men and women alike, all of which tend to degrade and debase the people. In this country our work is largely obstructed by the combined influence of the Purroh, Tomah, Yassie, Bundo, Kofong and other secret societies, into which boys and girls, nay, even infants are initiated; and it is a known fact that in such parts not under the British Government the law of the country makes it compulsory for everyone to be connected with one or other of these societies. It is nothing strange here on procession days to learn of men, women and children being seized and forced into the lodges.

I have often wondered what the white people would think of themselves after hearing what the natives say to the missionaries whenever they raise their voice against secrecy. They tell us that their white brethren are themselves members of secret orders, though they claim to be Christians, and how can they at all dissuade them (i. e., the natives) from secrecy. As if to tell the whites of Europe and America, "Brethren, take out the beam from your own eyes, then you may see clearly to take out the mote from our eyes."

There is but one way which, if opened up to the missionaries, would prove a mighty antidote to secrecy and its degenerating influences in this country; and that, in my humble opinion, is in EDUCATING THE WOMEN.

Very little, indeed, a miserable little has been done in this direction. It must be patent to all right thinking people that if the future mothers of the country be taught in the things of God, they will feel it their pride and duty to train up their children in the way they should go, the Lord's way, so that when they are old they will not depart from it. Who does not know the influence of a mother, a Christian mother! And how many such may be found in this country?

A "Girl's Home" into which girls from all parts of the country may be gathered (and sheltered from the baneful influences which are ruining them by the thousands daily——what a thought!) and taught such things pertaining to their spiritual and temporal welfare, would be just the right agency.

There are very many young men trained in our mission stations who would have been of much service to the work and a blessing to the country, but for their being unequally yoked. Others remain unmarried from want of suitable partners. Are there none to come to the rescue of the girls, the future mothers, and thus save the nations? Will you help us? God help you! With Christian salutation, yours in Christ.

J. ARTHUR RICHARDS.

PROHIBIT THEM ALL.

SEYMOUR LAKE, Mich., May 28, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I once traveled "toward the East," the source of light, and found nothing but darkness. Why? Because the father of Masonry, the devil, was my leader. He was leading me down to hell. When the Lord Jesus Christ saved my soul, he made me a thorough Prohibitionist. Praise his holy name! And I believe, according to the Word of God, he will make every sincere Christian a temperance worker. Not only that, but opposed to Masonry, tobacco, and everything unlike Christ. But where is the remedy? It seems not to be in the ballot, nor in our courts of justice, our churches, or laws.

It is indeed a dark time for Michigan, when secret societies and whisky control churches and courts. May God help us and prepare a way for our escape. Whisky and Masonry are twin brothers; they go hand-in-hand, leading men and women down to ruin. The Republican party has betrayed its trust,—sold out to the rum power.

Can I trust the present Prohibition party? I answer, No. Why? Because the leaders are men high in Masonry, sworn to help each other, right or wrong. If there is a separation from the lodge power it will have to be at the ballot box. My prayer is, God bless the American party. I am in for the war. D. BENJAMIN.

NOTE.—Will Bro. Benjamin send us the name of any leader among the Prohibitionists who is "high in Masonry?" The Cynosure is not aware of any, and we wish to be correct.—ED.

THE LIGHT MUST SHINE.

NEW ORLEANS, La.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have read your paper with diligence and care, and to-day am glad to say that I find satisfactory evidences of the outspringing light of the righteous.

In your last issue I found inserted some few remarks from my worthy young brother, F. J. Davidson, concerning myself and congregation, respecting the lodgery system. For my share in the fight, I heartily co-operate with you. I am an enemy to such evil combinations as secret societies having connection with the church.

When God said, Let there be light, he intended that a division should be made, or else he never would have separated the day from the night. The light he called day, and the darkness he called night. If a man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, but if he walk in the night, he stumbleth.

The reason I am against secret societies, is because I am a minister of the Gospel, and don't think it right for me to let a vile sinner take the Bible to swear me in as a lodge member. I have no members in my church who belong to any organization of the kind. I have belonged to two, and find it an obstruction to the ministry, and found my error, seeing I was hasty in being led into temptation (Eccl. 11: 7). Truly light is sweet, and I am a child of the light. Jesus Christ is my sun. I am one of his rays. The light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehends it not. I am a friend to Cæsar as Christ was; that is, to save his soul by my preaching and teaching. But to take his hand and let him lead me into the ditch I will not be his friend. (Rev.) J. G. WRACKS.

PITH AND POINT.

TRACT WORK IN KANSAS.

The tracts you sent me have stirred up the hornets' nest in earnest about Alta Vista. I circulated them at a memorial sermon to the Grand Army. I am trying to give the people light by this means and by sending out the Cynosure, and all other literature that will give the people light upon the subject of Masonry. I find them very ignorant. I pray God to give the truth a lodgment in their hearts. But when the members of churches do get the light, they often seem cowardly, and dare not stand up for the truth. They are so afraid of being called a crank. It is so unpopular to advocate the cause of righteousness. My dear Jesus has so few friends in these days of formalism! May there be many prayers offered in faith by the old veterans of reform that they may have divine aid in selecting Christian candidates. If I had any surplus money it should go into this reform work. We have had no rain here for over two years, enough to raise the watersheds; while in certain localities there have been floods. People are disheartened as I have never seen them before.—JESSE HUNTER, Alta Vista, Kans.

A NEW LIGHT ON A DARK SUBJECT.

You can send me the paper. I like it very much, although I am a Mason. I have been a Master Mason for six years, but have never looked at the matter in the light that your paper puts on it.—(Rev.) J. A. ANTHONY, Forest City, Ark.

FAITH AND WORKS.

I enclose you $5 to help on your grand plan to supply the Cynosure to the preachers of the colored churches in the South, and will not forget to pray for a blessing on every copy. God bless the Association and all its officers.—GEO. CLARK, Oberlin, O.

A GOOD PROMISE.

I readily accept the Cynosure with thanks. Will do all in my power for the work. You have my sympathy and prayers.—(Rev.) J. M. WILLIAMS, Mound Landing, Mississippi.

LITERATURE.

DIVINE HEALING or the Atonement for Sin and Sickness. By Captain R. Kelso Carter, for twenty years of the Pennsylvania Military College and editor of the Kingdom Price 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

Captain Carter has been recognized for some years as an eminent teacher of the doctrine of healing by faith. A year ago he took part in a controversy in the Century, defending his views against the arguments of Dr. Buckley of the Christian Advocate and Dr. Schauffler. Captain Carter has been a successful manager of an educational institution, and he has brought to the discussion of his subject a warm heart and zeal for the Master, but in some points this fervor makes him forget the application of some plain Scriptures, and he fails as well in his logic. His investigation has been wide, and the book has a peculiar value as a summary of the principles and arguments of those who maintain the doctrine of faith-healing. It has also great value in stimulating in the Christian church a stronger and deeper faith in God as a helper in every time of need,—daily trial, perplexity, grief or distress. We cannot have too many or too earnest exhortations to this. We are ever lacking in such confidence in God. We cannot doubt that the Lord Jesus Christ is as able now to heal as ever, and his promises to answer prayer are never failing. We may ask for health and strength as freely as for any other temporal gift, and we shall have the answer if it is for God's glory. But if we attempt to reduce such prayer and its answer to mathematics and formulate a system of faith-healing, we do not honor the Holy Spirit, who cannot be controlled by human formulas, if we may believe Christ's answer to Nicodemus. While, therefore, we recommend Captain Carter's work for its zeal and its much-needed instruction to the church on certain points, yet there is a defect in his philosophy, which must not be over-looked.

"World-English: the Universal Language." Every one has heard of the butcher who, after a long search for his knife, at last found it in his mouth: so speakers of English have been seeking for a universal language, when, lo! it is in their mouths. The intelligibility of English words has been obscured by a dense mist of letters. This is now dispersed by A. Melville Bell, who has already won a world-wide reputation through his invention of "Visible Speech," the great boon to deaf mutes. Professor Bell calls this new discovery of his "World-English," and the result is a language which cannot fail to meet with acceptance, and at once supercede the supposed necessity for "Volapuk," or any other artificial language. No language could be invented for international use that would surpass English in grammatical simplicity, and in general fitness to become the tongue of the world. "World-English" is published in pamphlet form by N. D. C. Hodges, 47 Lafayette Place, New York. Price 25 cents.

The Lincoln History in the June Century contains chapters on "The Advance," "Bull Run," "Fremont," and "Military Emancipation." A striking point in this installment is the account of Lincoln's reception of the news of Bull Run. The authors give a remarkable letter written by Horace Greeley after the battle, before the battle Mr. Greeley having urged that the armies should be ordered "Forward to Richmond! Forward to Richmond!" In this letter, dated July 29th, Midnight, Mr. Greeley says to Mr. Lincoln: "You are not considered a great man, and I am a hopelessly broken one." He thereupon urges the President to give up the war immediately if he (the President) should conclude that the rebels "cannot be beaten." The second of Mr. Kennan's illustrated articles, is on "Plains and Prisons of Western Siberia." The frontispiece of the magazine shows an exile party on a muddy road near Tiumen. There is nothing more astonishing in this article than Mr. Kennan's account of the hospital wards. He says: "At last, having finished our inspection of the main building, we came out into the prison yard, where I drew a long, deep breath of pure air, with the delicious sense of relief that a half drowned man must feel when he comes to the surface of the water." The last of the series of Western articles by Mr. Roosevelt is entitled "The Ranchman's Rifle on Crag and Prairie." This, like the other articles, is accompanied by Remington's graphic sketches of Western scenes. Another illustrated article is written by Mr. Theodore De Vinne, printer of the Century, and is entitled "A Printer's Paradise: The Plantin-Moretus Museum at Antwerp." Prof. Atwater's food article this month discusses the question "What We Should Eat." Among his topics are "Standards for Daily Dietaries," "American vs. European Diet," "Food and Wages," and "Reasons for Mixed Diet," etc. His paper is accompanied by portraits of von Liebig, Bernard, Playfair, and Payen.

The English Illustrated Magazine for June opens with a beautiful frontispiece "Solitude." In the "Glimpses of Old English Homes" series, Eridge Castle belonging to the Marquis of Abergavenny is described and illustrated. Among the portraits is a rare one of Queen Elizabeth when a blooming girl, and another of Warwick "the Kingmaker." C. F. Gordon Cumming writes of "Pagodas, Aurioles and Umbrellas." His observations among the Oriental nations, and their use of these structures and implements in religion and as distinctions of rank is most interesting and instructive. The fine illustrations are from drawings by the author. Prof. Minto's story on the uprising of the English peasants five hundred years ago loses no interest as it proceeds.

Louise Chandler Moulton writes in the St. Nicholas a full but simple memorial of "Louisa May Alcott," containing extracts from her letters, and the article is illustrated by a new picture of Miss Alcott, which is much more pleasing than any before published, and also by a picture of her adopted daughter (the child of her sister "Amy"), Lulu Nieriker. A strong leading article is entitled "A Great Show," by Prof. Alfred Church, describing the Circus Maximus at Rome. It is finely illustrated by E. H. Blashfield. Thomas Nelson Page continues the excellent serial, "Two Little Confederates," and Celia Thaxter contributes a charming children's story, "Cat's-Cradle."

The approaching "heated term" renders an article on "Summer Indigestion and Diarrhœa" in the current number of Babyhood particularly seasonable. Its writer, Dr. H. D. Chapin, gives mothers just the advice and information which they require to tide the little ones safely over the trying months before them. Of equal interest will be found an article on "Domestic Remedies," consisting of hints and suggestions by Babyhood's readers, and appropriate editorial comment. A novel feature is "The Fathers' Parliament," a department opened for the purpose of enabling the mothers' husbands to express their opinions and air their grievances on a great variety of subjects.

The title of the rose as the Queen of Flowers has been disputed by Orchid and Tulip, but never successfully, and to-day this royal flower holds full sway in the gardens of half the world. Many books have been printed describing the Rose, yet the American Garden for June, a special Rose number, presents many new and interesting facts upon this ever-pleasing topic. On the cover itself blooms a beautiful rose, and a basket of roses is the subject of a fine plate. There is a pretty sketch by Victor Dagnion, a view of a rose-covered cottage in California and several pictures of varieties new to fame and of great interest to gardening folk. This issue of the American Garden (New York) contains numerous articles from practical writers, descriptive of the newer roses; of successful methods of cultivation; of the art of arrangement; on roses as shrubs, etc., etc.

IN BRIEF.

India embraces a territory as large as the United States east of the Mississippi River, and has a population of 250,000,000. Of these 175,000,000 are Hindus, 50,000,000 are Mohammedans, and the remainder are divided among other religions, as Buddhism, Parseeism, etc. It is said that about three hundred dialects are spoken by the people of India.

Sho Nemoto, a Japanese student in the University of Vermont, gives some interesting facts about his country. The Japanese, he says, read more American than English books. Last year 85 000 English and 119,000 American books were imported. Until recently all the editors of all the newspapers were men, but in March last a temperance paper was established in Tokio by Miss Asai and Mrs. Sasaki, the Secretary of the Tokio Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Two young ladies of South Chester, Pa, went into a store where was a galvanic battery, and the proprietor asked them to try it. Each grasped a pole of the battery, and wondered why no shock was felt. The proprietor suggested that they kiss each other. They did so, and there was a shock indeed. One of the young women shrieked and fell over backward. The other made no sound, but fainted. Cold water brought them both around, none the worse for the kiss.

The great tunnel through the Cascade Mountains on the Northern Pacific road just finished is 9,900 feet long, and through solid rock nearly all the way. When the final piercing was accomplished, there was nothing left to do but to lay a track. Trains will be running through it within one week. The tunnel was begun early in 1886, and the contract was for about $2,000,000. When the work was begun there were no roads into the mountains and all the heavy machinery had to be hauled in on wheels and then transferred to runners. In some places the pressure of the mountain is so great that clay is forced up from the bottom and an inverted arch of stone had to be constructed to keep the clay down. The work has been carried on by electric light, power for which is supplied by a small mountain stream which flows down the mountain and falls directly over the mouth of the tunnel.

A strange spectacle was seen at Findlay, O., in the northern sky shortly after 11 o'clock May 22, which has caused the greatest consternation among the people. It was the representation of a human hand, of immense proportions, awe-inspiring in its realistic vividness. Early in the evening the sky in the north had a peculiar appearance, which, as the night wore on, took the form of flashes of light constantly changing in color, pulsing up from the horizon and again subsiding, but with each appearance becoming more brilliant and unnatural. This continued until about 11 o'clock, when those watching the phenomena were terrified to see these plumes of light concentrating into a distinct object, which soon assumed the proportions of a giant hand, well formed, and as distinct as if painted upon the black background of the sky. The spectacle lasted for about an hour, and was witnessed by hundreds, who were breathless with suppressed excitement, until slowly it began to fade away and finally disappeared altogether. It was one of the strangest and yet most impressive exhibitions of nature ever witnessed, and speculation regarding its cause and significance will not abate for many a day.

On the election of Mrs. Carse to the Board of Education the Legal News says: "This is the first time a woman has ever been elected or appointed upon a school board in Chicago or Cook county. This seems strange in a city like Chicago, where there are so many educated and talented women. The law making women eligible to any office under the general or special school laws of this State has been in force since 1873. It was written and introduced by Judge Bradwell while a member of the House of Representatives. Thirteen or fourteen women were elected county superintendents of schools at the next election after the passage of this law. There has not been a general State election for school officers since, but that some women have been elected School Superintendents. There shou'd be women upon every school board. There are certain matters connected with the education of children, and particularly girls, that women are more capable of passing upon than men. The mother, as well as the father, should have an official voice in the management of our schools. To elect one woman to a school board can hardly be called a representation. Women in numbers should have a fair representation on all educational boards When the Woman's College turned over its property to the Northwestern University and became a part of the University a solemn compact was entered into that a certain number of the trustees of the University should always be women. It was but a few years after this compact was entered into before it was broken by the University, and the stipulated number of women were not elected trustees."

DR. PILLBAGS' DIAGNOSIS.

To Dr. Pillbags, Patrick came
With a most woful face;
Says he, "Dear Docther, phat's your name,
Will you plaze trate my case."
The doctor looked him in the eye,
His tongue he made him show;
Said he, "My man, you're going to die;

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1888.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the National Christian Association is fixed by by-law No. 4 on the third Thursday in June of each year. Corporate members and all friends of the N. C. A. will notice that this occurs on June 21, 1888, and be prompt in attendance for the transaction of the annual business at 10 o'clock A. M., at the Carpenter Building, No. 221 West Madison Street, Chicago.

H H GEORGE, President.
W. I. PHILLIPS, Rec. Sec'y.

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES IN MISSISSIPPI.

This is to give notice to the readers of the Cynosure that a convention of the Associated Churches of Christ will be held in Simon Chapel, six miles north of Columbus, Miss., on the 27th of July, 1888. We are trying by the help of the Lord to let the people know the meaning of Christian reform work. J. L POLLARD, Lecturer.

THE FUND for sending the Cynosure South grows week by week until the amount we asked for some months ago is almost in sight. Such appeals for the aid of our Northern friends as Bro. Davidson and others send up ought to be answered quickly.

PROF. KIMBALL of New Hampshire sends us letters from Hardwick and Brattleboro, approving of meetings in the Vermont churchcs—prayer and speaking meetings for the kingdom of Christ and the overthrow of the kingdom of darkness.

THE COMMENCEMENT at Wheaton College, June 20th inst., always draws a crowd. The growth of the institution is steady and firm: and as whatever brings people together in masses, if it does not purify, corrupts them, this annual gathering should be preceded and attended by prayer. When Oberlin was in its glory, its commencements were held in the large tent, holding two to three thousand people, with a pennon floating over it bearing the inscription, "HOLINESS TO THE LORD." The thrill of those occasions is remembered yet. The preliminary rehearsals of music, orations, etc., were then intermingled with prayer.

BISHOP WRIGHT, en route to his district on the Pacific coast, writes us suggesting a likeness and sketch of Gamaliel Bailey, the anti-slavery editor, for insertion in the Cynosure. We will endeavor to comply with the Bishop's suggestion. The senior editor of the Cynosure had an early and intimate acquaintance with Dr. Bailey at Cincinnati, where his press was three times broken by the mob, and as often restored. He was an admirable man, and the American people should not let his memory, and the great work he accomplished for the country, fade out of the minds of the children of those who stood with him through the earthquake which overthrew American slavery. Let us also have a portrait and sketch of Bishop Milton Wright.

ROMANISM IN THE SOUTH.

Gov. McEnery, of Louisiana, last winter called a convention to inducc emigration from Northern States South. The New Orleans Times-Democrat took a loud and leading part in stimulating this emigration, and in one number reportcd eighty families from Iowa booked for southwestern Louisiana, near Lake Charles.

Now the Presbyterian papers of the different classes, Reformed, United, and those of the Southern General Assembly, unite in charging Cardinal Gibbons, and his battalion of subordinate priests, with joining the hue and cry for Southern emigration to Romanize the South, by raising money from Protestants to be put into the hands of priests, who are to collect and plant colonies of Papists on the cheap, rich, vacant lands in the extreme Southern States. It is said the Legislature of South Carolina has already voted a sum from the taxes of her people to forward this infamous scheme which is to accomplish a three-fold purpose, viz.:

1. Furnish white buyers to purchase the land of the old slave-holders, who will starve rather than sell a foot of land to the Negrocs.

2. To settle Irish immigrants together in colonies so that priests can manage them.

3. To furnish ex-slave-holders and their children, who are, as they think, "born to command," with a constituency of religious and civil born underlings, who, in Ireland, have been trained to abject submission by Irish priests and English landlords.

If the Southern Presbyterian clergy knew their mercies, instead of standing aloof from reforms and relying on or teaching the Catechism and Confession of Faith, which, however excellent, were conceived and written in the style and language of a former age, they would buy and read the new book on "Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry," which shows, on the clearest and most substantial proofs, that Popery is the mother of Masonry and one with it; that both teach salvation by ceremonies instead of salvation by Christ, and that both will blend with Mormonism in the final struggle of Satan with Christ for the world's worship. True, both Popery and Mormonism preach Christ; but Mormons teach him as a tool of priestly incantation, and Papists, in practice, subordinate the Saviour to his mother and the Pope. As a whole, the Southern Presbyterian clergy are a fine set of men, as we have found by recent social intercourse with them. But their ignorance of Masonry is enormous. Scarce one of them knows that Roman Catholics in Southern cities are often both Catholics and Masons, but really believe that Popery and Masonry are antagonistic. If they would read this book they would soon find their mistake. The Superintendent of Public Instruction in the State of Louisiana is both a Papist and Freemason.

THE MARTYR PERIOD OF REFORMS.

"Humanity sweeps onward; where to-day the Martyr stands To-morrow standeth Judas, with the silver in his hands."
—J. Russell Lowell.

Every reform must have its martyr period; and the persecution is always proportioned to the interests involved and the power of the parties engaged, or rather, the balance of power. For if the question is fundamental, and the parties nearly equal, the persecution becomes war.

The present Democratic party was the last form of opposition to royality and heredity, nobility by popular rights. John Hampden and Algernon Sidney, with Cromwell and his associates, whose exhumed bones were hung at Tyburn, were of the popular party in Europe, and Gladstone and his followers represent that party now. But one is amused and amazed at the crowd calling itself the "Democratic party," which has just re-nominated Cleveland at St. Louis. The press reports show them to be a miscellaneous mass, with no political or patriotic end to distinguish them from any other crowd of American people. "Ship-money," "primogeniture," "hereditary titles of nobility," and taxation (of men, not women) without representation, which Democrats resisted on the 17th of June, 1775, at Bunker Hill, the shouting crowd at St. Louis have either forgotten or never knew, and as to "inalienable" popular rights, the party at St. Louis voted for Buchanan, who undertook to force Kansas people to take a constitution from the points of Missouri bayonets; and, before him, voted for Polk, who waged war for Texas with the open, avowed purpose of adding four large slave States to the American Union.

The Republican party was born in 1856, when the Whigs had been left in a dead minority by the withdrawal of the Abolitionists and the mad violence of the slave-holders, who went over to the Democratic party which passed the Atherton gag and the Fillmore bill of September, 1850, the intent of which was to hang up Abolitionists at their own doors unless they would cease to meet and discuss slavery; to imprison one year and fine $1,000 all who would not help catch run-away slaves; and their members did drag Rev. Geo. Storrs from his knees while praying in an Abolition meeting in New Hampshire, and imprison Prudence Crandall in Connecticut for teaching black children to read.

Such was the birth, and such the parentage of the present Republican party. It grew rapidly to maturity, and was soon largely run by life-long Democrats, such as Trumbull, Logan and Grant. They were not martyrs then.

The Prohibition party is now nearly out of its martyr-period; and would be quite out by its sepulchral silence concerning the lodges, which have many more representatives in the saloons than any other class except Roman Catholics. This silence is all the lodges ask—all, indeed, their deities, whose atmosphere is silence and their method secrecy, asked in the time of Christ. But the lodge distrusts the Prohibition party, because the lodge-leaders, who own the temples, know that the great majority of conscientious Prohibitionists are non-Masons and will be Anti-masons as soon as their attention is called to the fact that lodge oaths bind Masons to stand by distillers, brewers and saloonists, who are brother Masons, and if they fail to do so are perjured Masons by Masonic law.

The late Prohibition nominating convention at Indianapolis received and read some important information concerning lodgery; and as the lodge, like all false religions, is unprofitable, great changes will take place before another four years come round. Far seeing men will see that it will be easier to form a new party than to turn the Masons out of the Prohibition ranks; and they will awake to the fact that there are hosts of voters in the two old parties, and even in the lodges themselves, who care nothing for the lodges or who wish them dead. The numbers of these Anti-masonic Masons are greatly increased by their disgust at strikes and laborers lodges, who, like Macbeth's witches:

"Keep the word of promise to the ear,
But break it to the heart," of the masses. And if these elements are drawn into a new party, that party will be an "American party" in fact, if not in name, in 1892.

But we must not forget that we Americans are still in the martyr-period. True, as one Mason said, they "don't intend to kill any more Morgans." Popery don't burn Bibles and heretics when they will lose more than they gain by it. But lodges, meeting secretly in every city, town, village and hamlet in the United States, have ample time and means to

"Out-venom all the worms of Nile."

But the very fact that the two old parties have now, between them, only John Randolph's seven principles, viz., "five loaves and two fishes," makes the success of a third or reform party rapid and certain. Cleveland is nominated by acclamation without a competitor. And though the Republicans will push their canvass with the courage of despair, they have always been inferior to the Democrats as mere politicians. Their long lease of power for twenty-four years came to them as an anti-slavery party, and their boast was that they were "a party," or rather, "the party of principle." This prestige is now no longer theirs. And Mr. Blaine's double withdrawal from nomination is generally believed to be, as explained by St. John, because he sees the Republican party is doomed to fall, and he does not wish to be its candidate when it dies.

The lodge also, when it has fallen, both in Europe and in this country has had a sudden collapse, for two reasons: 1. The argument is all against it; and, 2. Their rule is not to defend themselves, but keep dark and lie still. But when the battle is joined, as it is and will be, the side which does not fight, falls. Indeed the haughty, bitter, sneering hate of the lodge is already passed away. The Prohibition vote four years ago was 150,000. Two years later the State elections showed that it had doubled; and next fall will show the reform vote doubled again. And the gain is solid gain, made by conviction; so that our martyr-period is passing rapidily away.

RESCUING FALLEN WOMEN.

If pure women are angels, corrupt ones are devils, differing only from those fallen angels which the Scriptures reveal to us, by being within reach of the blood of Christ.

In the Southern parishes of Louisiana we were told of men so debased by the lust of liquor that they waited till their wives, who had earned shoes by their work, were asleep, and then stole and sold those shoes for drink. In New Orleans a man, now imprisoned, tied up his wife and lashed her till she was a gore of blood, and then cut her throat because she did not give him seventy-five cents to buy liquor with, which she had earned by washing. The food he had eaten, which gave him strength to murder her, she had earned by her labor. Such instances of horrible human debasement have not deterred Christian philanthropy from attempting the rescue of the slaves of liquor by total abstinence and prohibition.

But such public organized movement has been devised reluctantly for the rescue of the fallen woman; and left to herself, "her feet go to death, and her steps take hold on hell," Prov. 5: 5. To discuss her condition leads to pollution by it, and silence concerning it produces that general ignorance which leaves the young exposed to its pitfalls. Some sixty years ago McDowell braved the reproach of the religious press by boldly insisting that the inmates of brothels were within reach of the hope of salvation.

But while, as a rule, the Seventh Commandment has been shunned except by brave men like the elder Dr. Dwight, the Friend Quakers, who first allowed their women to preach, and whose religion was one of mercy to the miserable, started some houses to rescue Magdalenes; and since women have recently come to the front in the temperance war, they have organized a "White Ribbon Army" to wage war, not only on liquor and drunkenness, but on prostitution and the ways which lead to it. But while the fear of indelicacy has shielded the crime which debases the human race toward brutehood beyond all others, ancient literature has been a road to Sodom; and many modern poets and novel writers have been and are now procurers to houses of assignation, and are, in the words of Cowper,

"Flesh-flies of the land, who fasten on the fair,
And suck, and leave a crawling maggot there."

The Cynosure, from its inherent dislike of badges, especially those which proclaim the piety or purity of the wearer, has said next to nothing on the subject of ribbons, white, red or blue. But we give our readers in this number the neat and sensible speech of Mrs. M. M. Wolfe, mistress of a home provided by a benevolent lady for homeless girls in the city of New Orleans. We are personally acquainted with Mrs. Wolfe, and with many of her Board of Directors, who are sound Christians and prominent citizens. Her speech speaks for itself; and if this Christian home for the fallen does no more than throw light on the crime of Shakespeare's "Fat and greasy citizens," who seduce ignorant young girls scarce above the age of young children and turn them out to "starve upon the sin of promiscuous prostitution,"and expose the damning nature of false religions which pretend to save men by ceremonies, while it lights their way to hell by lodge-lights or candles kept burning before crucifixes in brothels, this New Orleans "Home for the Homeless" will be worth all it costs.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF REFORM PARTIES.

The American party never more really existed than in the convictions of a handful of "the best men and women on earth. Those who used to talk of "organizing" the people of the United States upon the platform which we adopted sixteen years ago, were those who shut up the eyes of their body, and walk by the light of their souls.

We are now no further advanced than the truth has spread that the lodge is an anti-Christ. But that is much farther than the Anti-masonic party was in 1834, when Satan turned Abolitionist, and the slavery question swallowed up the Anti-masonic party, and pushed it out of the political arena, for the (to him) very good reason, that the lodge sends more souls to hell by devil worship than slavery did or could by its injustice, cruelty, and the enforced prostitution of the females of the colored race.

The chief advantage the American party will derive from the triumph of prohibition, is that the fall of the saloon power will put us in reach of the American people who have ceased to be Americans, and must be made Americans, as their fathers were, by light and truth: perhaps by pillories and prisons and a seven years war.

"One at a time" is a maxim on which the masses always act: and the fall of the saloon is the fall of the porch of Babylon. The fall of the lodge is to be the fall of Babylon itself, and that, it would seem, is to come next. So we must keep steadily at work. We do not shout so loud as the Prohibitionists now do. The Democrats can beat us at that, —the emptier the louder. But we are acting with the Prohibition party to empannel a nation of sober men to try the question, "Shall Christ or Satan have the worship of mankind?"

THE N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

There were present at the Board meeting, Saturday, brethren Stratton, Gardner, C. A. Blanchard, Hench, Thomson, Fischer, and Worrell. There were also present brethren H. H. Hinman, M. A. Gault, J. Blanchard, W. I. Phillips and H. L. Kellogg.

An official reply from the secretaries of the American Missionary Association to a communication from the Board was reported, in which it is stated that a presentation of the secret society evil would be provided at the next annual meeting of the American Missionary Association.

The reports of the various standing committees were heard. The Building Committee reported a total income from the Carpenter building to be $1,479.35. Total expenses for repairs, coal, gas and janitor bills, $759.13. Net income, $720.22.

The Publication Committee reported five tracts and one pamphlet approved by them during the year. Superintendent W. I. Phillips, of the American Anti-secrecy League, reported the work done in that department during the month since this work began. Two conventions have been visited, and correspondence is being held with all prominent candidates for public office.

The report of Rev. H. H. Hinman of his agency in the South was presented (as appears in another column) and approved, and the recommendations were referred to a committee to report to the annual meeting of the Association.

The proposition to secure a series of meetings in Vermont by Pres. J. Blanchard and Rev. Joseph A. Leach was heard. The Treasurer was authorized to pay, if needed, $50 per month for this work, and it was suggested that collections be taken so that it shall be in some degree self-supporting.

Corresponding Secretary Stoddard reported the work at Washington during the month of May. The rent of rooms now amounts to $40 per month. Weekly reform meetings have been begun, and the Free Methodist brethren will have meetings statedly. Propositions for a reading room and industrial school were considered and their adoption postponed, and Secretary Stoddard was requested to attend the annual meeting in Chicago.

The Illinois State Executive Committee proposes to engage one or more young men for two months' work during July and August as colporteurs. It was voted to assist this work by allowing Cynosure subscriptions of sufficient amount to cover their expenses.

The annual report of the Board was read by the secretary, E. R. Worrell, and approved. A proposition from Henry Powers, of Wisconsin, to pay $100 for the use of one column of the Cynosure for a year for arguments in favor of the Seventh-day Sabbath was not favorably regarded, but the kindly feelings of the Board toward Bro. Powers were expressed in a resolution.

A letter from a member of a Masonic lodge in California, expressing his dissatisfaction with the order and desire to undertake public work against it was favorably considered and referred to a committee to correspond further with the brother and his references and report.

THE MICHIGAN CONVENTION:—For lack of any more complete report of the late meeting at Salem, Mich., we copy from the local press: "The evening sessions of the Christian Association's(Anti-masonic) annual meeting here this week were well attended. The speakers were listened to with respectful attention. The exercises were interspersed with songs by the veteran balladist, Geo. W. Clark. While the average Salemite outside the lodge fails to apprehend the disastrous results that portend the farther accessions to the Masonic order, he admires the zeal and the unquestioned honesty of purpose and the burning enthusiasm with which these men attempt to propagate their convictions. The chief speaker of the occasion was President Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Ill., a gentleman of good ability and address, whose ideas were clothed with fine language and were delivered in an earnest, fascinating style. Whether Salem will be made better or worse by this expenditure of time and talent is a problem for the future to solve. Those who listened to the addresses can have no doubt of the sincerity of the desire of these men to do good to the church and to their fellow men." The Michigan brethren should be encouraged by this indication of the good local effect of their State meeting.

—New Orleans still leads the list of Cynosure subscribers, one hundred and sixty copies being taken at that office.

—Bro. Hawley has lately been holding a kind of revival in Page county, Iowa, and sends in over 100 names for our list. God hasten the day when such a work can be done in every county of every State.

—Note the letter of our New Orleans colporteur. Friends who can send packages of old numbers of the Cynosure to some of the pastors whom he names, with a kind letter of encouragement, can greatly help on the good work Bro. Davidson has begun in their congregations.

—The late Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker left to Wheaton College an endowment, adding a condition that it was his wish that an annual sermon should be preached to the students on kindness to animals. President C. A. Blanchard preached that discourse Sabbath morning.

—The Ohio agent does not write at length this week, but has been full of labors, having lectured thirteen times during the two weeks past. Good audiences were present at each occasion and much enthusiasm was manifested, and Cynosure subscribers were everywhere taken. He returned to Columbus last Thursday from Cedarville, and will work at the State capital until the N. C. A. annual meeting on the 21st, which he hopes to attend.

—An independent Southern evangelist, Bro. Raber, who called lately on the Cynosure, corroborates all that brethren Hinman and Davidson and others say of the oppressive social and State regulations which burden the colored people in the country districts. This brother travels widely in the South, and has carefully observed the condition of affairs. He is most earnestly opposed to the lodge, and believes it one of the greatest curses of the South.

—The New York Tribune advertises itself as a lodge organ. It joins hands with the G. A. R. in its effort to reduce the U. S. Treasury surplus by pension bills, and says that from henceforth it will give more attention to the other interests of the order and be one of its best papers. The paper"founded by Horace Greeley" has far enough departed from the principles of that great editor, and has dropped from the high ground of national reform into the mudhole of political organism.

—The Southern Christian Recorder (African M. E. church) of Atlanta published a long letter May 10, vindicating Freemasonry from the injuries it received in a debate which followed soon after Bro. Hinman's last visit to that city, when he spoke in the First Congregational church and to the students at the Gammon School of Theology. The subject for debate was, "Should Ministers Belong to and Encourage Secret Organizations?" A young theological student named Jones seems to have made the strongest speech on the negative, and special attention is given to him in the Recorder letter.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. M. A. Gault returned last week from the Reformed Presbyterian Synod to Chicago. He was present at the N. C. A. Board meeting Saturday, and will spend a short time in Waukesha, Wisconsin, before opening a summer campaign.

—Edward M. Jones, of Marion, Alabama, was one of the graduates at the Gammon School of Theology, Atlanta, Georgia, on the 6th inst. He is a fearless young man, and has been bitterly attacked in the papers because of his opposition to the lodge.

—Geo. W. Clark, who is always ready for an enthusiastic reform meeting, wished much to attend the Indianapolis Convention, but was called back to Salem, where the people had made his acquaintance while attending the late Michigan State Convention, and wanted to hear more from him. So he returned for a lecture on temperance and was welcomed by a full house, to whom he gave an entertaining and instructive address.

—A son of James G. Birney, twice candidate of the Liberty party for President, died lately in Bay City, Michigan, where he had lived since 1856. Another brother, General William Birney, who lives in Washington, wrote the sketch of his father published in the Cynosure, May 1, 1884. The brother lately deceased, named James, had been Lieutenant Governor of Michigan, Minister to Hague under President Grant, had held various offices, State and county, and in his advanced age was President of the Board of Education of Bay City.

—It is said that in the cemetery at Sacramento, California, lie the remains of a son of Alexander Hamilton, the friend and personal adviser of Washington, the great financier who first brought order out of the chaos of the United States Treasury, the opposer of secret societies, who fell by the assassin bullet of the Freemason, Aaron Burr. The grave bears this inscription: "Col. Wm. S. Hamilton, son of Gen. Alexander Hamilton, born in New York, Aug. 4, 1797. He was an early settler and prominent citizen of Wisconsin, coming to California in 1849. He died here Oct. 9, 1850. In size and feature, in talent and character, he much resembled his illustrious father. A friend erects this stone."

The pension business is a perplexing one. Senators are puzzled over the widow business. Senator Cockrell, of Missouri, has been developing his mathematical faculty in discovering the curious fact that, while there are only 895 widows of the Mexican war veterans, there are 11,831 widows of veterans of the war of 1812. He says the farther we get from the war the more numerous the widows become At the rate the 1812 widows are increasing there will be at least 20,000 of them by the end of the century.

—Rev. David McFall of Boston and Mrs. Rev. J. S. T. Milligan and her son, Rev. J. R. J. Milligan, expect to sail this week for Scotland, where Mrs. Milligan will spend the summer with her daughter. Rev. J. S. T. Milligan accompanied them as far as Brooklyn, N. Y., where he will supply the Covenanter pulpit for a few weeks.

THE HOME.

COMFORT ONE ANOTHER.

Comfort one another;
For the way is growing dreary,
The feet are often weary,
And the heart is very sad.
There is heavy burden-bearing,
When it seems that none are caring,
And we half forget that ever we were glad.

Comfort one another;
With the hand-clasp close and tender,
With the sweetness love can render,
And the looks of friendly eyes.
Do not wait with grace unspoken,
While life's daily bread is broken,
Gentle speech is oft like manna from the skies.

Comfort one another;
By the hope of Him who sought us
In our peril—Him who bought us,
Paying with His precious blood:
By the faith that will not alter,
Trusting strength that shall not falter,
Leaning on the One divinely good.

Comfort one another;
Let the grave-gloom lie behind you,
While the Spirit's words remind you
Of the home beyond the tomb.
Where no more is pain or parting,
Fever's flush or tear-drop starting,
But the presence of the Lord, and for all his people room.

AUNT RACHEL'S TREATMENT.

Crash! An ominous sound came from the kitchen as I was sitting for a quiet talk with my friend, Mrs. Morrison. We had just been enjoying a well prepared dinner at her table, and the two or three gentlemen guests had gone.

"Something's broken," I said.

"It sounds like it," she replied.

I expected her to get up and run nervously to the kitchen, but she quietly continued the conversation. A moment after there appeared at the door a Swedish servant with the most woe-begone look on her face, and a tear on either plump cheek. I could not forbear an exclamation of dismay at perceiving that in her hand she held the fragments of my friend's largest meat dish, belonging to her fine dinner-set.

"Broken?" asked Mrs. Morrison, looking at it as she might have looked at the wreck of a kitchen bowl. "You might have selected something else to break, seems to me, Lena," she added, with a little shake of the head, but still with a smile.

"It slipped right out of my hands," said the girl, in great distress.

"Oh, don't stop to fret over it, Lena. You don't break many dishes. No, it's no use to save the pieces; it can't be mended."

"Well, Ruth!" I exclaimed, as Lena, greatly comforted, took her departure. "Pope must surely have known some ancestress of yours, when he wrote:

'And mistress of herself when china falls.'

Any one would think to see how coolly you take the ruin of that handsome dish that you could have a new set any day, if you want it."

"Which is very far from being the case, as you know," said my friend soberly. "I am afraid I cannot match the dish, and if I can, I can scarcely afford the money for it just now."

"But you do not seem to mind the accident at all," I persisted, quite unable to understand her equanimity.

"On, yes, I do—after a fashion," she went on deliberately. "That set was a present from dear old Aunt Rachel, and I am sorry to see any piece of it broken. But if you are wondering because I do not fret over what can't be helped, I can only assure you, Eleanor, that I cannot afford to. It is bad enough to lose the dish without that."

"Anyone will admit that fretting is of no use," I said. "But you are about the only woman I have ever seen who really lived up to the idea."

"I didn't begin that way," replied Ruth, settling back in her chair with a thoughtful expression on her pleasant face. "I was very much given to fretting over small annoyances when I was a good deal younger. It was that same dear Aunt Rachel who cured me by vigorous treatment."

"I should like her recipe, if you can give it to me."

"'Oh, it is the same old one you may hear or read any day of your life: 'Don't fret; it is thankless, rebellious, and utterly useless; never does a bit of good, and always does harm,' with plenty more such plain truths. I think it must have been the sturdy administration that affected me. When we were first married, Fred. and I began housekeeping in our pretty little house with everything nice about it, and were as happy as young people usually are. But my habit of worrying over trifles began putting little blots here and there on the smooth surface of our lives. A broken dish, a stained tablecloth, a poorly ironed article, the flies, the dust, the soot, any petty annoyance, would bring a cloud over me which shut out the brightness all about me. I could see that Fred. was hurt and fretted by it.

"Well, real trouble came at last. Our baby was sick for weeks and weeks, and we thought he would never get well. How I looked back on the days which had been so blessed, and I wondered how I had ever been able to find trouble in trifles! As I prayed that the shadow of death might not so early darken our home, I believed I should never again allow myself to be moved by small troubles. I did not have an opportunity to test my resolution very soon; for as baby recovered I became ill. For many a day I lay far beyond any resolving for the future, almost, indeed, beyond all hope of any future, so far as this world is concerned. The winter had passed before I won my way back to life, and began to take up its care one by one.

I held well to my resolutions, as I rejoiced in being able to oversee the house-cleaning, until I came to the parlor carpet. The room had been shut up for months, had not been properly aired and swept, and the moths had made fearful ravages all around the edges of the carpet. You'll be astonished, Eleanor, that all my equanimity broke down at sight of it."

"No," I said, sympathizingly, "I don't wonder at all. I've known women that would be fairly sick over such a thing."

"It was a beautiful carpet, and I had been very proud of it. I did not find that anything else had suffered from neglect during my illness; but I forgot all the other pleasant facts in view of this distressing one. Even when baby crept over it, crowing in delight at the bright flowers, and trying to pick them with his chubby little hands, I forgot how much I would have given, not so very long ago, to hear a cheerful note from him. Well, just as I was at the culmination of my 'pet,' Aunt Rachel's kindly face beamed upon me for a week's visit.

"'Thankful to see thee so well, dear,' was her greeting. 'The Lord has been good to thee. Not that I don't mean that he would have been good if thee hadn't got well.'

"'Yes, I am very well now, thank you, Aunt Rachel,' I said, after the first inquiries were over. 'Well enough, you see, having passed my great troubles, to settle down to small worries. Look here—isn't this enough to turn the soul of a housekeeper sick?'

"'It is a pity,' she remarked, viewing the mischief.

"'Of course, some things had to be neglected while I was sick,' I continued, petulantly; 'but I never dreamed of such a thing as this.'

"She looked at me with her quiet eyes, always so full, I used to think, of the very peace of heaven.

"'Surely, Ruth, thee isn't going to make the matter worse by vexing thy immortal soul over a mishap?'

"'Oh, it's very well for you to talk that way Aunt Rachel,' I replied. 'But I can't afford a new carpet just now.'

"'Thee doesn't need one. The bad places don't show much.'

"'But I shall always know they are there, and it will take away all my peace of mind.'

"The eyes looked a little straighter into mine as she talked on, something like this: 'Thy peace is worth little, to thee or anyone else, if it can be so easily broken. Ruth Harvey, thee is starting out in life; beware that thy disposition to fret thyself about small things does not prove a curse to thee and thine. Every thought of discontent about matters beyond thy control is not only a sin against the God who orders for thee, but a sin against thy own soul, and an added weight to every annoyance. If cherished, such thoughts become a nest of stinging serpents in thy breast. Thee will grow old and wrinkled and gray before thy time. Thee will be peevish, complaining and fault-finding. Thee will be a terror to thy husband and children.'

"Yes," continued Mrs. Morrison, "she said all that and more. She said: 'Is one thread of that carpet woven into thy real peace of mind? Can it, or other small things, really concern thy welfare, or that of those dear to thee, either for this world or the next?'"

"I never heard it put quite so strongly before," I said thoughtfully, as my friend paused. "And if I hadn't seen you, I should have said it was very good talk, indeed, but that no woman could live up to it."

"I had a week of it, you see," said Mrs. Morrison. "When Aunt Rachel went away one of the last things she said to me was: 'I want thee to bear in mind what I said, dear—that every fretful thought thee wastes on small accidents is only so much added to their burden.'

"I think I took it well to heart, for I concluded, Eleanor, that life's burdens are heavy enough without any such addition. And I will tell you one thing I have observed," she added, with a laugh. "I do believe that four-fifths of the women who fret do it because they think it a solemn duty."

"Nonsense!" I exclaimed.

"They do," she persisted. "You notice the next woman you meet to whom some mishap occurs. See if a great part of her worrying is not because she thinks she is expected to worry, and that it might be taken ill of her if she didn't."

I wonder if Mrs. Morrison is right?—The Congregationalist.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

[A School Essay read by Albert E. Cook, Chicago, aged 14.]

The Grand Army of the Republic was organized on the 6th day of April, 1866, in Decatur, Macon county, Ill. It was originated by Dr. Benjamin F. Stephenson, a physician, who had been a war surgeon in the 14th Illinois Infantry. The first National convention was held in Indianapolis on the 20th of November, 1866, and representatives from many States attended.

I will read some of the objects of the organization, as I have copied them from William H. Ward's "Records of the Members of the Grand Army of the Republic":

"To preserve and strengthen those kind and fraternal feelings which bind together the soldiers, sailors and marines who united to suppress the late Rebellion and to perpetuate the memory and history of the dead." "To assist such former comrades in arms as need help and protection, and to extend needful aid to widows and orphans of those who have fallen."

In article 4th the conditions of joining the society are given as follows:

"Soldiers and sailors of the United States army, navy or marine corps, who served between April 12th, 1861, and April 29th, 1865, in the war for the suppression of the Rebellion, and those having been honorably discharged therefrom after such service, and of such State regiments as were called into active service and subject to the orders of United States general officers, between the dates mentioned, shall be eligible to membership in the Grand Army of the Republic. No person shall be eligible who has at any time borne arms against the United States."

In 1868 Gen. Logan, who was commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., issued an order directing the observance of the 30th of May as a memorial day to "cover over with beautiful flowers the parents, husbands, brothers and lovers who have fallen in the civil war." A notable thing about this celebration is that both rebel and unionist, patriot and traitor, are covered over with beautiful flowers alike.

Mr. Ward speaks of the third National encampment as follows: "The encampment met under a cloud, the order having received a strong set-back from the belief which had grown up that, in a measure, it was a secret political society; and this had materially interfered with recruiting. To dispel this impression, it was necessary that it should become generally known that the discussion of politics was forbidden in the posts, and that no comrade was permitted to use the order for political advancement. It took time to counteract such opinions, and until this was done the order labored under much disadvantage." Notwithstanding the foregoing statement of Mr. Ward, the order is notoriously used for political purposes, as many know.

At the nineteenth encampment, in 1882, something happened which Mr. Ward is careful not to mention in his book. The encampment was at Portland, Maine, and Maine was already a prohibition State. A large quantity of liquor was ordered for the encampment, and the officers and authorities succeeded in stopping most of it, but a good deal was smuggled in the pockets and knapsacks of the men. Thus the G. A. R. succeeded in violating downright the laws of Maine.

As Mr. Ward was careful not to mention what I have just related, he is careful to mention the fact that $170,098.77 was expended for the relief of 15,406 men by the order in the year from July, 1884, to June, 1885.

A very bad point is the secrecy of the order. If you ask one of the members why it is secret, perhaps he will say, Because everyone cannot be allowed in the meetings for want of room or other reasons. In parties, none come without invitations; in concerts, none without tickets; and very easily the Grand Army could keep outsiders from their meetings without any secrets.

The Cincinnati was an order much like the Grand Army, and it was secret. It was composed of veterans of the Revolutionary war and their oldest sons. Washington saw that it was about like getting up a nobility in America, and he and many of the people disapproved much of it. He also disapproved much of its secrecy, and he labored seven days in anxious debate before he could get them to give up their anti-republicanism and other bad points. But they did give all or most of them up.

Organized secrecy offers to unscruplous leaders such opportunities for the accomplishment of evil, that the true patriot may well fear lest by joining the G. A. R. he may become partaker of other men's sins. And desirable as it is for the noble defenders of our country to keep fresh the memories of the past, until this secrecy is given up, the order must expect many conscientious men to stand aloof from it.

NOTE.—Our young friend was misinformed respecting the Cincinnati. It was not a secret society. The change urged by Washington was that the hereditary principle should be dropped.—ED.

TICK TOCK.

"Tick tock! tick tock!"
Says the clock—"half-past three."
"Tick tock! tick tock!"
"Half-past three" still we see!
It must be the hands are caught,
That is why it tells us naught,
Though it ticks and ticks along
As if there were nothing wrong!
"Tick tock!"

"Tick tock! tick tock!"
Many a word, many a word,—
"Tick tock! tick tock!"—
Just as useless, I have heard,
These—the folks who tell us naught—
Ah! perhaps their hands are caught!
'Tis the busy ones that know
Something worth the telling.—So
"Tick tock! tick tock!"

"NITCHEGO."

With such a caption as this a story is told of Bismarck when Prussian Ambassador at the court of the Czar in 1862. The big, bluff officer of twenty-six years ago met more than his match in a simple Russian peasant, and while the story is amusing it also conveys a moral that was of profit to the afterward master of Germany.

Bismarck had been asked to participate in an imperial hunt, and, being an enthusiastic hunter, he went to the designated place on the evening before the appointed day in order to have a little sport by himself. Game was abundant, and Bismarck had a good time, but somehow he lost his way. When the time for the imperial hunt approached, Bismarck found himself fourteen miles away from the place. A peasant offered his services to take Bismarck to the right place. He appeared with a team of ponies and a village sleigh. Bismarck doubted that the Russian driver could get him there in time to engage in the hunt. "Are you sure you can get me there on time?" asked Bismarck. "Nitchego!" answered the moujik, quietly. ("Nitchego" is Russian for "Never mind," or "All right.") "These are rather rats than horses," remarked Bismarck, taking a seat in the sleigh. "Nitchego!" was the answer. The peasant whipped his horses and they went as swiftly as a pair of falcons. Bismarck could hardly keep his seat. "You do not spare your horses at all," remarked the famous passenger, gasping for breath. "Nitchego!" said the driver. "You say 'nitchego,' but they may fall dead on the way." "Nitchego!"

The road was hardly distinguishable through the forest, but the peasant continued his mad run. He brushed against the big trees and went on and on. "You will break my neck!" finally exclaimed Bismarck, scared in good earnest. "Nitchego!" answered the Russian, with a bit of a smile on his face. Presently there was a smash: Bismarck flew against a tree and bruised his face. He jumped up very angry, snatched an iron rod from the sleigh, and rushed at the peasant, threatening vengeance. The driver coolly picked up a handful of snow, with which he good-naturedly wiped the blood stains from Bismarck's face. "Nitchego!" he uttered, as he finished the operation. "That invariable quiet Russian 'nitchego' disarmed me," said Bismarck, telling the story to a Russian diplomatist. "I gave myself up to the will of my driver, sat quietly in the sleigh, and made no remarks. My driver brought me to the place in time. I paid him well, thanking him warmly, and preserved the iron rod. When I returned to St. Petersburg I ordered a jeweler to make me a ring from that rod, with the inscription in Russian, 'Nitchego.'" The Russian "nitchego" became the watchword of Bismarck's policy. "Whenever," said he, "I meet troubles and dangers, I say in Russian, 'nitchego!' and then push ahead."—Phrenological Journal.

A little three-year-old attended a Sabbath service with her father and older brothers and sisters. At home her mother ask after her behavior. "Was my little daughter a good girl to-day?" "Yes'm, I was a pooty good girl. Papa said 'Sit down!' But I couldn't hardly manage it."

TEMPERANCE.

THE SMOKE NUISANCE.

According to the Cincinnati Times, a citizen of that place fell dead in a street-car, some time since, poisoned by the dense fumes of tobacco smoke with which the car was filled. "He was an occasional sufferer from heart disease, and the trouble was so aggravated by the suffocating smoke of the car that he died after breathing it a few minutes. The car in which he rode had only one compartment for men, women and children, and the smokers were allowed full sway in it. Two other passengers were overcome by the tobacco fumes."

If human beings possess one inalienable right more sacred than any other, it is the right to breathe the atmosphere of heaven, pure, free and unadulterated. No man has any better right to puff tobacco smoke into the air I am about to breathe than to defile the water I am about to drink, or to sit down beside me at the dinner table and sprinkle upon my food vile and loathsome substances, obnoxious to the senses and deleterious to health.

Did any of you smokers ever attempt to imagine the felicity of a lady or gentleman to whom the odor of tobacco is sickening and most repulsive, following in your wake on a still summer evening, while you puffed with self-complacency and intense satisfaction the (to you) fragrant Havana? Or did you ever endeavor to picture in your imagination the delightful sensations which must be experienced by a sensitive man or woman who has never offered incense to the smoke god when compelled to ride in a close cab, on a seat opposite or beside you, while you rolled between your lips the stump of a "cold cigar." Please put yourself in the place of that man or woman and see if you will not decide with unhesitating promptness that the tobacco-user is a nuisance that should be abated.

Tobacco smoke is excellent in its place. The writer set an old smoker going in a greenhouse one day, with good effect. Every living thing that was able to travel left for parts unknown, and the few that were not able to get away died of nicotine poisoning—all except the smoker himself, who was tough and nicotine proof. Tobacco is to be recommended as an exterminator of vermin of all sorts, except a kind of parasite that breeds in bar rooms and billiard halls, and may often be seen adhering to lamp posts, or hovering around street corners and railway stations.

Passing a London cigar store one day, the writer noticed a flaming placard announcing "The Devil's Own" as the name of a new brand of cigars just produced by the manufacturers. The name impressed him as exceedingly suggestive, and he wondered that so appropriate a cognomen had not before been utilized. The cigar is undoubtedly one of the devil's favorite instruments for converting boys who might become respectable citizens and useful men into loafers, vagabonds, drunkards, and criminals of every description.

Notwithstanding the repeated exposures which have been made of the dangers to life and health incurred by the use of the filthy weed the number of its devotees seems to be constantly upon the increase. The tobacco habit must be regarded and treated as a moral disease which has fastened itself upon society,—one of "the devil's own" means for degrading and depraving humanity. How perverted, indeed, are the instincts of the human being who deliberately defiles the image of his Maker till nearly every trace of the divine workmanship is obliterated by the scourge of the stinking weed, and he becomes fit only to be labeled "the devil's own!"

If smokers will persist in defiling themselves and spoiling the pure air, adulterating its life-giving oxygen with a deadly vapor, offensive to the natural instincts of man and beast, let them be compelled to indulge their precious poison by themselves apart from the rest of human kind. Let them together enjoy the pleasures of the pipe, cigar and cigarette. Perhaps this plan might result in the annihilation of the whole race of smokers, and rid the world of a vice which originated among savages and is worthy only of an uncivilized and barbarous race.—J. H. Kellogg, M. D., in Good Health.

RUM AND MANHOOD.

A man who had been for a long time a victim of the drink habit, but who finally broke his chains, thus speaks:

I would not exchange the physical sensations, the mere sense of animal being, which belong to a man who totally refrains from all that can intoxicate his brain or derange his nervous structure, the elasticity with which he bounds from his couch in the morning, the sweet repose it yields him at night, the feeling with which he drinks in, through his clear eyes, the beauty and grandeur of surrounding nature; I say, sir, I would not exchange my conscious being as a strictly temperance man, the sense of renovated youth, the glad play with which my pulse now beats healthful music, the bounding vivacity with which the life-blood courses its exulting way through every fiber of my frame, the communion high with which my healthful ear and eye now hold with all the gorgeous universe of God, the splendors of the morning, the softness of the evening sky, the bloom, the beauty, the verdure of the earth, the music of the air, and of the waters, with all the grand associations of external nature reopened to the five avenues of sense; no, sir; though poverty dog me, though scorn pointed its slow finger at me as I passed, though want and destitution and every element of earthly misery, save my crime, meet my waking eye from day to day; not for the brightest and noblest wreath that ever encircled a statesman's brow; not if some angel commissioned by heaven or some demon set fresh from hell to test the resisting strength of virtuous resolution, should tempt me back, with all the wealth and all the honors which a world can bestow; not for all that time can give would I cast from me, this precious pledge of a liberated mind, this talisman against temptation, and plunge again into the dangers and horrors which once beset my path, so help me heaven, as I would spurn beneath my very feet all the gifts the universe could offer and live and die as I am, poor and sober.

CAST-IRON STOMACHS.

The Philadelphia News tells of a bartender who plaintively bewailed the necessity of having to rub congealed drops of sticky beer off the bar. "But if I let them remain," said he, in the tone of one seeking compassion, "they rot the wood."

"They rot the wood, do they?" fiercely repeated a beer-bibber. "Then what in the name of common sense does beer do to my stomach?"

Replied the manipulator of drinks: "It is beyond me to tell. Of one thing I am confident, and that is, man's stomach is made of cast-iron. Elsewise, how could he withstand the fluids he poured into it? Let me show you something." He placed a piece of raw meat upon the counter and dropped upon it a small measure of an imported ginger-ale. In five minutes the meat had parted into little pieces as though hacked by a dull knife.

Before a man begins to drink that stuff he had better see to whether his stomach is made of cast-iron with copper fittings and finishings; and if not he will do well to let such drinks alone.

DRUNKEN WOMEN IN DUBLIN.

At a recent meeting in aid of the Prison Gate Mission in Dublin over which the archbishop presided, speaking of the statistics of crime, the Rev. Gilbert Mahaffy, rector of St. Paul's, Dublin, said that during the past year there were over 10,000 arrests of women in Dublin; about 9,000 being women charged with being drunk and disorderly. It was remarkable to find that of the women convicted for various offences forty-nine per cent. returned to vice and crime again, while in the case of men the the percentage was only sixteen.

This shows what is the matter with Ireland, and all the laws, and land leagues, and priests and politicians can never heal the woes of Ireland, while in a single city every day in the year there are twenty-five or thirty women so drunk and disorderly that they have to be arrested and locked up.—The Safeguard.

MEMORIAL HOME FOR HOMELESS GIRLS IN NEW ORLEANS.

This beautiful Home, with a well-organized society and Board of Managers, will be like building a fire when all the kindling and coal are skillfully laid without the touch of the match; it will send out no glow of heat or warmth. So, unless our hearts burn with a zeal which will bring us right to the front in a war against the impurities of the laws of this city, we will soon weary of the work. We believe the call that has brought us here is a Divine call, and that it is the beginning of a new crusade which will extend all through the South.

Josephine Butler received this call more than twenty-two years ago in England. It came in a mysterious manner to her; yet it was His voice and was obeyed. Other laborers in this most difficult and daugerous field have been impelled thither by a desire to save souls or rescue women. Mrs. Butler always wanted to save daughters. She approached them from the mother side of her nature. Many of these fallen ones are not women, but girls in their teens, or children too young to have the instinct of a woman or to know what they are doing.

Brave, true-hearted women in England have stood in the face of the criticism, censure and slander; they have been driven before mobs, and have suffered persecution and imprisonment. If they suffered much, they prayed much, and at last, after seventeen years of unremitting labor, the black curtain began to roll back. The contagious diseases act was repealed, and the age of prostitution was no longer counted at the age of twelve years old, as it is in this State of Louisiana. And still these brave sisters of ours in England count the victory but as reaching over one corner of the battle field.

Again, soul-stirring appeals are going out to all true-hearted women, to take their stand for abolishing the institution of legalized harlotry, which is rapidly extending in all parts of the world. And you, my sisters, will you not put on the white shield and step to the front in this battle? Will you not from this hour lift up your pure eyes, and look into the very souls of any lords of creation who will dare to say that legalized prostitution is a necessity? Ask them, Who but the arch fiend could put it into the hearts of men to believe that it is necessary for our sisters (yes, I will say it though they are prostitutes)—for our sisters to go down to dishonor and death, that they may be gratified for a short season of wild-oats sowing? after which these men are received in the society of the pure and noble, marry and enjoy the companionship of a virtuous wife, and the caresses of lovely children. "But methinks sometimes behind these caresses a pale finger is pointing him out, and a voice that is stilled in death seems to say, 'Thou art the man.'" I have upon my heart three young women, all victims of the same man, and one of these victims came to the Home bringing his infant child in her arms. This man is an editor of a popular newspaper.

I visited a "Gilded Palace," and talked with the proprietor who had kept a house of prostitution for thirty years. She told me that her house was the most genteel and quiet of any in this city, and that in all the thirty years she had been in business, she had never been obliged to appear before the police court. The inmates of this house were young girls. She said when she first got them they were kept for a time quite excluded, not permitted to appear in the parlors until she had taught them that even in a house of prostitution they need not go down in the mud. And she also taught them their duty to the church. In a room of this house candles burn before a crucifix, and a fountain of holy water stands by a cold, hard image where these poor creatures prostrate themselves, making the signs of the cross and mumbling prayers. Alas! that so many Christians look upon this kind of idolatry without so much as lifting a finger of warning. I made a few inquiries which brought out these incidents.

One day an elegant carriage was driven up before the door; a fine gentleman bounded out and entered the hall; upon looking about him for a moment, he exclaimed: "Excuse me, I fear I have made a mistake and that I am in the wrong house." Being assured that no mistake had been made, he was delighted to find so orderly an establishment. He was visiting this city from Washington, connected in some way with the U. S. Mint, and was a guest at the St. Charles Hotel.

One day when visiting this house, he chanced to catch a glimpse of a young girl who was crossing a lower hall. He inquired who she was, and was informed that she had been an inmate but a few days, and would not appear in the parlors for some time, as was the rule. But money is power, and this elegant gentleman soon completed an arrangement with the proprietor of the establishment, to carry the young girl with him to Washington. A few weeks later a Saratoga trunk stood in the hall, packed with elegant clothing, which had been purchased by the landlady with this man's money. A carriage again stopped before the mansion, and this gentleman of prominent position alighted, this time carrying upon his arm a young lady's traveling ulster. Enquiring if Miss R. was ready, he was informed that she was waiting, and a servant was sent to call her. After a few minutes the servant returned and informed her madame that the young lady was not in her room, but had been seen leaving the house dressed in a calico dress and straw hat.

I will now tell you what this landlady did not know; that young girl who left that house wearing a calico dress and straw hat came to us, and has since been sent to a Christian home, where she is protected and growing into a sweet, strong womanhood, which will keep her from the snares of seducers.

If I had time I would like to speak of the temptations of young women clerks in stores, and of the small salaries when compared with the manner of dress that is encouraged and sometimes required by the employers. I have known a widowed mother to toil all day, and late at night, upon the ruffles, tucks and flounces that her two pretty daughters wore while clerking in down town stores. She told me if they did not dress prettily they would lose their situations. Some young girls who have lost their situations have attempted sewing for stores, and I have seen them bending under heavy burdens of tucked shirts at sixty cents a dozen. Now men will persuade a girl that by selling her womanly chastity she can make from $25 to $50 a week. As has been said, she can get from $25 to $50 a week for stitching her own shroud.

Oh, the good work that Christian women may accomplish in this city, and the evil that may be prevented.

I am sure the Spirit's call rings in the heart of every true woman, and the Word of God will show the way, as truly as the silver trumpet called Israel, and the pillar of cloud and fire led through the wilderness. M. M. WOLFE, Superintendent.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The old National theatre on Clybourne avenue in this city has been purchased by the Christian Evangelization Association for $22,000, and was last Thursday evening dedicated as the "North Side Tabernacle." The hall, which accommodates about 1,000 people, was nearly filled by those who came to take part in the exercises and listen to the addresses.

—The Scottish United Presbyterian church will, it is said, have to withdraw its missions in Spain and Japan, for financial reasons.

—Twenty-nine years ago the Presbyterian mission in Brazil was begun. There is now a Presbytery of fifty churches and thirty-two ministers. Twelve of the latter are natives.

—Two persons in the Southern Presbyterian church have contributed a sum sufficient to supply every minister of that church with a copy of the 'Crisis of Missions," by Dr. Pierson.

—A missionary training school in Philadelphia has been opened at 4045 Ogden street by Mrs. W. B. Osborn, a former missionary in India. It is conducted on the basis of faith and prayer, and aims to put a course of preparatory study within the reach of the humblest and poorest who are seeking to go abroad as missionaries.

—The fifteenth quadrennial session of the Methodist Protestant church was held in Plymouth church, Adrian, Mich., May 18th–28th. The body was composed of an equal number of ministers and laymen, representing forty-eight annual conferences, covering all the States and Territories. The Committee on Temperance introduced a strong series of resolutions. The two following indicate the temper of the Conference on that live question:

"We are unalterably opposed to any form of license, high or low, as being wrong in principle and pernicious in practice."

"Resolved, That any minister or member who buys, sells, makes or signs a petition for license, or to give to others, as a beverage, any spirituous or malt liquors, is guilty of immorality, and shall be dealt with accordingly."

—The residences of the Methodist bishops has been fixed as follows: Bishop Bowman, St. Louis; Foster, Boston; Merrill, Chicago; Andrews, New York; Warren, Denver; Foss, Philadelphia; Hurst, Washington; Ninde, Topeka; Walden, Cincinnati; Mallalieu, New Orleans; Fowler, San Francisco; Vincent, Buffalo; Fitzgerald, Minneapolis; Joyce, Chattanooga; Newman, Omaha; and Goodsell, Texas.

—The United Presbyterian church of Scotland reports 565 congregations, an increase of one, and 182,170 members, an increase of 107. The total congregational income the past year was $1,603,500.

—There were in 1867, 13,815 Friends in the London Yearly Meeting; in 1877, 14,604; in 1887, 15,453; a gain of 1,638 in twenty years. To this must be added about 30,000 persons gathered into mission schools who, in this country, would be received into church or organized into Friends' meetings.

—The Methodist General Conference, in providing an order of deaconnesses, only follows, it seems, the parent Wesleyan body in England, which has a sisterhood, not indeed by action of the Wesleyan Conference, but as a voluntary movement. It seems, however, that much opposition has been manifested to the sisterhood.

—Mr. Spurgeon has a number of colporteurs among his numerous workers. Eighty men are employed. The sales for the past year amount to £9,166, and between eight and nine hundred thousand visits were made. It is stated in the Report that "the amount of work involved in these results will be better appreciated if it be remembered that the majority of the sales range from a halfpenny magazine to a sixpenny book, and that few books are sold of more than a shilling in value." The number and variety of the publications sold is thus shown: Bibles, 8,509; Testaments, 11,955: books, 456,707; periodicals, 327,372; Scripture texts and other cards, 175,084. In addition to the sales a parcel of tracts is sent to each man every month.

—The Church Army has become an important institution in the Church of England. It reports 160 evangelists for the year, indicating an increase of fifty-five. In addition to this, a considerable number of the officers, who have passed through the course of training, and who, for various reasons, were not quite fitted for the difficult work, have become Scripture readers and lay helpers.

—The general synod of the Reformed Church in America, in session at Catskill, N. Y., uttered an emphatic protest last Friday against the traffic in intoxicating liquors as now carried on by civilized and nominally Christian nations with heathen lands, and recommended united action with other churches in the effort to induce the governments which are parties to the treaties under which the iniquity is perpetrated to put an end to it.

—The Northern Presbyterian Assembly passed a resolution recommending the sessions of Presbyterian churches to refuse to admit into these churches persons who are engaged in the liquor business. There were but few dissenting votes. This is a step in the temperance cause in the right direction. Rumselling and church membership ought not to be combined in the same persons.

—Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, who has recently visited Rome, writes in Regions Beyond: "The exhibition of the Pope's Jubilee presents was a sad sight. It is held in the Vatican, and is so extensive that it takes hours to walk through it and examine the enormous mass of Papal treasures, even cursorily. We were forcibly reminded by what we saw of the Babylonian goods enumerated in Rev. 18. All were there, displayed to perfection."

LODGE NOTES.

J. H. Hobart Brown, Episcopal Bishop of Fond du Lac, was buried May 8th in that city. The funeral procession was headed by Fond du Lac Commandery of Knights Templar in uniform, followed by the church dignitaries.

The late John Hess, a prominent resident of Dixon, Ill, was a member of the Dixon Commandery of Knights Templar, of the Select Knights of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of the Order of Woodmen, and of the Dixon lodge of Odd-fellows, and carried a life insurance of $20,000

In the Masonic Cathedral in Cincinnati Friday night the ritual of the Order of Malta, K. T., was worked with the knights in full armor and with appropriate tableaux. Governor Foraker, of Ohio, General Charles Roome, of New York, and eighteen Past Grand Commanders were present.

The Masonic Grand Lodge of Iowa has just held the forty-fifth annual meeting. A new code prepared by Judge Granger, of Waukon, was adopted, as was the new constitution. The salary of the Grand Secretary was raised to $2,000 a year. A purse of $1,600 was presented to Grand Secretary Parvin by the Masons.

Monday the Supreme Court of Missouri fixed the day for the execution of Hugh M. Brooks, alias Maxwell, for the 13th of July next. The latter was found guilty of murdering C. Arthur Preller in the Southern Hotel at St. Louis. There has been a great effort made to secure the release of Brooks because of his Masonry.

A grand reunion of the order of Elks (theatrical) is being held in Cincinnati. The papers announce the following dignitaries from Chicago: Dr. Simon Quinlin, D. D. E. G. R. U. S.; John W. White, D.D.E. R. for Illinois; Dr. W. A. Jones, esteemed leading knight; Dr. Liston H. Montgomery, esteemed lecturing knight; Rev. Henry G. Perry, chaplain.

Lewis B. Rock, superintendent of the Northern division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road, fell down a stairway at his home in Milwaukee, Wis., Monday, and was instantly killed. Mr. Rock was prominent in the Masonic fraternity, being a charter member of Wisconsin Grand Lodge of Perfection, Wisconsin Grand Council Princes of Jerusalem and Wisconsin Grand Chapter Rose Croix, and a member of Wisconsin Lodge, F. and A. M., Wisconsin Chapter and Wisconsin Commandery.

The Freemason of Victoria, Australia, in an article on the sickness of the German Emperor, says: "From 1814 to 1836 Masonry throughout Germany was in a most deplorable condition. No unity and concord existed among the various Masonic centers, and many bitter complaints were made of the apathy of the brethren," and closes with the following Masonically pious hope: "We sincerely trust that it will please the G. A. O. T. U. to restore him to health and renewed vigor, that he may follow in the footsteps of his illustrious father."

D. McCann, this city, a member of the Catholic Foresters, through his attorney, P. O'Neil Byone, has filed a rather voluminous declaration in the Circuit Court in which he charges conspiracy on the part of John F. Scanlan, the High Chief Ranger of the Catholic Foresters, and John C. Schubert, Chief Ranger of St Mary's Court, to expel him (McCann) from the order. The declaration is a lengthy document of thirteen pages of type-writing, and it is alleged that sensational developments will be given on the trial. Mr. McCann claims that he has been damaged to the extent of $5,000, and among other injuries alleges as special damage that he has been brought into public odium and disgrace.

The Union Signal of this city contains the following remarkable advertisement, which looks almost as bad in its columns as a saloon advertisement would in the Cynosure:

"Stupendous conclave of Sir Knights!!
The Pythian army in dazzling armor!!
A scene of mediaeval splendor!!
15,000 uniformed and well-drilled Knights in line!!
Gigantic military competition drills!!
Magnificent and costly prizes to the victors!!
Cincinnati in holiday attire for the festival season!!
Vestibule trains and Low Rates from Chicago!!
The Illinois Brigade (uniform rank) has contracted with the MONON ROUTE," etc., etc.

The Detroit Freemason publishes a poem entitled a "Lady's Idea of Masonry" with the note that it was read during the dedication performances at the opening of a Masonic hall in Aurora, Ill. The opening stanza reads:

A Mason's life is one's that's free—
Not the life, tho', of mortar and bricks,
But out o' nights enjoying a spree,
And playing astonishing tricks;
While the she's at home are waiting,
Never dreaming it all a dodge,
But thinking the sad belating
Is caused by "work at the lodge,"
Where they meet upon the level,
To part upon the square,
And raise the very devil
While congregated there.

A bright, vigorous, entertaining and instructive monthly magazine for the young. Embodies adventures, travels, biographies, history, science, philosophy, religion, stories and current events.

WHAT the PRESS SAYS of IT.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE: " "Intended to instruct rather than amuse, and to strengthen character rather than pass the time. " "There is a place for this magazine, and we hope it will fill it and be well sustained." EVANGELICAL MESSENGER: "It is really a most entertaining and instructive journal, nicely illustrated. We are well pleased with its contents." SOUTHWESTERN METHODIST: "We have not seen another magazine just of this class. It is for Christian homes and Christian children. It is filled with delightful stories, not fiction but facts, calculated to inspire a thirst for real knowledge. It is well illustrated. With the number before us we are well pleased." CHRISTIAN HARVESTER: "Instructive and entertaing, but devoid of the trash of fiction." SAMPLE FREE. AGENTS WANTED on liberal, cash commission. T. B. ARNOLD, 104 & 106 Franklin St., Chicago, Ill.

FARM NOTES.

POTATO FERTILIZERS.

An experiment with different fertilizers on potatoes was conducted last year at the Agricultural Experiment Station at the State College of Kentucky. The conclusions arrived at were:

1. That the application of stable manure greatly injures the quality of the potato.

2. That the application of the nitrate of soda is injurious to the quality of the potato. This will probably hold good to the application of any nitrogenous fertilizer.

3. The inference is, based upon one trial, that the result in the quality of the potato is the same, whether sulphate or muriate of potash is used, at least in combination with nitrate of soda and superphosphates.

The highest quality, that is, the highest percentage of starch, was found in potatoes raised without manure, in these the percentage of starch was 15.98. Tubers raised with superphosphate of lime and sulphate of potash stood next, the starch being 15.97. This fertilizer, 600 pounds of superphosphate and 200 pounds sulphate of potash, also gave the largest yield but one of large potatoes, 203 bushels to the acre. The use of superphosphate in the same quantity and 300 pounds of nitrate of soda gave 213 bushels of large potatoes, but the percentage of starch in the last was only 15.13.

DON'T WASTE LIQUID MANURE.

The value of liquid manure upon lawns, grass, young grain, cabbages, turnips, spinach and strawberries applied in autumn and to many more crops in spring, is perhaps theoretically understood by many people, but very seldom experimentally demonstrated in actual use. Like a great many other things, it involves a little trouble at the outset. At the East we had a wet season up to the first part of August, at least. How everything has grown! The plant-food has been dissolved, and the plants have taken it in and made use of it in a wonderful manner. A small amount of water carrying a very little manure-water produces a marked effect; in fact, water alone is a great thing, and with a proper cart very easy to apply. Manure-water is easily made. A sunken hogshead in the barnyard, covered with a lot of white oak saplings four or five inches through, will fill up with the first rain and be strong enough to make the crops laugh over an acre or more of land if mixed with plenty of water. The application should not be stronger than one fourth manure-water to three parts water. Nitrate of soda may be very effectively applied in this way, say one pound to ten gallons of water, or three pounds to the barrel.—American Agriculturist.

SWAMP MUCK—ITS VALUE ON THE FARM.

Much has been written, both for and against the value of swamp-muck as a fertilizer. But in spite of all objections to it, the fact remains, that swamp-muck, of an average good quality, consisting mainly of decayed vegetable matter, contains one and a half per cent of nitrogen. It is true, that this nitrogen is inert, and it is necessary to take action to make it available. To do this, is the business of the farmer, who rarely finds the materials with which he works already prepared to his hand. One and a half per cent. is equal to thirty pounds per ton. Thirty pounds of the cheapest nitrogen the farmer can procure, is worth three dollars. If swamp-muck, by the expenditure of a little labor at this season, can be made worth three dollars a ton, or one cubic yard, what is it worth per acre if three feet deep? We forbear to say any more than this, lest our readers might think us extravagant. We would impress upon the minds of farmers who own swamps, which are left to remain unsightly and unhealthful eye-sores upon their farms, the hard fact, that they are not only wasting a valuable opportunity of improving their lands, by neglecting to drain these marshy places, but are leaving unused the valuable material, which might fertilize the upland, to make it doubly productive. The writer speaks from his own knowledge and experience in this respect, having for some years dug and used, annually, several hundred tons of swamp-muck, in the form of compost with lime and barn-yard manure. He has used it, when dry, as litter, as an absorbent in the manure cellar, cattle yards and pig pens, and has found it to be worth all that the chemists have claimed for it.—American Agriculturist.

SALT AS A FERTILIZER.

The Country Gentleman states that a farmer of Columbia county, N. Y., purchased a car load of agricultural salt last spring, having previously purchased in less quantity. His neighbors had pronounced him foolish for spending money for salt, but he writes that he sold a part of the last car load to some of these same neighbors to use on their land. He also writes that one ton on a field of oats so increased the crop that the profit would equal the cost of the whole car load or ten tons.

The Massachusetts Agricultural Society concludes that salt, as a manure, has the property of hastening the maturing of all grain crops; that wheat on salted land will ripen six to ten days earlier than the unsalted land, all other conditions being equal; that it increases the yield from twenty-five to fifty per cent; that it stiffens the straw and prevents rust and must; that it checks, if it does not entirely prevent the ravages of the chinch bug. The quantity used may be from 150 to 300 pounds per acre, but the greater quantity is the better.

THAT DEADLY SCOURGE!

Tubercular consumption is simply lung-scrofula—the active and dangerous development of a taint in the blood. The grand blood cleansing botanic principles contained in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery specially fit it to purify the blood, and prevent the formation of ulcers in the lungs and bronchial tubes. Liver complaint, skin diseases, and sores, are also cured by it. All druggists.

We have no hesitation in recommending Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer as a sure cure for dandruff, and to restore the natural color of the hair.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmittou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

THE SECRET ORDERS
WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Talks
ON THE
Labor Troubles,
BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the ruh!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents, per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian Religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 25 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De-GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge. but he boldly replied to the charges against him. and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

General Sheridan's condition improved somewhat last week and Sunday night the physicians thought there need be no alarm of his sudden demise. His heart, liver and other organs are diseased but not so seriously as to preclude the hope of partial recovery.

President Cleveland has signed the bill appropriating $80,000,000 for pensions.

CHICAGO.

Mayor Roche has issued his 4th of July proclamation in which he lays down the law relative to celebrating the approaching national holiday. Any one who sells a toy pistol or metal or paper cap is subject to a fine of $50, and those who shoot the same will be "run in" and fined $10. Permission is given to explode fireworks in all streets and vacant lots, but those who indulge in the same luxury in a "back yard or in an alley" will be sent to jail.

Ex-Lieut. Alexander Bold and Mrs. Julia H. Herting have entered suit for libel against the Chicago Herald and the Chicago Inter Ocean Each of the papers is sued for $25,000 damages by each of the plaintiffs, making the aggregate $100,000.

The strike of the brewers was declared off Friday. The strikers applied for work at the breweries where they had been for merly employed, and many were taken back. The brewery owners promised to not demand their withdrawal from the union and to pay them the old wages for ten hours' work a day. The strike cost the brewers and the Central Labor union about $100,000 and resulted in an unconditional surrender.

The new Auditorium building is ready for the Republican convention next Tuesday. The delegates will be seated in the center of the house and occupy a space about eighty feet one way, and ninety-five feet the other. The galleries rise all around the delegates, and so admirably have the seats throughout the house been arranged that no spectator, though he be at the most remote corner of the hall, will be more than 100 feet from the delegates. Opera chairs will be put in throughout the hall—7,603 of them. There will be standing accommodation for probably 1,400 people, so that during the progress of the sessions fully 9,000 persons will be within the Auditorium walls. A grand war concert will be held the evening before the convention opens.

COUNTRY.

Oregon was carried by the Republicans in the election Tuesday by a majority of certainly 4,000, as against the 1,500 of two years ago, for Congressman Hermann, and a majority of 42 in joint ballot in the Legislature, 66 against 24.

The Legislative investigation of charges against the Iowa University came to a sudden stop Tuesday, when the committee learned that proper provision for their expenses had not been made, and that they could not draw on the State treasury. They had already incurred bills amounting to $2,000.

A Bee special from Wisner, Neb., says: While a party of eight persons were crossing the Elkhorn at this point to day on a flatboat temporarily built for the use of foot passengers, the boat dipped and all were swept into the water. Lena Matthis, aged 16; Anna Matthis, aged 5; Otto Matthis, aged 11, and Franz Marx were drowned. The others were reseued. The Matthis children were returning with their parents from their brother's wedding. The bodies have not been recovered.

The Michigan Supreme court decided Friday that that portion of the liquor law of 1887, prohibiting liquor men from going on the bonds of retail liquor dealers, was unconstitutional.

The case which has excited much interest in Iowa is that of Ella S Brown vs. J. R McCollum. McCollum was the Republican candidate for School Superintendent and Miss Brown ran as an Independent. The Board of Supervisors declared McCollum elected by three majority. Miss Brown filed a contest and in January the special tribunal provided by law declared her elected by two votes. McCollum appealed from this finding to the District Court, where after a long, hotly fought case, Judge Weaver and a jury sustained Miss Brown's claim. McCollum's attorneys argued among other things that a woman cannot bring a contest case, but this was overruled.

T. Harrison Garrett, a brother of Robert Garrett, former president of the Baltimore and Ohio road, who broke up the Mollie Maguires, was drowned Thursday night in the Patapsco river. His yacht, the Gleam, in which he and a party of friends were coming to Baltimore from Annapolis, was run down by the steamer Joppa and sunk, being struck amidships and almost cut in two.

Rev. James Freeman Clarke, the well-known Unitarian divine, died to-night at his residence in Jamaica Plain, Mass., aged 78 years. Although he had been in poor health for two years or more his condition was not considered dangerous until within a few weeks. His death resulted from a complication of diseases.

In Bloomington, Dakota, two young farmers named Bailey and Wilson quarreled over an old grudge. Bailey fired at Wilson, but killed his own father. Wilson in turn shot young Bailey dead.

Lightning struck the house of Julius Becker, a prosperous German farmer, at Devil's Lake, Dakota, wrecking the building and killing his daughter and seriously injuring both him and his wife. The latter may not recover.

Mrs. Maggie Brown, a pale and rather intelligent looking woman, filed a deed in the Recorder's office, at Springfield, Mo., this morning transferring to George Schmidt, for the sum of $1, all legal right and privilege to and over her 13-year-old daughter, Julia Brown. Schmidt agrees to support, maintain, humanely treat, clothe, and educate the child. This transfer of human flesh is attracting considerable attention, and the mother has been denounced bitterly. She claims that she could not care for the girl, and deemed that the best way to secure for her a home.

Miss Lizzie Bray, a school-teacher near Pilot Point, Texas, was bitten on the thumb Thursday night by a polecat, while she was sleeping. The following morning a madstone was applied. It adhered to the wound seven hours. She afterward went to Gainsville and had one applied, and it adhered four hours.

The finding of a decomposed human body partly buried in an alley near the Arensdorf Brewery, at Sioux City, Iowa, started again the rumor that the remains were those of Henry Peters, the brewery driver who disappeared suddenly soon after Haddock's assassination, but it is impossible to identify the body.

Between Delhi and Cincinnati Friday night four robbers were discovered on a Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Chicago train, on the platform of the express car. The robbers began firing on Baggage-master Joe Ketchum and Express Messenger J. H. Zimmerman, the former being fatally shot. One of the bandits attempted to climb on the engine, but was knocked down by blows from a monkey wrench, and then rolled off the tender while the train was at full speed. While the train was stopping another of the desperadoes was seen to jump off and disappear in the darkness, but when it came to a stand still no trace could be found of the other desperadoes. Mounted posses are scouring the country, and the capture of the men is not improbable.

Telegrams from points in Northern Wisconsin and Michigan including Escanaba, Lanse, Iron Mountain, Norway Baraga and Ishpeming, report damages inflicted by the storm, Sunday, which for two hours was a regular cloud burst. Houses are undermined, culverts and bridges swept away, and roads badly washed out. The storm was accompanied with a hurricane, which, had it not been for the natural roughness of the country over which it passed, would have amounted to a cyclone.

A tenement house was burned in Lowell, Mass. Three children perished, and two others were fatally hurt. The house was a death trap.

Prof. Luger, the State Entomologist of Minnesota, reports myriads of grasshoppers, of the Rocky Mountain variety, hatching out in Otter Tail county in that State. Gov. McGill has sent four carloads of coal-tar, tin, sheet-iron, and muslin which will be used to build machines by which the grasshoppers will be caught and destroyed.

FOREIGN.

Tuesday afternoon fire swept over Wards Nos. 4 and 5 of the City of Hull, opposite Ottawa, Canada, destroying between 300 and 400 houses and rendering over 2,500 persons homeless. The fire broke out at about 3:45 in the City Hall, situated in the center of the populous portion of the city, and the high wind served to spread the flames with remarkable rapidity. The fire then swept everything before it, spreading further east and extending north for about four blocks, and literally burnt itself out about a half a mile from where it started. Hundreds of families camped in the open air without shelter of any kind. Prompt measures for their relief were taken. The loss is hard to estimate. It may be $500,000, and possibly it will reach $800,000.

By a railroad train jumping the track at Peoresnada, Nicaraugua, June 3, five persons were killed and five injured

Fire destroyed the stables of the Montreal (Canada) street railway company at Hochelaga, yesterday. One hundred and thirty-five horses were burned. The loss is $100 000.

It is reported at Ottawa, Canada, that an agreement has been made with the United States, by which Canadian vessels will be allowed to take seals in Behring sea, unmolested.

It is semi officially announced that England has signed the Suez canal convention as modified by the porte.

The British government has withdrawn the licensing clauses of the county government bill.

The Italian chamber of deputies has rejected the petition of the bishops asking that the articles in the penal-code bill imposing penalties for abuses committed by the clergy in the exercise of their functions be eliminated.

The fall of Herr Von Puttkamer, German Minister of the Interior, has caused much jubilation in the Radical camp. The government party is elated at the Emperor's yielding to Prince Bismarck's representation that it would never do, by vetoing the quinquinnial bill, to furnish the opposition a pretext to boast that the Emperor had sided with it against his own Cabinet; and the Conservative majority is dampened by the prospect of an imperial rescript. The government organs daily urge the Emperor against doing anything likely to cause further resignations.

The Independent in its notices of the marvelous and exclusively Mormon manifestations at the late dedication of the temple at Manti, contrasts the value of Mormon schools with Mormon lodges thus: "Already $4,500,000 have been expended upon such structures, and it is in the church plan to hasten the building of a dozen or a score of others, or one in every considerable city, and this, though there is scarcely a decent school-house in Mormondon; so that evidently the motto of the theocracy is, Millions for temples (secret rites) and mites for education."

The Boston Evening Traveler having published that the friends of the witness of Boston Common would, in view of the action of the aldermen, recede from his position he has taken on the offensive ordinance prohibiting public preaching on the Common, and allow the fines standing against him to be paid, Bro. Davis answers firmly and in the name of Christ, who put aside his friend Peter, and of Paul who replied to the church at Cesarea, when they set forward, one for the cross the other for imprisonment at Jerusalem. No friend of truth and rightcousness would counsel him to yield to the foes of Christian liberty in these United States. Let the churches of America stand by the brave Davis. He is opposing a tremendous power, Rome, the saloon and the lodge, which is combining in all our cities against the free preaching of the Word of the living God. That Word will overthrow this power and it must be spoken in the ears of sinful men. Because this brother suffers a year in jail our children may be saved such a trial.

The Republicans who are making Chicago a lively town this week, have a heavy job, and each individual member of the party is anxious to do his part. Their unanimity is equal to that of the Democrats in desire for success; but the St. Louis convention had its candidates nominated beforehand. It had only to ratify. The Chicago convention on the contrary is in a wonderful condition of uncertainty. Never had a convention so many wooers. Every other State has its "favorite son." While Illinois has dropped Lincoln and follows the name of Gresham, Indiana, Gresham's native State, declares for Harrison. Ohio is for Sherman, but her governor, Foraker, it is said has 25,000 of his portraits ready to begin "a boom" for himself. De Pew is a favorite with New York, and Michigan is devoted to Alger, as Iowa to Allison; while Wisconsin believes her Governor Rusk can save the party. Mayor Fitler of Philadelphia is ambitious for a recognition, and even Ingalls of Kansas is hoping that in the general scramble he can get there first. Neither is General Hawley of Connecticut forgotten; and in spite of withdrawals and remonstrances California raises a big shout for Blaine and anti-Chinese bills. This makes a "baker's dozen" of men, good, bad and indifferent, neither of whom after all may ever be President.

The leaders of the party realize that they are going into this campaign handicapped. Some of them believe Cleveland will be re-elected, if they dare not speak the thought aloud. The unanimity of the Democrats begets confidence and makes votes. Murat Halstead, of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, is the most plain-spoken of the influential Republicans. He writes home to his paper a warning to the party which will be widely read. "If we cannot defeat the Democratic party this time," he says, "we certainly cannot do it for the next ten years, and perhaps not for twice that length of time, and in that event the Republican party might as well consider its career closed. The gigantic gathering of the people here, the intensity of the excitement that already prevails, the universal interest in the business that is about to be done,....testify to the consciousness of the power of the Republicans and their resolution to do their utmost to realize the hopes of those who believe that the time has not come to abandon the great principles upon which the party was founded."

The death of the Emperor Frederick of Germany, after a brief reign of a few weeks, is not a national loss only—Christendom mourns for him; "charity and liberty weep beside his bier, if ever they weep for kings." Few men in the world have been better known since 1870, and few have been more esteemed, or more profoundly pitied. Had he lived, seconded by the influence of his English wife, a noble-hearted, Christian woman, he would have mitigated the iron rule of Bismarck, and would have given Germany that constitutional government so long promised, and have possibly abolished war. A memorandum of gratitude made by him for the kindness of French sympathy closes: "Their present state of feeling makes me hate war more than ever I did." William II. is now Emperor of Germany at the age of 24. His spirit is war-like, anti-English, rash and dangerous. He is in full accord with Bismarck and his iron policy. He is represented as at bitter variance with the reforms desired by his mother, and his reputation for virtue bears unholy scars. His proclamations to the army and navy show little of the reverence for God which marked the state papers of his father and grandfather, and his appeals to maintain the traditional fealty to the "war lord" as an honored inheritance have the rashness of youth if they be not ominous to Europe. "We belong to each other," he says,—"I and the army." But though active and high-spirited William II. is young, and it is certain that Bismarck yet governs.

The fact stated in our "Lodge Notes" concerning the Spanish members of the Knights of Pythias order has a far-reaching significance. In order to prevent the interference of the lodge ritual with the tenets of Romanism, which these Spaniards held, the ritual was slightly modified. Now should a considerable number of members of the Greek church wish to join, and a company of Mohammedans, also of Buddhists, or worshipers of the Indians' Great Spirit, the ritual would have to be changed for each. So that the more cosmopolitan one of these lodges of secret religious worship becomes, in the same proportion must its religious ceremonies conform to the theology of all the various religious systems. This is what is literally attempted in Freemasonry. It claims to be a religion in which all men can agree, and, of course, in its construction there must be nothing to displease Jew or Gentile, Mormon or Mohammedan, else its universal adaptability is lost and its power limited. The statement of Masonic monitors is often quoted in proof of the universal character of the order, that the New Testament, the Pentateuch, the Koran, the Vedas, etc., are simply "a Masonic symbolism of the divine will." A writer in the Masonic Review tells how he saw this principle in practice: "Four years ago I was at a Masonic lodge in Calcutta, when the degree was given to three F. C.s, who knelt before the same altar: one was a Christian, who took his obligation on the Bible; one was a Mohammedan, who took it on the Koran; the other a Hindoo, who took it on the Shastas. It was administered by an English lord, a judge of the Supreme Court. Such is the universality of Masonry." Such is, also, its seal of condemnation. And such, also, must be the condemnation pronounced upon every secret order which conforms to the creeds of the false religious sects.

NO GOSPEL ON BOSTON COMMON.

SUFFOLK COUNTY JAIL, CHARLES ST., }
BOSTON, Mass., June 7, 1888. }

* * * After months of delay, the Committee on Ordinances reported yesterday to the Board of Aldermen unanimously, that the by-law which prohibits the free public preaching of the Gospel in Boston ought not to be repealed, and that the petitioners for its repeal have leave to withdraw. Their report was accepted, tabled, and ordered to be printed. At the same meeting the aldermen voted to empower the Superintendent of the Common to allow games of base-ball and other games on the Common, and to tax the citizens $3,500 for band concerts under the Mayor's direction.

If God will, the Supreme Court of the United States will next have an opportunity to say whether the free publication of the Gospel is any longer to be tolerated in citizens of the United States, except as buncombe and bombast in political speeches by champion spoilsmen.

I will never assume that this unspeakably outrageous infringement of our most fundamental national and State law, will be adopted by our United States judges. I assume that it will not be so adopted, just as I would not insult this city so much as to assume that its legislative, executive and judicial representatives would champion such monstrous iniquity, as is embodied in the Boston gag-by-law, if only their attention were duly challenged thereto. But city and State officials have now deliberately and obstinately and publicly proved their wicked determination to retain and enforce this God-defying ordinance. Where they thus resolvedly catalogue themselves, there the judgment of all true men and of the Holy God must recognize them as belonging.

The government representatives of Boston and Massachusetts have now officially set this land as Sodom and Gomorrah and Admah and Zeboim, and nothing but the long-suffering of Jehovah holds back the judgment of those ancient cities of the lower Jordan valley from erst-while Puritan Boston and the Old Bay State. The measure of iniquity must be filled before the executioner of the Just Judge will be allowed to act. The Divine testimony, like a clear-voiced herald, always precedes the Divine vengeance.

Christ's embassadors of peace must be thoroughly rejected before the Son of God will tread alone the wine-press of God's wrath and stain all his raiment with the blood of fools who make a mock at sin, and who, not content with wearying the poor in spirit, the mourning, the meek, those famishing with desire for righteousness, the merciful, the pure in heart, the peace-makers, the persecuted for righteousness' sake, the widows and the orphans, have at last risen up in their blind pride and fury and challenged God to single combat in Boston and New York, and other cities of this lawless nation, by enacting gag-by-laws for Gospel preachers. The proceedings against the Salvation Army, under pretext of law, are really on account of the zeal for doing good which the Salvationists exhibit and not because bands and processions in the street are per se offensive to their persecutors.

As for the expense attending the appeal of this case to the United States Supreme Court, God, who knows all from the beginning, and whom I serve in the Gospel of his Son, will, in some way or other, provide. Pray for me that I may preach the Gospel with all boldness as I ought to. Sincerely thy brother in Christ, still bound for the Gospel to be free. WM. F. DAVIS.

ANNALS OF THE GRAND LODGE OF IOWA FOR 1887.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

This able and voluminous report from the veteran Mason, Grand Secretary T. S. Parvin, is in many respects worthy of notice. Mr. Parvin says he has been for half a century a Mason, all of which, except two years, has been spent in the official service of the lodge. He adds: "Whether our labors in this and other fields have served in any way to enrich our brethren and the order, 'deponent saith not.' But we do say we have impoverished ourself and sacrificed our time and talent.... In some respects our life has been a signal failure, and it is too late in old age to remedy the follies of youth."—Page 470. Whether joining the Masonic order was one of "the follies of youth," he does not distinctly state, but the inference is quite plain. Surely no man of seventy, who had devoted half a century to Christian work, ever thought his life a failure, or classed his devotion to God's service among "the follies of his youth."

I propose to notice several items, and first call the attention of Masons to the financial report.

There was received into the treasury of the Grand Lodge, in various items, from June 3, 1886, to January 7, 1887, $19,559.41. There was paid out in the same time, for running expenses, in which there was no item of charity or relief, $17,085.55; leaving a balance on hand of $2,473.86. Some of the items of this expense were:

Services and Expenses of Grand officers	$2,711.00
Mileage and per diem	4,123.90
Ordinary expenses	4,548.70

There is a separate report of the Charity Fund:

On hand June 3, 1886	$1,520.05
Paid for one widow of a Past Master	$200.00
R. Hartsook	21.00
Charleston sufferers	200.00
Total	$421.00

Thus we see that this magnificently charitable institution, by its official showing, out of a net income of $21,061.45, paid for relief the vast sum of $421, or just about two per cent. It cost to run this charity machine last year in Iowa ninety-eight per cent of the entire income. That is benevolence with a vengeance.

From January 11, 1887, to May 20, there was received by the treasurer $18,072 91. There was included in it the balance of the charity fund, $1,099.05, so that it does not appear that from June 3, 1886, to May 20, 1887, anything had been paid for relief except the items above given. Was there no distress in Iowa? Not one of the larger religious denominations but gave far more than this for the relief of physical necessities, and yet the Masons have more members and wealth than any one of these Christian bodies.

The missionary, Bible and tract societies run their organizations for from four to six per cent of their income. Masonry costs from eighty to ninety-eight per cent to run its machinery.

VERMONT MASONRY.—Freemasonry in Vermont is placed under the ban of the law. The administration of its obligations is made a crime. Anti-masonry in its opposition to Masonic oaths has found a place on the statute book. A great point is gained in this, even if a conviction never takes place under the provisions of the law in question. Public opinion is recorded in penal enactments against Masonry, and if it continues to uphold its rituals and administer its obligations and erect its tribunals among us, it does so in the face of the laws of the land. Is, then, political Anti-masonry, powerless? Would any other kind of Anti-masonry have accomplished this?—Quoted from Middlebury, Vt., Press by Maine Free Press, Dec. 6, 1833.

RESCUE WORK IN INDIA.

Please keep the run of my letters. Three branches of mission labors have been mentioned as needing workers:

1. Colporteur evangelists, going from station to station, house to house, and heart to heart over India with the spoken and printed Gospel message.

2. Rescue workers, women preferred; but there is also work in this line for able-souled men.

3. City missionaries, who shall do the work of evangelists in our great Indian cities.

I have explained something about the simple and apostolic lines of support, living and working which we aim to follow. I now wish to explain more fully about our Rescue Work.

Nearly twelve years ago a lady in Bombay opened this Rescue Home. She had been converted under the labors of William Taylor, and became an active worker for souls. Her husband, Major Raitt, had been in charge of a jail, and she had thus heard much of the vice among vagrants and others.

At that time there was probably not more than one other home for prodigal women in all India. This lady opened the Home of Hope as an individual, working upon her own responsibility; but it has received a limited support from good people ever since its foundation. It has been a real mission work, because it has reached out the hand of help and salvation to those who were quite shut out from other ministrations. It is impossible to tell what good has been effected through this labor of love. Many have been taken from the gates of hell and brought to Him who gives to true penitents the welcome sentence: "Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more."

We have seen in these lines of work some who, like the woman at Sychar's well, have turned from domestic sin to become messengers of the Saviour's salvation.

It would be difficult to describe the various cases in India that need Rescue work. A brief outline must suffice. We would gladly leave this painful and terrible question entirely alone if that were the best way to heal it; but God does not let it alone in his Word. Christ and the prophets and the apostles spoke out very plainly upon the various phases of these social evils. His followers in these days must do the same. The millions in America who are interested in mission work may profitably learn some of these darker phases of Indian life, because your missionaries have to meet these questions. A missionary in Ceylon stated in his report that the greatest obstacle to mission work was not Buddhism, but immorality; and such, I think, is the experience of missionaries very generally. But as you read this, remember that this fact is not peculiar to Asia alone, but that in your beautiful country, too, and all over the world, these unnameable vices are among the greatest hindrances to the Gospel of Christ. Therefore, what I say here about the sins and needs of India applies exactly to America with some adaptations as to circumstances.

There are in India what are called "Temple women." From the most ancient times there have been this class of persons. Looking into Deut. 23: 17, 18, revised version, margin, you see the word "Kedeshah" defined "women devoted to impure heathen worship." Abundant proof is given in Scripture and ancient history that in all idolatrous systems vice has prevailed, and more or less as a part of the system itself.

Next, there are the "Dancing Girls." These are called to sing and dance upon all manner of native festal occasions. They are recognized as a part of the great system of evil which debases Indian society. Reformed Hindus cry out against their toleration. In law courts they are classed as abandoned characters,—yet not only do the highest native gentry patronize them by calling them to perform upon the most important occasions, but even European "gentry" and officials, by their presence at such public gatherings, countenance and encourage the public disgrace. Thus shallow Christians help to fasten the chains of vice upon our poor old India.

Other classes of the lost are so well known all over the world that I need not specify their sad corruption.

MANY OF THESE MIGHT BE SAVED

if Christian women in America would only give their hearts and hands to this holy work. Think how Jesus came to seek and to save the lost: and he sought and saved these lost. Our noble America has sent scores of devoted daughters of the Lord to India's respectable homes,—can she not send ONE upon a special mission to those lost whom our Saviour so specially mentioned and invited?

My dear countrymen and countrywomen, you are blessed with God's wealth in grace, gifts and financial means; will you not of your abundance cast into the treasury of the Saviour of India? What shall it be? Some give yourselves, others your means, and all give your prayers. It is as true today as eighteen hundred years ago, that "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver." Yours for India's salvation, WALLACE J. GLADWIN,

Office of India Watchman, Bombay.

P. S.—I hope the above call may be copied, or plainly quoted in many newspapers in America. Should any be moved to enquire about the work, they are cordially invited to write to me at any time. W. J. G.

MASONIC RITES OF HEATHEN ORIGIN.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Freemasonry or sun-worship is intensely anti-Christian. Not only is Saint John's day sun-worship but the last reference to Christianity has been expunged from the system.

"The Blazing Star is said, by Webb, to be commemorative of the star which appeared to guide the wise men of the East to the place of our Saviour's nativity. This, which is one of the ancient interpretations of the symbol, being considered as too sectarian in its character, and unsuitable to the universal religion of Masonry, has been omitted since the meeting of Grand Lecturers at Baltimore, in 1842."—Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, page 56.

To what then does the Blazing Star refer? To the Dog-Star, worshiped by the Egyptians. Grand High Priest Mackey says: "Those brethren who delight to trace our astronomical symbols to the cradle of that science, Egypt, and to the Egyptian priests, its earliest cultivators, find in the seven stars depicted on the Master's carpet a representation of the Pleiades, and in the blazing star an allusion to the dog-star, which the Egyptians called Anubis, or the barker, because its rising warned them of the inundation of the Nile, which always quickly followed its appearance, and thus admonished them to retire from the lower grounds, just as the barking of a dog admonishes his master of approaching danger."—Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, page 452.

WHAT SIGNIFICANCE HAS THE CABLETOW?

"In the Mysteries of India, the aspirant was invested with a consecrated sash or girdle, which he was directed to wear next his skin. It was manufactured with many mysterious ceremonies, and said to possess the power of preserving the wearer from personal danger. It consisted of a cord composed of three times three threads twisted together and fastened at the end with a knot, and was called a zennar. Hence comes our cabletow."—Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, page 29.

WHAT DOES THE HOODWINK SYMBOLIZE?

Every intelligent Master Mason and Royal Arch perceives at once the appropriateness of the cabletow and now we pass to consider the hoodwink. Speaking of the candidate we read: "He maintained the same character in the ancient mysteries. Emphatically a profane, enveloped in darkness, poor and destitute of spiritual knowledge, and emblematically naked. The material darkness which is produced by [the hoodwink] is an emblem of the darkness of his soul."—Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, page 39.

WHY KNEELS THE CANDIDATE TOWARD THE EAST?

Is there any reason why the Masonic candidate always takes his obligations with his face to the east?

"An oath taken with the face toward the east was deemed more solemn and binding than when taken with the face toward any other cardinal point. Oaths were variously confirmed: by lifting up the hands to heaven, by placing them on the altar, or on a stone, or in the hands of the person administering the oath, etc.; and a most solemn method of confirming an oath, was by placing a drawn sword across the throat of the person to whom it was administered, and invoking heaven, earth and sea to witness the ratification."—Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, pages 34 and 35.

Thus the veneration of the sun and the heathen origin and the idolatrous character of Freemasonry continues self-evident.

THE WHITE MASONIC APRON.

"All the ancient statues of the heathen gods, which have been discovered in Egypt, Greece, Persia, Hindoostan, or America, are uniformly decorated with aprons. Hence is deduced the antiquity of this article of apparel."—Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, page 46.

And so it is, always and ever: Freemasonry stands as the personification and embodiment of sun-worship and idolatry.

ADVICE FROM THE FRIENDS OF ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

A correspondent of the Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, writes to that paper for its opinion as to the moral character of the following transaction. He says:

"The Knights of Pythias in this city, composed largely of members of the various churches, are holding a Fair of a week's continuance from Thursday to Thursday, including Sunday—Christmas. The object is to provide means for the erection of a temple for the use of the order.

"The Fair was not open on Christmas, it being Sunday. But a regular Christmas dinner, price fifty cents, was provided, and after the services, members of the churches with others in considerable numbers patronized it. The ministers in the city were furnished with free family tickets to this dinner. The membership of the order embraces one or more of the resident preachers, as also of the elders of the Christian Church."

From the Standard's reply we make the following extract:

"We have no personal knowledge of the Knights of Pythias. If they are a secret organization, then, on general principles, we are opposed to Christians associating with them. Locally, there is no good work needed in such places as our querist speaks of which the church, as such, could not and ought not to accomplish. Or, if there is anything of a philanthropic character, local or general, too large to be managed by the church, and in which all good people may be properly enlisted, then it may be done openly, and need not fear the light of day. From all that we have seen and heard of the operation of secret societies, we are convinced that while the element of secrecy may be made to work mischievously, it is not at all necessary to the accomplishment of benevolent and philanthropic ends. If men of the world choose to enter into such associations, the church has nothing to do with it; but Christians have a Master who organized no such association, and sought refuge for the interests of his mission in no such element. We are satisfied that Christians are frittering away their strength by draining the churches of means which go to support various worldly secret associations—associations which respectable worldly men delight in as religion enough for them, and who are strengthened in their delusion when Christians meet them as on common ground. We advise all Christian people to hold aloof from all such societies, and concentrate their time, sympathies, energies and money on the churches, that they may thus, in place of hiding their light under a bushel, 'shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life.'"

ROMAN CATHOLIC EDUCATION.

The Romish church undertakes to educate the people, and a very laudable undertaking it is. But the ministers of this church deny that other people have a right to teach children. They say that the state has no right to found schools and control education. Well, if the church of Rome is to be the great educator of the people, it is well to ascertain how she has succeeded in teaching them in the countries where she has had control.

According to the United States census of 1870, of every one thousand persons of the population ten years old and upward, 146 were illiterate, 52 of the 146 being under twenty-one years old, and 94 being over that age. This percentage of illiteracy included first, the vast slave population of the South, recently emancipated and almost totally ignorant, and the unavoidable illiteracy among frontier settlements where schools are not established; and second, the immense influx of foreigners, who are largely illiterate, some three-fifths of them being unable to read their own native tongues, to say nothing of ours. If these classes were left out of the account, it is probable that not ten per cent of the population of the United States would be illiterate.

In Germany the census of 1871 reported that nine and one-half per cent of the men, and fifteen and one-half per cent of the women were unable to read and write. In Scotland eleven per cent of the men and twenty-one per cent of the women could not read or write. But in Germany the most of the illiteracy is in the northeastern provinces of Posen and Prussia proper,—a people foreign to the language and institutions of Germany, while in most of the German States the percentage of illiteracy is small, in some cases less than one per cent. France has been, to a large extent, a Catholic country. The census of 1872 showed twenty-seven per cent of illiterate males, and thirty-three per cent of illiterate females. Spain has always been a Catholic country, and the census of Spain in 1860 showed sixty-nine per cent of males and ninety-one per cent of females who could not read or write. Italy in 1861 was reported as having sixty per cent of illiterate male adults, and sixty-eight per cent of illiterate male youths from twelve to eighteen years of age. In 1861 it is stated that among the twenty-two millions of Italians seventeen millions were utterly unable to read, and in the province of Basilcata, with its five hundred thousand people, more than nine-tenths were unable to read.

In Portugal, with its nearly four and one-half millions of people (4,367,882), most of whom are Roman Catholics, the Jesuits established themselves in 1540, and largely controlled the education of the people. They were afterward expelled, but finally returned. In that country, as in Spain, the government has neither provided for, nor fostered universal education, and the political and religious status of the people has afforded no incitements to any effort of their own in this direction.

In the city of New York the census of 1870 reported, out of a total population of 942,292, there were 14,974 male adults and 368,110 female adults unable to write, while of the male youths from ten to twenty-one there were only 3,088, and of the female youths, 4,929 unable to write. This agrees with the fact that a large proportion of the adult population of New York are immigrants from foreign countries, many of whom are illiterate, while their children, trained under the common school system, speedily learn to read and write.

Thus America, with all her freedmen, frontiersmen and foreign population, has only twenty per cent of her people who cannot read or write, most of them being of foreign birth or blood; while in Spain, a long-settled country, with no influx of foreigners, and no untaught colored population, eighty per cent of the people can neither read nor write.

In Belgium, which is a Catholic country, thirty per cent can neither read nor write, and in Austria, another Catholic country, forty-nine per cent of the conscripts, men in the vigor of their young manhood, can neither read nor write. Of the criminal class in Ireland, most of whom are Catholics, forty-six per cent are illiterate. In Russia, under the Greek church, ninety-one per cent are unable to read or write. In Mexico, where the Catholic church has had sway, ninety-three per cent could neither read nor write. In Italy, of the galley slaves, only twenty-nine in a hundred could read or write. In Italy, in 1874, there were in the public schools only seventy pupils to every one thousand inhabitants; while in Switzerland there were 155; in Germany, 152; in Denmark, 135; in France, 131.

In 1635 the people of Boston "requested Bro. Philemon Purmont to become school-master for the teaching and culture of the children." In 1642 the the selectmen of every town were enjoined to have a "vigilant eye over their brethren and neighbors; to see first that none of them shall suffer so much barbarism in any of their families as not to endeavor to teach, by themselves or others, their children and apprentices so much learning as may enable them perfectly to read the English tongue, and a knowledge of the capital laws, upon penalty of twenty shillings." The general court also authorized the appropriation of four hundred pounds for the establishment of a school or college, and directed that the college should be established at Newton.

In 1647 it was ordered by the general court that every township of fifty householders should appoint one of their number to teach all children that might be sent to him to read and write; and the neglect of this ordinance subjected them to the annual penalty of ten pounds. It was also ordered that every town of one hundred families should in addition maintain a grammar school, to fit pupils to enter the university.

In 1683 all towns of five hundred families were required to maintain two grammar schools and two writing schools. Any town failing to support a grammar school was required to pay at once ten pounds, and afterwards twenty, to the nearest school kept in compliance with the law.

After the Revolution, when new townships were created, a lot was reserved in each for the schoolhouse. In 1789 a law was passed that in every town schools should be maintained, in which children should be taught to read and write, and receive instructions in the "English language, arithmetic, orthography and decent behavior!" In 1818 the town of Dedham was indicted, tried and convicted for neglecting for a year to keep and support a grammar school for the instruction of the children in the Greek, Latin and English languages. In 1834 five-sixths of all the children of school age received instruction in the public schools, the remainder attending private schools. In 1834 children under fifteen were prohibited from working in factories unless they had attended school for at least three months the preceding year.

Such have been the pains and labors under which the Massachusetts school system has grown up. And this is the system which the Irish Roman Catholic priests propose to demolish, and introduce instead of it a system less offensive to the Church of Rome, which, where it has full sway, has no schools at all for the common people, and which in Italy, the very headquarters of its whole system, left seventeen millions out of twenty-two millions of the inhabitants unable to read or write.

Perhaps it would be in order to suggest that charity begins at home, and that the Italian Pope, who rules the American priesthood, might very profitably devote his time to educating his own people in Italy, instead of laboring to demolish the school system of America.—The Safeguard.

MOVING THE BRUSH.

We were clearing a piece of ground; as the trees were felled we trimmed them; the trunks and larger limbs we cut into cordwood and carted it away, but the smaller limbs we left in piles of brush. How were we to get it away? Should we pick out those slender branches one by one and tie them in bundles, and so load them up and remove them? That would have been a tedious operation. My man, Tom, who is an old woodsman, knew a better way. He tied a rope around two or three prominent branches in each heap, hitched his horses to the rope, and away went the brush, leaving only a few twigs to mark the spot where it had lain. In a few hours the brush was all gone, and the ground was ready for the plow. While Tom was "brushing," as he called it, I was moralizing. Men are tangled together in social life just as those branches were in the brush-heap. One holds his neighbor by some interlacing interest or sympathy, and through him a third, and they a fourth, and so on. The result is that if you would secure a popular movement anywhere it is not necessary to take hold of every individual man. If you can draw a few men in any direction, you, through them, draw a crowd.

The politicians understand this. If they want to secure a nomination they know just where the brush-heaps of voters are. One is in John Smith's factory; another is in Jerry McFlanagan's saloon; another is in Hans Miller's beer garden. If the aspiring demagogue can get hold of John and Jerry and Hans he is sure of the crowds that they are severally linked with and control. John's fellow-workmen will go just as he goes. He is their oracle. He does their thinking. Jerry's and Hans's customers will follow wherever they lead. So the caucus is set up by securing the influence of a few leading men; and the caucus controls the election; and the "brushing" system gives us our Congressmen and Governors and Presidents.

Men are naturally clannish. They go together through the operation of a law of social magnetism. Nothing is so trying to the average man as to be alone. People herd together as cattle do. They seem to feel that when in a crowd they are safe, and that what a multitude does cannot be wrong, hence, we have mobs of strikers and popular tumults. Some plausible crank or scoundrel takes hold upon a few sticks in the brush-heap, and, presto, the whole mass is in motion Nine-tenths of the people don't know where they are going, or why they are going. They go because somebody else goes. They echo what somebody else says. They have no idea of individual responsibility. They act en masse, and when the excitement is over and they are called to account as men for the doings of the mob, they denounce the whole system of law and order and civilized society. They cry, "Are not we the people? Are we not free? And have we not a right when we move unanimously to do as we please?" They forget that they have not done as they pleased, but only what their self-appointed leaders told them to do. The popular movement is like that of the railroad train, which goes only when and where the locomotive draws it.

There is something inexpressibly sad in this brush-heap idea of humanity. How degrading it is to that manhood on which is the impress of the image of God! The divinely minted soul with the stamp of immortality, worth more than all the gold in the world, has become a mere plaything in the hands of the selfish, the unscrupulous, the atheistic and the vile. What can be done for our social brush-heaps?

The best thing to be done, if it were possible, is to trim from the branches all the twigs and petty side shoots by which they are weakly or viciously intertangled, to make each man so far independent that he will move only when he sees a good and sufficient reason for moving, whether in concert with others or alone. In other words, to educate every human soul up to the idea of its personal responsibility and accountability. This is what the Gospel aims to do, and is doing; but it cannot be done in a day. The danger is imminent; the remedy is remote. The burning question is, How shall we deal with the masses here and now? There is no objection to moving a brush heap as Tom moved mine, if it is moved in the right direction. The church must deal with men as they are. The social reformer and philanthropist must take society as it is and ask how it can be made better under existing conditions and complications. If men are in brush-heaps we must try to get hold of some one through whom we can move the heap. Why should not the church learn wisdom from the politicians? Why should she not go for the representative men in the different cliques and classes into which society is divided? If she can draw them she can draw the multitudes whom they influence and control. We cannot develop the manhood of the masses until we can bring them under better leadership; and the most efficient way of doing that is to convert their leaders. If the church could get a nucleus of laboring men enlisted under its banner, full of zeal for the truth, earnest in the desire and effort to elevate their fellow laborers, she would soon leaven the great mass of humanity in our cities. The Salvation Army is doing some good work in this direction; but its efforts are too irregular and spasmodic to produce permanent results. The organized churches must adopt methods that are more aggressive. While not intermitting their stated services they must go out and go down, and try to get into the lowest and outermost circles of humanity. It seems a great and almost hopeless task. But if we remember how masses are moved, and try to move them as wisely as the children of this world do, we shall soon see grand and blessed results.—Obadiah Oldschool in Interior.

A HEADQUARTERS OF THE N. C. A. AT NEW ORLEANS.

SHALL IT BE ESTABLISHED?

The first suggestion of an extended work for the promotion of the anti-secrecy reform in the South was made by Bro. James, a Free Methodist minister whom I met in Iowa in the winter of 1879 and '80. During the next summer I felt strongly impressed with the importance of the undertaking, especially to save the colored people from the bondage and corruption of the lodge. I was not at that time, and had not for nearly two years been in the employ of the N. C. A., though I had continued to labor in the cause. The state of the treasury was such that there were no means to pay for the inauguration of a Southern work; and there was not much faith in the success of any such undertaking. There were at that time but very few subscribers to the Cynosure south of the Ohio river. I corresponded with a few persons in the South and secured meager encouragement. I visited Iowa and Wisconsin and solicited subscriptions, made payable on condition the work was undertaken, and met with some success.

About October first, I left Chicago for Ohio with a broker's ticket and $3 50 in money. I presented the cause as I went along, and by the time I reached Cincinnati I had $60. I went to Berea, Ky., where I met a most kind reception from the president and officers of the College. Bro. Fee took me to Camp Nelson; from there I went to Chattanooga and then to Nashville. Here, too, I was most kindly received and aided at Fisk University. So also at Dickson, Tenn., Columbus and Tougaloo, Miss., and at last I reached New Orleans, Dec. 25, 1880. Here I met little besides discouragement. I found one man who was in sympathy with our work. Another took the Cynosure, but was an ardent Freemason. I sold him some expositions, which he wanted for lodge use. No man in all the city dared publicly to arraign the secret orders or suffer it to be done in any place under his control. I went to Mobile, where I found sympathy. So also at Selma and elsewhere.

After a journey of nearly four and one half months I returned home, having expended on the trip $202

Next year I visited New Orleans and got a hearing in Straight and Leland Universities and found friends of our reform. I did not go there again until October of 1886. A marked advance had been made in reform principles. Several ministers had given up their connection with the orders and given their testimony against them. The Baptist brethren, in a ministers' meeting, determined to undertake to purge the churches of their State Association from all complicity with the secret orders; and doors were open which had previously been closed.

I returned there again in October of 1887. It had been a year of progress. The secrecy question had been discussed in the schools and the ministers' meetings. The Baptist brethren had voted without dissent to use their influence to get secret societies out of their churches. A bishop of the M. E. church commended our work to his annual conference, and our convention which was held in February had respectful notice in the daily press. The convention, through the well-directed efforts of Bro. Stoddard and others, was a marked success, and a considerable number of ministers who were Masons and Odd-fellows made public renunciation. The debate conducted for the friends of Masonry by the Grand Master of the colored Masons, was a grand success for the anti-secrecy movement. Bro. Davidson, who had for several years, with faithfulness and self-denial, labored for the promotion of our reform principles, has since been employed as an agent, and his labors have been signally blessed. At present more copies of the Christian Cynosure are sent to New Orleans than to any other city or postoffice.

The way seems providentially opened to establish a permanent office with a depository of our publications in New Orleans, and to make it the center of reform, as it now is of the commercial and educational influence of the Southwest. Property suitable for the uses of the Association in desirable locations is owned by a friend of our reform, and could be probably rented on favorable terms. The cost of sustaining an office would not be greater than in any other large city. To secure such an agency and office and to stock it with publications will require a considerable outlay, and special donations ought to be received for this object. It is probable that no work of special reform is more needful or will, on the whole, be more helpful to the colored man and through him to the nation at large.

—Georgia's Chautauqua, in the suburbs of Atlanta, proposes to excel even the beautiful New York resort; the season begins in July. A feature will be a week for Southern literary people of note, in which such persons as Miss Amelia Rives, Thomas Nelson Page, Richard Malcom Johnson. Eli Sheppard, William H. Hayne, Joel Chandler Harris, and others will participate. Each author will deliver an original lecture or read a selection from his or her works. Another week will be devoted to presidents and teachers of the State Universities of the South; a third week to all the teachers of the Southern States, and so on for the whole two months. It is intended to be a literary reunion such as the South has never seen. The educational idea will not be lost sight of, and twenty or thirty teachers, the best that money can get, will be employed to teach the two months' normal school, which it is believed 10,000 Southern teachers will attend.

—Hon. S. V. White, M. C., from New York, with Mrs. White, attended the fiftieth anniversary of Monticello Female Seminary near Alton, Ill., last week. Governor and Mrs. Oglesby were also present, and Dr. Withrow preached the anniversary sermon.

REFORM NEWS.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

THE K. OF P. SUNDAY TRAIN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 9, 1888.

The World's Supreme Conclave of Knights of Pythias, to convene next week in Cincinnati, is highly commended and extensively advertised by the press of this city. There are two divisions in Washington which "will go with full ranks and a band of twenty pieces." It is no matter of surprise that this "godless ape of the bride of Christ" has chosen 11 o'clock Saturday evening as the hour of their departure. It has become a fixed fact that the secret orders so time their anniversaries and large gatherings as to make Sabbath desecration necessary, and it is no marvel that the Pythians follow the example of the Sons of Veterans, the Grand Army, the Knights of Labor, the Odd-fellows and the Freemasons in rejecting God's authority and Sabbath law. The wonder is that such graceless, swindling, profane and unscriptural associations should receive any countenance from Christian people or the Christian press. It must be on the ground of ignorance of the real character of these orders.

In no other way can I understand why a notice of this meeting should appear in the Union Signal of the 7th inst. It seems incredible that the management of that paper intended to endorse, even to the extent of advertising, a great assembly of men who have been initiated over a coffined skeleton, and who "declare and swear never to reveal until death's day the secret mysteries which shall be afterwards disclosed to them;" and that they "will observe all the rules and regulations required by the constitution and by-laws of the order"...."to warn, counsel or shield an esquire from any danger which they may know to threaten him"....and "to obey all orders that may be given, emanating from the Supreme, Grand, or any other lodge in which they hold membership;" invoking as a penalty, in case of failure, to "suffer all the anguish and torments possible for man to suffer," closing with, "So help me God and keep me steadfast."

Had the publisher or editors of that excellent paper known the "mystery of iniquity" working in this Christ-rejecting, Sabbath-desecrating order, I have no thought that the advertisement would have been tolerated on any terms. I mention this not so much to critisize, as to call attention to the importance of being informed on all these practical, living questions.

I found in my visitations to-day the first colored pastor I have met in Washington who attempted to defend secret societies. I called hoping to interest him in our work at No. 215, and to secure his attendance at our prayer meeting. Some of his members live quite near to us and had spoken of their pastor in terms of highest commendation. He was "free-born" and has had many advantages. He joined the lodge in Connecticut, but just before I left said he had not been in a lodge of Masons for over twenty years. He declined to read on the subject as he was too much occupied with ministerial labors. His wife, who was for many years house-servant in the family of Gamaliel Bailey of the Christian Era, was in full accord with her husband, having membership in several orders. She saw much good and no evil in their benevolence. She spoke favorably, however, to Mrs. Stoddard of her efforts in the direction of an industrial school, and we hope to enlist them on that line.

NEWS OF THE LOUISIANA CHURCHES.

PASTORS AND PEOPLE HEAR THE TRUTH AND OBEY BY FORSAKING THE LODGE.

BAYOU SARA, LA., June 13th, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I arrived at Bayou Sara on the 6th. The first minister I found was Rev. H. Hewlatt, of the Baptist church of St. Francisville. After learning my mission he begun to defend the lodge, but finally acknowledged they were in part wrong, and invited me to preach for him Saturday night. I next found Rev. Robert Sarofield, who cordially received me and invited me to preach for him Thursday night. Bro. Sarofield has not found secrecy anti-Christian as yet, though he likes the Cynosure. He carried me about the city and introduced me to many persons. Almost every one whom I was introduced to belonged to some lodge. I visited the public high school under care of Mrs. H. C. Deutsch, a graduate of Straight University, and was pleased at the courses of study. Bayou Sara has about 2,000 inhabitants, with five churches, and nine secret lodges. This little city is sore afflicted with secretism.

I preached at Little Bethel A. M. E. church, Rev. Robert Sarofield, pastor, to a very good audience Thursday, at 7:30 P. M. The better part of the congregation, who were young secretists, received the sermon as unsavory. However, Elder Sarofield heartily endorsed the sermon, and asked his people to give it a careful consideration. After the services a sister said to me, "My husband is an Odd-fellow and I belong to the Jakes and the Universal Brotherhood, but they are all frauds. While I am not educated I am not a fool. These lodges, none of them, can do what they pretend." This sister's experience is that of thousands. I am informed that both the colored and white lodges are experiencing great losses up here.

I called on Revs. Eli Perkins and George Dent, about five miles southeast of Bayou Sara, and found them both very intelligent ministers, but both adherents to the lodge. Both had, however, felt the pressure of the secret power in their churches, and they both are willing to give up their lodge worship. Rev. E. Perkins cordially invited me to preach for him Sabbath at 10 A. M., but owing to previous appointments Bro. Dent could not make any engagement, as the people are very busy, and Sunday being the only day they attend church.

I have been able only to preach twice and lecture once on temperance. The temperance work among both white and black is growing more favorable. I preached on Sabbath at the Raspberry Baptist church of St. Francisville, and lectured one hour on secrecy as a hindrance to the Christian religion. The congregation gave the best of attention, and many responded "Amen". Two of the brethren gave up lodgery from henceforth; also the pastor Rev. H. Hewlatt, said to the congregation, "Rev. Davidson has preached a noble sermon, and it is all truth; and no Christian ought to be offended at the truth. I belong to two lodges, but I am convinced of my error, and I am now ready to repent. Bro. Davidson has certainly preached the Gospel." Several came up and shook my hand and bid me "God speed." I had been advised not to speak against the lodge in this place, but the Spirit caught hold on me and made my cry aloud, "Come out of her, my people." Praise the Lord, old Baal is rooted from his secret places here. I am invited by all of the pastors to return in the fall.

I called at the office of the West Feliciana Sentinel, the official county paper. Mr. Geo. Reese, the editor, promised to send a reporter to take an account of our temperance lecture Tuesday night. I lectured on temperance and morality one hour last night at the Little Bethel A. M. E. church, Rev. R. Sarofield, pastor. The audience gave good attention, except a few young lodge-tobacco rumites, who thought it was nobody's business what they drank, but Bro. Sarofield soon restored peace. The ladies were enthusiastic, and a band of young girls, led by Miss M. H. Benedict, joined in and sang several of Bro. Geo. W. Clark's temperance songs. The temperance society here (colored) is prospering under Mrs. E. Sarofield as president, and Mrs. H. C. Deutsch, secretary. It will be well for temperance ladies of the North to write and send temperance tracts to either of these ladies. Mrs. Deutsch belongs to no lodge, and Mrs. Sarofield is convinced of their secret folly. Although I could hardly find a place where to rest in this place when I first came here, until I found Bro. Sarofield, praise the Lord, I have since made the acquaintance of many kind friends, and have the assurance of many that they intend to give up lodgery. Among them are Rev. H. Hewlatt and Bro. R. Veal.

The white Knights of Pythias calls their brethren to meetings by tolling a bell. Tuesday night they tolled their bell more than an hour. It seems as though the brethren are getting tired of playing "Old Pluto" in the lodge room. I have visited all over this city and find there are five secret lodge halls and two benevolent society halls. I never saw secret lodges ring bells as churches do, for lodge meetings, until I reached here. Surely these secret lodges will baptize and administer sacrament ere long. There has been either a lodge or some other kind of a meeting since I came here every night.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

LEAVES FROM A LECTURER'S NOTE-BOOK

The Chicago Friends—Good Blood in the National W. C. T. U.—The World loves its own; i. e., the Knight Templars—Mrs. M. N. Butler's good work in Missouri—And Mrs. Dr. Sterrett's in Pennsylvania—The National Reform Association.

There are few denominations that sympathize more heartily with our reform work than the Quakers. I spent last Sabbath morning in Bro. Calvin W. Pritchard's Quaker pulpit at Western Springs, near Chicago. I was glad to be in the Bible class with that clear-headed, devoted Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., and dining with her at sister Hill's. The best reform blood is in her veins. Her father was publisher of the Cincinnati Philanthropist, the parent of the National Era, and several times had his press thrown into the Ohio river during the anti-slavery agitation. Miss Pugh is especially radical on the anti-secret issue, declaring that there can be no genuine revival of religion in a church whose pastor or leading members are Masons. In the evening I preached in Bro. Perry's Congregational pulpit, the Quakers uniting in the service and giving a liberal collection for the cause. In the afternoon I attended an Evangelist's Association meeting, in which D. A. Norton, J. L. Atwater and Prof. J. R. Price were leading spirits.

When the Covenanter Synod met in Allegheny, a few weeks ago, there was no decoration of saloons, no laying in of an extra stock of liquor, no redoubling of the police force, no influx of prostitutes from other cities. Yet we were told that all these preparations were made for the great conclave of Knight Templars from all parts of the State, that paraded the streets on the week before. How the people run and gaped after this procession, over a mile in length, with its tinsel of plumes and swords and uniforms and brass bands, and few of them realized that these men—many of them the worst of men—were organizing and drilling in secret, preparing to scatter in ruins every institution daring to resist their selfish schemes. How differently the press of the city treated these two gatherings. They could scarcely find adjectives enough to describe the grandeur and excellence of the Knight Templars, while the poor Covenanter Synod was burlesqued and treated with contempt, giving only the smallest space for our reports. Every year we are finding it more difficult to get reports of our meeting in the secular press. The man is blind and insensible who does not notice that the conflict between the moral and immoral forces in our land is deepening, and must soon result in fearful convulsions that will shake the frame-work of society to pieces.

One of the pleasant memories of my work last spring was a meeting at Darlington, Mo., and my visit at the home of Bro. M. N. Butler, our anti-secret lecturer. His devoted wife is president of the local W. C. T. U. and secretary of the county unions, and has made her influence felt in the State, in the direction of trying to start a department of anti-secret work. She presided at my meeting here, and Bro. Butler aided materially in making the arrangements.

It was my privilege while at Synod in Allegheny to be entertained at the home of Mrs. Dr. Sterrett, whose hospitable roof first gave me shelter eighteen years ago, when I went a lonely student to the Seminary. The Dr. has since gone to his rest; but sister Sterrett, who was then one of the leaders in the Woman's Crusade, is now superintendent of the Sabbath Observance department of the W. C. T. U. work in the county, and more active than ever in reform work. She has all these years been a close reader of the Cynosure, and it was mainly her efforts that secured several meetings for me in the city. What made my stay here doubly pleasant was that I shared a room with Bro. T. P. Stevenson, editor of the Christian Statesman. He agrees with me that the National Reform Association has not devoted sufficient attention to the discussion of the secret society question. He believes it is one of the greatest dangers threatening the country, and at the next annual convention to be held in Pittsburgh next spring he will try to have on the program a strong address on the lodge question.

M. A. GAULT.

THE DEBATE AT VERNON, WIS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—You have kindly hinted that this matter should be written up. I will, therefore, without going into details, give your readers an outline of the debate. Rev. W. H. Clark, district lecturer for the I. O. G. T., after others had failed, came here determined to organize a lodge; and with the aid of the Waukesha lodge did succeed in doing so. During these proceedings he became quite arrogant and "independent", going so far as to say of the opposition, "Anybody can criticize, or object—it don't take much brains to criticize!"

This was enough to start the Scotch blood just a little. However, we sat still,

"Nursing our wrath to keep it warm."

The public now wanted to see the bottom of the matter and demanded a public discussion; which was agreed to on the following question: "Resolved, That Good Templarism is wrong in principle and pernicious in practice."

When the time came, it was found that we both had failed failed to get help, which was contemplated. So we entered the arena for single combat; each speaker to have thirty minutes for first speech, fifteen for second, and the affirmative to have ten minutes to close. James McKinzie of the committee of arrangement took the chair and managed it well. The friends of truth were a little nervous, and Good Templars thought they saw the end of opposition.

In our first speech we made the following objections:

1. To the name "Templar." It had a bad origin and a worse history, and no sensible person should glory in, or help perpetuate it.

2. It is a secret society. And thus it proposes to do Christian work in an un-Christian way. Temperance is now a factor in politics and should be dealt with openly as other questions.

3. Its creed consists of but one article and that is purely deistic: "Do you believe in Almighty God, the ruler and governor of all things?" No recognition of Christ, the Spirit or the Word. The Bible knows two personal Gods—the Triune God, and the god of this world. A creed must be specific in these days. I took this creed to a Jewess in Waukesha and had the following conversation:

"Would you be willing to subscribe to that creed?"

"Why, yes. I believe in a God."

"Do you see any recognition of Christ in it?"

"No. I do not."

"If you did, would you then be willing?"

"No."

It will not answer to say that Christ is named in some of the prayers, for the prayers are no part of the creed. Neither do they conform to it. They may therefore be said to be unconstitutional and un-Christian. "He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father, who hath sent him." John 5: 23. See also 2 John 9.

4. It teaches its members hypocrisy and deception. This we proved by what had taken place in former meetings; as:

(1) They told us we had everything in the constitution and by-laws. Which was false. (2) They blamed us for taking the rituals from a drawer in the lodge room. Which was also false. (3) The lecturer pretended to be willing to let us peruse the ritual; but never did so. Where did he learn these methods? Not in the Methodist church, but in the LODGE. I offered to withdraw this argument if these points were explained; but they were not.

5. It teaches immorality by coming between parents and children. (See Grand Lodge decisions in by-laws.)

Mr. Clark seemed to be taken by surprise by these things, and made an entire failure in trying to answer them. As a sample of his reasoning: On the "name" he said that some man of his name or mine may have been hung, but that did not affect us. With regard to the "creed" he said it was formulated by a committee, most of whom were Methodist ministers, and therefore must be all right, etc.

In my second speech I remarked, that if it did not require much brains to raise objections, it did require brains to answer them.

The following episode took place after the debate.

Mr. C.—"I feel very much hurt. You might as well have called me a liar. I have always been willing to show you the ritual." (Hands me the ritual.)

I then said, "How much did this ritual cost you?"

Mr. C.—"Seventy-five cents."

"Well, I will give you a dollar for it, and you can get another."

"No. I am not allowed to sell it."

I then said, "I will leave five dollars with some responsible person as a guarantee that I will return it to you."

"No. I will not do it."

So my argument on deception was confirmed. How strange that Gospel ministers will turn aside from their great commission, to disciple men to lodges instead of to Christ? J. B. GALLOWAY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SIN ABOUNDING.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., June 11.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have not written you for some time, because I was afraid of saying things of interest only to myself. I see enough at every stopping place to talk about as I understand matters. I left Vicksburg, Miss., for Indianapolis to attend the National Convention of Prohibitionists. At Memphis I found our little (and yet large) Bro. Countee all broken up. The death of his brother has greatly unnerved him. He weeps as he speaks of it, and says he feels left alone almost so far as earthly help is concerned. His health is poor also. He needs the prayers of your many readers. Sick as he was, Bro. Brinkley and he were at work on the Living Way.

I have been speaking nearly every night since I came to this State. The colored people are more dominant here than in the far South. The Negro here boasts of his advantages and will not hear anything not in harmony with his views, while in the South he will hear, whether he obeys or not. I came to Terre Haute Saturday night. It is said that this city was founded in 1816 by French infidels, and from the looks of things their stamp is still upon the people. There are three elements here, viz, 1. The "Law and Order" people (very few); 2. Those in favor of eight days' work in the week if it were possible, but less gambling (very strong); 3. "The Wide Opens," (those favoring a go-as-you-please town) and they are in the majority. Yesterday (Sunday) they had a "Wild West" show at the fair grounds, a sword contest at one of the parks, and every saloon open, and any other business house open that wanted to. One could see nothing to indicate it was the Sabbath. The churches are poorly attended and it is said by some of the leading pastors that the wealthy and influential citizens are out of the churches with no means of reaching them. Near the city is the beautiful Wabash river, and on its banks (in the city) are two distilleries, one of them said to be the largest in the world. I went through it to-day. They use up 8,000 bushels of grain per day, making five gallons of liquid fire to the bushel of grain. It seems to be the pride of this wicked city. It is owned by the Wabash Brewing Co., and one of its men is a councilman and another bidding for a seat in Congress, and it is rumored that he says he will spend $5,000 in the election. I went to the United States bonded warehouse and an inspector told me that they turned out from 300 to 375 barrels per day, ranging from 40 to 49 gallons each. Dear Brother Editor, you can see that from this "wicked" city flows a stream that is helping to curse the homes of our land. The smoke of it darkened the clouds on Sunday just the same as to-day. The fermenting department has such a bad odor that one can barely go into it, and after the bubbling, boiling and rotting, this poison is sold to men in the name of "personal liberty." There is one other strange feature here: any one can sell liquor, as no one pays the city any tax. It only costs one $132.40 per year to run a saloon, cigar and tobacco stand. While the saloon makes crime it don't give the city one cent to help care for it, as the money paid goes to the State and county. Two of the pastors (white) seem discouraged. One attacked the "wide open agitators" and one of the city papers said, "If Rev. —— don't like our city he can get out." I have not seen the Cynosure since I left Mississippi, though I inquire in every city.

THE LODGE.

The secretists hold full sway here. At the G. A. R.'s turnout at Indianapolis on the 30th ult., they held first place. The colored churches here are lodge rooms for some of the secret societies. Of course where liquor abounds its brother, the lodge, must be.

I met Bro. Kellogg at the Convention and promised to visit the office in Chicago, but cannot, as I must be at home on the 24th inst. I lecture here to-night and to-morrow night, then go to Lafayette and Indianapolis, and then for Texas. God is on the side of right and our cause is gaining ground. I work, leaving the results with the Lord, for he hath said, "My grace is sufficient for all your needs." I am, as ever, yours in Jesus,

A BAD STORY FOR POSTERITY.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., June 7, 1888.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I wrote you a short time since of a little episode in the First Baptist church here on last "Easter," wherein your correspondent is charged with naughtiness in circulating tract "No. 11" in the presence of the Knight Templars.

The cold facts with which this tract is loaded were not noticed, but instead I received private threats and a public rebuke from behind the pulpit. This seemed much like firing off a hundred-pound columbiad at a city sparrow, for—as would doubtless be the case with the sparrow—I still survive.

The irrepressible truth of the tract seems to have borne fruit already, as will be seen by reading further. This church is about building a new edifice, and the corner-stone laying would have furnished a fine opportunity of advertising the white-aproned gentry who wear white gloves "in token of (who dare doubt it!) their innocence."

Last evening I attended the laying of the stone, and strange to say I saw no insignia or regalia, and heard no pompous rigmarole about Solomon or St. John; nobody but plain citizens in common wardrobe. There were speeches, prayers and singing, and then an apology was offered for not employing the fraternity, that the church was very modest and did not court a display.

Of course were it not for this diffidence we should have had engraved on this stone, "Laid in such a year Anno Lucis (year of light). The incongruity of thus dating a Christian church not from the Christian era was not mentioned, and the private sentiment which has saved us from this disgrace we believe is due to the aforesaid tracts.

The documents placed in the stone, the speaker told us, were (when this building shall have served its time and been torn down) to show the future antiquarian the high moral character of our church and city in 1888.

One of the enclosed documents is the Bulletin (Sunday edition) advertising Sunday base-ball, prize fights, Sunday picnics and excursions, free lunches, saloons and lodges innumerable. The grand worshipful masters, prelate and sovereign rulers in these columns will give our age a rather poor showing for humility. Now the chief attention we give this paper is from the fact that the editor is also the Sabbath-school superintendent of this church, and also the leader of its choir. In addition he has a lodge for every night in the week and figures largely in Democratic chicanery.

In addition to all this the future antiquarian will find from perusing these papers that the speaker on this occasion was also the mayor of the city, and has signed the licenses for sixty saloons, owns stock in base-ball clubs, and struts with (K)night Templar sword and feathers before the wondering eyes of his Sunday-school class.

Think you the future reader of these things will not blush to be descended from such a stock?

Yours, H. D. WHITCOMB.

THE TWO SONS OF SATAN.

MARYSVILLE, Mo.

BELOVED WORKERS:—I am happy to inform you that those who work with God must work together; and they must work for God and against the devil. Since we have entered upon the vast fields of general mission work, we find the following facts for God's workers to consider:

1. That God's ways are equal. That all things work together for the good of God's people. When sickness called us to return from our Eastern tour we did not at first understand this change in our summer's work, as we had intended to work in many of our large Eastern cities. How could this be for the best? Even before we reached home, all was made plain: that God, our great Commander, never makes a mistake. Bless his holy name!

2. We must work while it is day, and with our might.

3. The work now on hand, it is plain to be seen, is simply to "destroy the works of the devil." This work begins with repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. When sin in the heart is destroyed, then we become workers with God, and necessarily workers together, as we have but one God to work with and for. And if we work with God we must work against sin and the devil. If we are not for God we are against him. In this case we are with Satan, as there are but two sides. If we are not workers together with God, we must work with Satan.

As I have only time to make plain but one single point, I will mention one of great importance to the nation, the church, the family, and individuals. Satan has a pair of twin sons. They are well known throughout the world. Their names are Strong Drink and Secrecy. What these two sons of hell can't do the devil thinks no use for him to try. I found in Chicago they were doing their best,—the one son by keeping all things in the dark. We went to Chicago to reform these men who are planning to blow up things in general; but we could not find one man! All hid! The other son is, in all manner of ways, by day and night, advertising their strong drink. This is a bold son of perdition. Of all his cunning and deceitful plans to murder the innocent, I have found none equal to the one he has of late introduced. The poor, hungry man, sober, but without money, passing one of these secret hell holes (see Psa. 10: 8) reads in letters of gold: "Free Warm Dinner." This son, filled with the spirit of a lion, lieth in wait to catch this poor man; when once in his net he is gone. God help us to awake and resolve that as sin doth abound more and more, God's "grace shall much more abound." I have a God-ordained plan to beat the devil with,—one impressed on my mind for more than twenty-five years: to build a house that will cover a block in a central location in our large cities, to be called "The Happy Home for All," with ample rooms for mission work till Jesus comes; where the fallen ones may not only be saved, but kept "from the evils of the world" (1 John 17: 15); where from 1,000 to 10,000 may be fed per day. I will commence stirring up our rich men to unite in this movement, and will help all I can. Just as soon as some good man, who wants a good farm joining a city, on good terms, will buy my farm, or if some friend of the Cynosure will send a man to buy my farm, when sold, I will send $100 to help the Cynosure work; for I do think it is the most important paper published, and published by men who know their business, and who attend to it. We shall see this fall who is on the Lord's side, when the votes are counted. Yours as ever, R. SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

HOWE INSTITUTE FLOURISHING.

I have kept so excessively busy ever since I returned home that I could not give any time to other than that work which relates directly to my church and school. The school prospers nicely. The enrollment has reached over two hundred, and the average attendance has been about one hundred and fifty. Mrs. Browne (J. F.) is here and is teaching in our school. Miss Farley is in Michigan. She has been successful in her efforts for the school and we will have our boarding facilities ready for the fall term. Our school will be closed on the 15th, and after that date I shall give some direct and constant attention to getting subscribers for the Cynosure More anon.—BYRON GUNNER, New Iberia, La.

THE WORST SLAVERY.

I do not get away from home quite as often as I had hoped to this spring, but when health and circumstances will allow I am doing what I can to stir up a thinking all along the lines that open on the awful soul bondage that many of my noble fellow citizens are in when drawn into the secret lodges. May God help them to see how much worse this soul bondage is than the slaves of the South. Respecting the American Anti secrecy League I have a few names and purpose having some more before sending in.—M. L. WORCESTER Kingston, Ill.

LITERATURE.

THE WONDERFUL LAW. By H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston. No. 18 of The Anti-Infidel Library. Price 20 cents. Pp. 118. Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill, Boston.

It needs no argument to establish the fact that any work by the editor of the Boston Christian would not have before it a great and worthy theme, and would be so written as to convince the understanding and benefit the heart of every reader. "The Wonderful Law" is such a book. Some weeks since we referred to the fact that men are more and more turning to the statutes of the great Jewish lawgiver for a better understanding of the social problem and its solution in the heaven-inspired regulations of the Jewish code. This was in connection with the volume of Rabbi Berkowitz, "Judaism on the Social Question." "The Wonderful Law" shows how the Hebrew code dealt not only with the questions of labor and its rewards, but also with capital crimes, and with less gross violations of the moral law; with slavery, social impurity, civil revolution, polygamy and divorce, with the rights of women, the relations of the employed and the employer, intemperance in eating as well as drinking. It is shown that this wonderful law is not the work of priests but of God, and it must be reverently studied as an exposition of the Divine will respecting these practical questions in civil and religious life.

Among the excellent publications of the W. C. T. Union at its Chicago headquarters is the Home Leaflets No. 2, by Rev. C. C. Harrah, pastor of the Congregational church at Galva, Ill. The topic discussed is "Children in the Church," and Bro. Harrah has given to the elucidation of this most important theme his most careful thought, in establishing the principle that children should be born into the church as they are into citizenship, and grow up from infancy in the fear and admonition of the Lord. A subject of such vital importance to the church as well as the household, which is yet so seldom taught as it should be in our American pulpits, makes us wish to urge that all parents read prayerfully this leaflet, and with God's blessing profit by it for themselves and for generations to come.

The June American Magazine contains the third number of "Along the Carribean," an illustrated article. William E. Curtis's South American series is continued in "Ecuador and her Cities" also well illustrated. Perhaps the concluding part of "My Dream of Anarchy and Dynamite" will have most attention from the public. The picture of desolation and death which the imagination of the author draws is terrific, and yet not impossible if the secret plotting of anarchists and the study of methods of wholesale murder by Most is permitted to continue. The object of the author is to arouse public interest in this subject, and secure laws making the manufacture of dynamite bombs a mortal crime. Gen. O. O. Howard of San Francisco discusses "Our Defenses from an Army Standpoint." He is in favor of international arbitration and the abolition of war; but thinks that the day of peace has not yet come, and that a wise national policy will provide for dangerous contingencies. "American and German Universities" by Rev. Henry Loomis is an able and original defense of the American college against the innovations of German specialists.

The Library Magazine for June contains 180 pages of reading matter. The two articles on Mohammedanism will be sure to attract the attention of thoughtful readers. They are "Islam and Civilization" by Rev. Malcolm McColl and "The Doctrine of Islam" by Ahmed Essad, the Shiek ul Islam. Prof. Richard A. Proctor has a geological article, "The Everlasting Hills." An article from the Contemporary Review by Rev. Dr. John Clifford takes up "Baptist Theology" and produces strong evidence of the conservatism and evangelical character of that theology. Under the title "Tuckahoe University" Bishop Wayman of the African M. E. church tells with quaint simplicity of the educational advantages of a slave. Biographical articles are "Thomas Moore," "Heinrich Heine," and "Lincoln and Grant" by Chauncey M. Depew.

In Words and Weapons for June the associate editor, Mr. Mills, writes on the "Pastor in Politics," and gives good advice against being a partisan in the ordinary acceptance of the word, but encouraging every one to maintain his moral convictions and be faithful when duty to the truth demands sacrifice. Rev. F. E. Clark, president of the Christian Endeavor Society movement, writes of the rapid growth and efficiency of that organization. Dr. Pierson's biographical sketch is of Fenelon, archbishop of Cambria. Mr. Hadley, manager of the Water Street Mission, New York, founded by Jerry McAuley, gives a thrilling account of his experience with strong drink.

The Century has printed several articles of timely interest to students of the International Sunday-school lessons. The July number is to have another of these papers, written by Mr. Edward L. Wilson, and illustrated with engravings made from his photographs. It will describe a journey from the Red Sea to Mount Sinai, following the course which is supposed to have been taken by the Children of Israel, and will include a description of the ascent of the mountain. Among the illustrations are a view of the site of the battle between Israel and Amalek, and of the Plain of Assemblage as seen from the Rock of Moses on Mount Sinai.

A new and much more desirable arrangement of Literature, Alden's weekly magazine, places the portrait and sketch on the first pages. Miss Alice French, known to the reading public as "Octave Thanet," has an appreciative biography by Mrs. Wyman. Miss French writes on "Short Stories" and there is a specimen from one of her own which appeared some time since in the Century.

OBITUARY.

MRS. MARY TOLMAN JACKSON, wife of Elder Isaac Jackson, at the age of 73 passed over the river February 21st at their home in Harrison, Maine.

She was born in Troy, N. H. She experienced religion at the age of 17, and soon began to warn sinners to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. From the first she manifested great fervency and power in prayer, and was the means, through the grace and power of God, of bringing over five hundred souls into his fold and to unite with the church.

She had a fine presence, winning many friends by her pleasant and cheerful disposition, as well as by her faithful admonitions and great anxiety for their souls. She was married to Isaac Jackson April 16th, 1833, and together they took their (at that day) long journey to their home in Vermont.

September, 1841, she felt it her duty and privilege to take a more public stand for Christ, and in company with her husband appointed meetings from place to place, everywhere meeting with good success by seeing many converted. After traveling a few years in Vermont and Massachusetts they determined to go West. They landed in Elgin, Ill., and soon had the satisfaction of seeing their prayers answered by a great outpouring of the Spirit and many converted. I presume there are some living there now who will remember the work of grace that went on, as, at that early day, it was an uncommon thing to see a woman in a pulpit, the churches being opposed to women speaking in public. At the first meeting two rose for prayers, and as the meetings went on many more, so that there was a good work accomplished. They remained there about two months, preaching nearly every night.

They next stopped at Ohio Grove, where about seventy turned to the Lord. They were called to Sycamore, where they had several conversions. Many other places were visited with good results for the souls of men.

Mrs. Jackson lived in Wisconsin eighteen years, preaching a greater part of the time on the Sabbath. They held a revival meeting in Saratoga, Wis., where about fifty were baptized. Three churches were organized and every candidate for admission was examined in regard to his belief in secret societies or Freemasonry. None were received who favored such societies. This was before the Cynosure was started. It was about the time the war broke out.

They went to Hillsborough, where they remained nearly two years, Mrs Jackson preaching most of the time. A revival soon commenced. Sinners came forward to be prayed for, and one night half the people in the congregation rose for prayers. The crowd was so great they had to move to more commodious quarters. Many were truly converted, and united with the church. Elder Jackson baptized about sixty-seven and a new church was built in the place.

Not long after they settled their affairs in Wisconsin and came East to spend the remainder of their days, but did not cease to labor for the conversion of souls. They settled in Harrison, and soon a revival was started in Sebago, notwithstanding the opposition of two ministers who belonged to the Masonic lodge.

Mrs. Jackson bore a living testimony for Jesus in all places wherever a door was opened. She possessed a charming voice, full of magnetism and power, which could be heard clear and distinct in every part of the house, and she had a most happy faculty of selecting appropriate hymns, so that her singing was as effectual in winning souls to Jesus as was her preaching.

For the last two or three years her health had not been so good as usual and in February last she was taken violently sick, suffering great pain, and lived only ten days. She was impressed that this was her last sickness, and desired to have her only sister sent for, who came and remained with her till the end. She was so weak from severe and constant pain, she could not talk much, but said she was ready to go, and her Saviour had gone to prepare a mansion for her in heaven. She told a watcher she could not talk with her dear husband about it for he would feel so badly. Several months before she was sick she selected Elder Isaac Hyatt to preach her funeral sermon from the following text: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith."

Her husband, who has traveled so many miles with her, is left to mourn her loss. He still lives in Harrison and his neice keeps house for him.

is a dangerous disease. From its tendency to extend to the throat, bronchial tubes, and finally to involve the lungs in consumptive disease, it should be promptly cured, that these grave dangers may be averted. So confident are the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy of their ability to cope successfully with this very prevalent disease that they have for years offered, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of catarrh, no matter how bad or of how many years standing, which they cannot cure. Remedy only 50 cts, by druggists.

For chronic catarrh, induced by a scrofulous taint, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the true remedy. It stops catarrhal discharges, removes the sickening odor, and never fails to thoroughly eradicate every trace of the disease from the blood. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowshlp and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1888.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM, like an almanac calculated to suit all latitudes, is neither tariff nor anti-tariff, and it blurs Prohibition, the question most agitated by the people, by reaffirming its former platform, which was pro-liquor, by hinting against sumptuary laws.

THE REPUBLICANS know and feel that Cleveland is to be re-elected. The best men and most capable in the Republican party concede this; and a failure next fall will send that party to the tomb of the old Whig party.

THE PROHIBITIONISTS are cheerful and so united that they did not stumble at woman suffrage, and though silent before the lodge, the leaders of secretism were not favorites, but were voted down on another issue; and the circulation of a protest against Masonry is judged by so careful an observer as Rev. Mr. Wylie of Indiana to have defeated the nomination of Green Clay Smith.

"BLASPHEMOUS BOSH" is the title by which the Interior forcibly characterizes Ingersoll's so-called reply to Mr. Gladstone on Christianity. But why should Allen Thorndyke Rice escape censure for purchasing and publishing the coarse blasphemy of Ingersoll, and the vaticinations of the Mormons. The North American Review is "American" no longer. When Voltaire first began to call the Son of God "the wretch", a friend asked him what Jesus had done that he should assail one so innocent, lovely and true. Voltaire replied: "The fact is I must be read." This was the motive of Judas. He did not want Christ's life. He wanted silver.

THE CATHOLIC REVIEW informs us that the bishops of Ireland have been "directed by the Pope himself" to explain his "rescript," by flatly denying that he censured the "plan of campaign and prohibited the boycott." So it seems the five or six thousand Catholics who met in the Chicago Armory and defied the Pope's interference with Irish politics did not understand the English language into which the rescript was faithfully translated. There is another explanation possible, viz., that Leo, to court Victoria and the English landlords, did issue that rescript, and when he saw the Irish rose up against it, ordered his bishops to explain it away by denying that he done what he had done.

JOAN OF ARC, the well-known heroine of France, is said by the historians to have been convicted of "heresy and witchcraft" by priests and politicians; and Hume says, "The infamous sentence was executed by burning at the stake, in the city of Rouen, over 450 years ago" (1431). Another story obtained some currency, to wit: that Joan was allowed to escape and another woman burned in her place. This girl hero, it seems, is to be canonized as a Romish saint. The Catholic Herald of the 9th inst. says, "A band of Catholics have started a paper to advocate her saintship;" and the Bishop of Verdun says, "I feel myself in honor bound to defend her against all assailants, and to glorify her before all the world." So "humanity rolls onward." Priests burn and priests canonize. As Joan is beyond the reach of such trifling, the money and time were better given to save the little "Joans" in the families of drunkards.

THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE is receiving the particular attention of various organizations which desire an expression of that party against national evils. The National Woman Suffrage Society has opened headquarters at the Sherman House, and Susan B. Anthony and Isabel Beecher Hooker have come on to assist the local committee. Miss Hooker made a speech to the National committee Friday, promising a hundred women speakers and victory for the party as long as they wanted it, if a suffrage plank was adopted. Several State Sabbath-school associations, the Presbyterian General Assembly and other bodies petition for a declaration against all unnecessary work on the Lord's day. Last, but not least, the National Christian Association had its memorial presented to the Committeee, and the morning dailies, with one exception, noticed the fact and published part or the whole of the document.

"THE COLLEGE QUESTION."

The American Magazine for June has a sprightly, though not profound, article on "American and German Universities," in which the writer, Rev. Henry Loomis, gives the superiority to American over European liberal culture. The article is well worth a careful reading.

The review writer says that "a few years since a considerable part of the student population at Heidleburg" were from wealthy and noble families, "attended by a retinue of enormous dogs;" were "punctual at the semi-weekly dueling; regular in their attendance at beer taverns, and but seldom troubling a lecture-room with their presence:" "arbitrary and quarrelsome, when not drunken or brutal; became objects of admiration to the American girl abroad," but a terror to their mothers, sisters and wives; "till their employment in the army was hailed as the only hope of relief."

But in spite of these exceptional features of a German university, which belong to the nation rather than to its schools, wealth, age, accumulation of means and distinguished scholars, and aspirants to literary fame from those classes who must make their own standing in society,—these all have combined to make the impression current that the University is vastly superior to the College; that is to say the American College; and with these questions of material and men have mingled other issues, as of the old classics vs. modern languages, and of both against the sciences, falsely called practical. And these have combined to give the palm to the University. Our review writer dissents.

The College proper is an American institution. Its four classes, Freshman, Sophomore, Junior and Senior, all came from Cambridge; after which the three or four hundred colleges, now working under State charter, were all modeled, with substantially the same curricula and degrees. And this American system has stood the test of popularity with the masses. As the new States have opened and spread from the old thirteen, college charters have been one chief reliance of land-speculators to raise the value of their lands; and one chief cause of this continuous popularity has been the facility with which the College has adapted itself to the popular wants. Fifty years ago chemistry was a young science in some of the New England colleges, and geology was unknown in some of them; but as soon as a young science has been born, it has been taken to the bosom and nursed by the College; and inventions and the arts have no sooner found way to the shop of the artisan than their theories have "gone to College." And every new comer into the College course has scarcely taken its seat before challenging the right of the old occupants to be there; and no old bursar has been more severely challenged than the Greek and Roman classics; and sometimes not without cause.

The fixed habits of European institutions had so petrified the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford that they were compared to "hulks sunk in the stream of public opinion to show how fast the current flowed by them;" and in the old schools of Eton and Rugby, at one time, men were found who boasted that they had given a lifetime to the study of Homer. But in spite of these, and the like literary antiquaries, who "remember what everyone else forgets, and forget what everyone else remembers," the ancient classics have maintained themselves in the college course, on these clear and substantial grounds:

1. Alexander and Cæsar not only conqured nations, but created history; and to stop short of Greek and Latin would be like never to explore the Mississippi above Cairo.

2. The histories of Christ are in Greek, and to be ignorant of it is to be ignorant of Christianity. The three languages written over Christ's head on the cross, Hebrew, Greek and Latin, are the three pillars in the Temple of Human Civilization.

3. The English language, now spoken around the globe, and which is yet to master it, is in large degree derived from these old tongues, and rests on the old classics as law rests on the Hebrew Decalogue, and Christianity on the Gospels in Greek.

Hannah More said she would rather cheapen bread one penny in the loaf than have written Milton's Paradise Lost. Cheap learning will cheapen bread. And the first classes in Cambridge and Yale had, at graduation, less learning than is given in our graded schools all over the United States; and the time is gone by when college graduates will be deemed backsliders who do not enter what have been called "the learned professions."

But the glory of the College in the old country or the new is their relation to religion and reform. A Latin essay in Cambridge, England, overthrew slavery and the slave trade in the West Indies; and a prayer meeting under the linden trees of Oxford has revolutionized religion and filled the world with Methodists. Oneida Institute and Knox College furnished modern Abolitionism with its start of piety and brains combined; and a host of colleges springing up all over the South, in the hands of God, will wean religion from fanaticism, furnish teachers for the schools, banish illiteracy, and overthrow the lodges.

"THE SEVENTEEN-YEAR LOCUSTS"

The insects of this name are coming up out of the earth in great numbers; so far as we have seen them they are of the least destructive species of the genus grasshopper, which, like everything else, runs into infinity.

There are ten Hebrew words in the Bible which are translated locust. The quails (Ex. 16: 13) many insist were locusts; they are eaten with relish by the inhabitants of the East, and are said to be not unwholesome. John the Baptist ate locusts and wild honey. But the prophets, especially Joel and Amos, regard and describe them as terrible scourges of God sent on the people of Palestine.

Jeroboam had built altars at Bethel, for a political religion, to keep his subjects from worshiping at Jerusalem, lest they should go back to the dynasty of David after they had revolted from Rehoboam, the stupid son of Solomon. The calf-worship which Jeroboam set up at Dan and Bethel was the popular cattle-worship of Egypt restored; and as people become like the gods they worship, brute-worship made the nation brutish, and these prophets were sent to rebuke them. These are specimens of their rebukes:

"In the day when I shall visit the transgressions of Israel.... I will visit the altars of Bethel." Amos 3: 14. "They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy God, oh Dan, liveth.... shall fall never to rise up again." As they adopted lodge religions, they had lodge morals, drunkenness, slavery and harlotry. Thus: "Awake, ye drunkards, and weep; and howl, ye drinkers of wine." Joel 1: 5. "Because ye have taken my silver and gold, and have carried them into your temples.... I will sell your sons and your daughters." Joel 3: 5–8. "They have given a boy for an harlot, and sold a girl for wine." Joel 3: 3. "That ye may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes." Amos 8: 6.

Wars followed this national demoralization. Thus Joel says (3: 9, 10): "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: Prepare war.... Beat your plowshares into swords and your pruning-hooks into spears," etc. The Gentiles were surrounding nations who had no Messiah (Christ) and who desolated Judea, as it lies now. And the one cause of war from first to last was that which exists between the Mormans and Americans now, viz., their religion. One side worships Christ and accepts the two principles of the Decalogue, supreme love to God and equal love to man; the other obeys their priests. Joel and Amos were of the later prophets.

Six full centuries and a half before Moses and Joshua had predicted the utter destruction of the Hebrew cemmonwealth, and assigned one unwavering cause for their demolition, viz., worshiping at other altars beside Christ's. (See Deut. 29: 25) "Men shall say, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord God of their fathers, served other gods and worshiped them;" therefore, "The whole land is brimstone, salt and burning, that it is not sown nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein." And six hundred and fifty years later these two prophets depict their terrible national overthrow, in which locusts and grasshoppers bore so horrible a part. "In the year 591 A. D. it is said that nearly a million of men and beasts were carried off in Spain by a pestilence arising from the stench of these locusts when they were dead."—Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge. See also Joel, first chapter, and Amos 7: 1. And the armies of grasshopper pests, which a few years since sallied forth from the elevated portions of Colorado, where they breed most abundantly (Johnson's Encyclopedia), and ravaged portions of our Western States, Kansas especially, could not be better described than in the words of Joel 6: 1. Even when there were no such flights of these animals as darkened the heavens, the writer has seen grasshoppers twenty miles west of Denver, Colorado, whose bodies were two or three inches long and of the size of a man's finger. But the locusts appearing this year bear no resemblance to these loathsome and greedy creatures. These locusts live and sing in trees, and though we have heard and seen them from childhood in Vermont, Pennsylvania and Illinois, we never knew grass or grain destroyed by them, though the small limbs of trees have been bored or cut by them. These tree locusts are hatched from eggs in the shape of locust grubs, without wings, and make their way down into the earth, whence fact or fable says they emerge in seventeen years. Of this particular time, however, we have found no proof but the random recollections of individuals. But it is certain that they burrow in the earth. Thousands of them have been shoveled up in tile-clay pits, at a depth of four feet. They come out, as this year, in the chrysalis state, a locust in shape, all but the wings. They creep out through an opening in the head of the chrysalis, with the W on their back, and are really pretty, with their transparent wings, with which they at once fly off to seek their mates. The barn-yard fowls improve their opportunity, turn John the Baptists, and feed on locusts with the relish of Arabs.

The fifth woe-trumpet of the Apocalypse (Rev. 9) brings an army of locusts from the "smoke of the pit" to desolate and destroy, not herbage, but men; which, of course, are the horrible symbols of horrid realities, to visit men for their sins. But whether natural or supernatural, these armies of foes, ready to burst from their invisible realms, in heathen lands or Christian, are messengers sent to warn and scourge nations who substitute for God's Sabbaths and sanctuary the religions invented by men.

—Bro. L. B. Kent, publisher for the Western Holiness Association, Bloomington, Ill., has just published a book entitled, "Open Secret. Mists of Masonic Mysteries." By Rev. James Hobbs.

—A donation of $3 from R. J. Williams and $5 from Rufus Johnson of Washington Territory has been forwarded to Elder R. N. Countee, as the above brethren wished to assist him to a rest among the mountains if he saw fit so to use it.

—The Prohibition State Convention in New York will be held in Syracuse next Tuesday, and is to be made a grand rally for the anti-saloon party. If New York can give 75,000 or 100,000 votes for Fisk in November, Prohibition will be made the issue in spite of all opposition.

—The letter of Bro. W. F. Davis, on another page, was accompanied by a grateful acknowledgment of $10 from Bro. M. L. Worcester of Kingston, Ill. We should be glad to acknowledge other gifts to aid Bro. Davis. His letter on the late action of the Boston Common Council, elsewhere, will be read with grave interest and serious foreboding.

—A great Prohibition ratification meeting will be held in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on Friday evening, and will be honored by the presence of General Fisk and Mr. Black, the Prohibition candidates. Sam. Small, in behalf of the National Committee, will tender the nominations made at Indianapolis, which will be formally accepted.

—The Undergraduate of Middlebury, Vt., published by the students of Middlebury College, publishes this month a fine portrait of Pres. J. Blanchard, who was the founder of the magazine, and one of its early editors and contributors. A sketch of his life work accompanies the portrait and mentions particularly his extensive labors against the lodge.

—Bro. J. L. Wimby, scribe of the Louisiana Congregational Association, calls our attention to the well-known fact that that organization deserves a place in our roll of the Church against the Lodge. It will gladly be placed there, and in our next number we shall endeavor to revise that roll. There are other churches and associations which are coming to this same honorable position. Bro. Knox Anderson writes of the church to which he belongs in Iowa, and we hope others may be heard from.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Dr. J. R. Johnston, of the editorial staff of the United Presbyterian, Pittsburgh, has just celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as pastor of the U. P. church at Washington, Pa.

—Secretary Stoddard reached Chicago from Washington direct, Saturday morning. He was almost disguised by the dust raised by the big Republican procession pushing on toward Chicago through Ohio and Indiana. He reports all going on well in Washington.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, whose letters in the present number will be read with deepest interest, is now in Waukesha, Wisconsin. He writes that the ill-health of Mrs. Gault will probably prevent his attending the N. C. A. annual meeting, of which he is vice-president.

—A. W. Parry, of Evansville Seminary, says the Free Methodist, heartily endorses the objects of the "American Anti-Secrecy League," and expects to obtain the signatures of as many as he can to the enrollment list, as he travels from place to place during the coming summer.

—Prof. J. C. McCartney, one of President George's associates in Geneva College, lately spoke in the Monday meeting of the San Francisco Congregational ministers on the work of the National Reform Association. He received a vote of thanks for his able presentation of the reform.

—General John C. Fremont, of California, the first nominee of the Republican party in 1856, will attend the convention here this week as the guest of Nebraska. He will be presented to the Chicago convention by the Hon. Charles J. Greene, delegate from Nebraska to the convention. General Fremont is 75, white of hair and beard, keen-eyed, hearty and erect.

—Rev. C. C. Foote, who has been visiting his daughter, Mrs. Milton of Elgin, Ill., called on the Cynosure last Thursday with Bro. Milton. Father Foote is in good health, and is now in Iowa visiting a soldier son, who lost an arm in the war, and because of decay of the bone will probably have to undergo another amputation. This misfortune may deprive us of the presence of Bro. Foote at the annual meeting.

—The Prohibition candidate for Vice-President, Rev. John A. Brooks, the Christian Standard says: "Of Bro. Brooks, the candidate for Vice-President, we take the liberty to say, without venturing to interfere in party politics, that he has long been a prominent preacher among the Disciples, and of late years an ardent worker in the Prohibition ranks. He is an earnest man, of excellent reputation, a lively and forcible speaker, and well posted in political as well as religious affairs. He is worthy of the position assigned to him, and will doubtless do effective work in the campaign."

—Bro. M. N. Butler, of Missouri, writes under the pressure of a heavy grief. On the 10th inst. he helped to lay in the grave the remains of a beloved sister, by whose bedside he had been watching night and day for three weeks. She was taken sick in Chicago, and rallied after ten weeks severe illness, and was removed to her Missouri home; but her disease was fatal, and after lingering for eleven weeks more she died. She was a devoted Christian, and her zeal for Christ led her to espouse his cause, no matter what the reproach or trial. She canvassed Avalon during the coldest winter weather for names to a remonstrance to a corner-stone laying by the lodge. This is the first death in a family of nine grown children, and the whole circle of relatives feel the loss deeply. May the Holy Comforter indeed be with them in this trial.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

TO THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Your Board met upon the day of its election, June 16, 1887, and organized; and, including that meeting, has had thirteen sessions during the year, at two of which there was no quorum. Those elected as members of the Board have so continued through the year, except Dr. J. E. Roy, who resigned March 10, on account of ill health, caused by injuries sustained years ago. T. B. Arnold was elected to fill the vacancy.

The care of the Association's property has generally been in the hands of its trusted officers, Secretary Stoddard and Treasurer Phillips, and the regular committees, so that but few questions relating to it have occupied the time of the Board. Two exceptions may be mentioned:

First, it was decided best to accept $1,000 in settlement of the residuary legacy of Moses Pettengill. (See Minutes of Aug. 10.)

Second, following the directions of the Association made at your last annual meeting, the Board has, through a committee, Rev. L. N. Stratton, Secretary J. P. Stoddard and Rev. Alex. Thomson, made a careful review of the records pertaining to the purchase, and design of the purchase of the Washington Building. The report of the committee sent to Washington to confer with Rev. E. D. Bailey (see Minutes Aug. 10) on the matter, and the report of the three gentlemen above named, agreed substantially that the building was not being used in accordance with the original design of purchase, and that a change in management was expedient. (See final report p. 57 of Minutes.) The subsequent action of the Board in sending Secretary Stoddard to Washington is well known. It is hoped that it may be with the Association as it was with the Board, who, though at first differing in opinion upon the general subject, were, through their investigation, brought to a unanimity of view in regard to the purpose for which the Washington Building was bought, also in regard to its ownership and control. (See Minutes p. 56.)

The direct work of the Association through publications has met with some attention by the Board. That the circulation of the Cynosure might be increased and field agents encouraged, the offer of new yearly subscribers was raised from $25.00 per month to $50.00 per month. (See Minutes p. 35.) And that the quality of matter printed in the paper might be kept to a high standard, the editors and publisher have been appointed "a general committee on expenditure of cash for contributions to the Cynosure." (See Minutes p. 44)

No better field for anti-secret missionary effort seems at present open than work among the colored brethren. The Cynosure should go weekly the year round to every colored preacher in the South. During the year four tracts and one pamphlet, "Stories of the Gods," have been added to the list of publications, and also a circular for general distribution, at our own and other conventions, briefly setting forth the organization and work of the Association. (See Minutes p. 36.)

In order that misunderstandings may not rise between field agents and the Board, a written contract is now required. (See Minutes p. 51.) Also rules setting forth the duties of agents while in the field have been adopted. (See Minutes p. 58.)

A movement to secure district headquarters in Boston, for the work of the Association, over which the Board contemplated placing Miss E. E. Flagg, was providentially retarded by a serious accident which befell that lady.

How to reach the youth of our land with the truth concerning secret societies, especially the students, has been a problem, interesting to the Board, but not as yet satisfactorily solved. The graduating classes of Howard and Wayland Theological Seminaries were presented with copies of "Finney on Masonry." (See Minutes p. 54) A plan has been proposed by which prize essays, on the subject of secret societies as related to the temperance reform, and secret societies as related to the labor question, and kindred topics, might be called out from students in the various institution of learning. (See Minutes p. 27 and p. 55.)

Efforts to bring our cause before the various assemblies, religious and political, have not met with marked success, and yet your Board is persuaded that such efforts should be continued with all possible wisdom and perseverance. The argument for temperance reform is already won. Ours is "the next great cause which our nation must take up," and it is our duty to hasten the day when condemnation of the secret empire shall constitute one plank in every reform platform.

Our literature was distributed at Lake Bluff. Mr. Stoddard's experience there is well known to readers of the Cynosure. (See Minutes p. 36.) Dr. French of Cincinnati, whom the Board sent to Washington in December last, did not secure a hearing before the American branch of the Evangelical Alliance. (See Minutes p. 46.)

So far as political conventions are concerned it is hoped that the Anti-Secrecy League, recently organized by your Board as a department of N. C. A. work, with W. I. Phillips as superintendent, may be efficient in keeping before the citizens of the Republic the antagonism which exists between American principles and the principles of secretism. The League is non-partisan. There is one bond by which it proposes to bind good men of all parties into a "bundle of life," i. e., opposition to the election to public office any man who owns allegiance to the secret lodge power. (See Minutes, May 5)

As yours is a Christian work, its field is the world. Your Board instructed the General Secretary to carry out your resolutions passed at the last annual meeting, authorized Treasurer Phillips to open an account for a fund for work in foreign lands (see Minutes p. 34), and further requested Secretary Stoddard to write to Cynosure correspondents in Africa, India, Australia and the West Indies, asking them to state plans to this Board by which the N. C. A. might aid them in carrying on anti-secret work in their countries.

—Northwestern College at Naperville, Ill., graduated nineteen young men and women at its twenty-third anniversary last week. More than usual interest was manifested in the exercises of the day, owing to the fact that President H. H. Rassweiler severed his connection with the school with the close of the year. This is the only collegiate institution of the churches of the Evangelical Association.

THE HOME.

THE BRAVEST BATTLE.

The bravest battle that ever was fought!
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not;
'Twas fought by the mothers of men!

Nay, not with cannon or battle shot,
With sword or nobler pen—
Nay, not with eloquent word or thought
From mouths of wonderful men;

But deep in a walled-up woman's heart—
Of woman that would not yield,
But bravely, silently, bore her part—
Lo! there is that battle-field!

No marshaling troop, no bivouac song,
No banner to gleam and wave!
But, oh! these battles, they last so long—
From babyhood to the grave!

LUTHER ON PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Church and school go together. The Jewish synagogue was a school. Every Christian church is a school of piety and virtue for old and young. In mediæval times, the church was the civilizer and instructor among the barbarians, founded the convents and cathedral schools, and erected the great universities of Paris, Padua, Oxford, St. Andrews, Vienna, Heidelberg, Basel, Wittenberg, etc.

But education in the Middle Ages was aristocratic, and did not reach beyond the clergy and a few laymen of the higher classes. The common people were ignorant and supersititious, and could not read or write. Even noblemen signed their names with a cross. Books were very rare and dear.

The invention of the printing press opened a path for popular education. The reformation, at the start, utilized the press on a large scale, and gave a powerful impulse to the common schools. The genius of Protestantism favors the general diffusion of knowledge. It elevates the laity, emancipates private judgment, and stimulates the sense of personal responsibility and opportunity. Every human being should be trained to a position of Christian freedom and self-government.

The first great impulse to the movement of popular education in close connection with religion must be traced to the German and Swiss reformation. Luther discussed this subject first in an address to the nobles of Germany (1520). Several years later (1524), he wrote a special book in which he urged the civil magistrates of all the cities of Germany to improve their schools, or to establish new ones for boys and girls; especially, since the confidence in monastic institutions had declined, and the convents were rapidly losing their inmates. He wisely recommended that a portion of the property of churches and convents might be appropriated to this purpose, instead of being wasted on secular objects, or on avaricious noblemen and princes.

He makes great account of the study of languages, and skillfully refutes the objections.

A few extracts from this very useful little book will give the best understanding of the great man's ideas on a most important subject:

"Grace and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.... Although I am now excommunicated for three years, and should keep silent if I feared men more than God,.... I will speak as long as I live, until the righteousness of Christ shall break forth in its glory.... I beg you all, my dear lords and friends, for God's sake, to take care of the poor youth, and thereby to help us all. So much money is spent year after year for arms, roads, dams and innumerable similar objects, why should not as much be spent for the education of the poor youth?.... The Word of God is now heard in Germany more than ever before. But if we do not show our gratitude for it, we run the risk of sinking back into a worse darkness.

"Dear Germans, buy while the market is at the door. Gather while the sun shines and the weather is good. Use God's Word and grace while it is at hand. For you must know that God's grace is a traveling shower, which does not return where once it has been. It was once with the Jews, but gone is gone; now they have nothing. Paul brought it into Greece, but gone is gone; they have now the Turk. Rome and Italy have also had it, but gone is gone; they have now the Pope. And ye Germans must not think that you will have it forever; for ingratitude and contempt will not let it abide. Therefore, seize and hold fast whoever can.

"It is a sin and shame that we should need to be admonished to educate our children, when nature itself, and even the example of the heathen, urges us to do so.... You say, the parents should look to that, it is none of the business of counsellors and magistrates. But how, if the parents neglect it? Most of the parents are incapable; having themselves learned nothing, they cannot teach their children. Others have not the time. And what shall become of the orphans? The glory of a town consists not in treasures, strong walls and fine houses, but in fine, educated, well-trained citizens. The city of old Rome trained her sons in Latin and Greek and all the fine arts....

"We admit, you say, there should and must be schools, but what is the use of teaching Latin, Greek and Hebrew, and other liberal arts? Could we not teach, in German, the Bible and God's Word, which are sufficient for salvation? Answer: Yes, I well know, alas! that we Germans must ever be and abide brutes and wild beasts, as the surrounding nations call us, and as we well deserve to be called. But I wonder why you never say, of what use are silks, wines, spices and other foreign articles, seeing we have wine, corn, wool, flax, wood and stones in German lands, not only an abundance for sustenance, but also a choice and selection for elegance and ornament? The arts and languages, which do us no harm, nay, which are a greater ornament, benefit, honor and advantage, both for understanding Holy Writ, and for managing civil affairs, we are disposed to despise; and foreign wares, which are neither necessary nor useful to us, and which, moreover, peel us to the very bone, these we are not willing to forego. Are we not deserving to be called German fools and beasts?....

"Much as we love the Gospel, let us hold fast to the languages. God gave us the Scriptures in two languages, the Old Testament in Hebrew, the New Testament in Greek. Therefore, we should honor them above all other languages.... The languages are the sheath in which this sword of the Spirit is hid. They are the casket in which this treasure is kept. They are the vessels in which this drink is contained. They are the storehouse in which this food is laid by; and, as the Gospel itself shows, they are the baskets in which these loaves and fishes are preserved. Yea, if we should so err as to let the languages go (which God forbid!), we shall not only lose the Gospel, but it will come to pass at length, that we shall not be able to speak or write correctly either Latin or German....

"Herewith I commend you all to the grace of God. May he soften and kindle your hearts so that they shall earnestly take the part of these poor, pitiable, forsaken youth, and, through divine aid, counsel and help them to a happy and Christian ordering of the German land as to body and soul with all fullness and overflow, to the praise and honor of God the Father, through Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Amen."
—Philip Schaff, in S. S. World.

Robert Burdette, the wit, hits off the essays and orations of our school and college commencements in this humorous vein: "The country, and incidentally the universe, is safe for another year. We have been in great peril, but our danger has been pointed out, and not only so, but the way to safety has at the same time been so clearly indicated that the wayfaring man, though a mugwump, need not err therein. But you have saved us, my boy; you and your fellows have snatched us from this living grave, whose hungry breakers dashed their blinding spray and wreathed their angry flames in lurid tongues about our feet. You, it is, who in this month of leafy June have told us of The Perils of the Republic, The Labor Problem, The Duty of the Hour, The Decay of Patriotism, Work and Wages, The Deterioration of Manhood, The Labor Question, The Decline of Statesmanship, etc. The perils that beset our path have been shown us, but you have also guided us into paths of safety and your sisters have nobly rushed to the rescue with assurances that night brings out the stars, and, moreover, that man is the arbiter of his own destiny, woman's sphere, the influence of woman, woman's duty, woman, the hope of the world and spring. Heaven bless you, my children, you have saved us. Heaven bless you! Come again next commencement."

The Grand Jury of Philadelphia lately used the following language in a report: "In the performance of our duty we have been deeply impressed with the fact that four-fifths, if not nine-tenths, of the 6,000 paupers and criminals which fill our public institutions are in their present sad and deplorable condition through the influence of intoxicating liquors."

The Supreme Court of Rhode Island has decided that the prohibitory law of that State does not apply to liquors kept for one's own use.

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS.

Benjamin Franklin, as a young man, lived on bread and water that he might buy books.

Horace Greeley laid down on a rude floor and studied by the light of blazing pine-knots.

So did Abraham Lincoln, who walked nine miles a day to school, also.

A New England Judge gave his son a thousand dollars, telling him to go through college with it. He returned at the end of one year without a dollar, but with a number of bad habits. At the close of vacation the father said, "Well, William, are you going to college this year?"

"Have no money, father."

"But I gave you a thousand dollars to graduate on."

"It's all gone, father."

"Very well, my son; it was all I had to give you. You can't stay here. You must now pay your own way in the world."

A new light broke in upon the vision of the astonished young man. He took in the situation, determined to make the best of it, taught school, re-entered college, graduated at the head of his class, studied law, became governor of the State of New York, entered the Cabinet of the President of the United States, and made a record for himself which has made his name famous, being none other than that of William H. Seward.

A homely looking boy, who entered Dickinson College some forty years ago, had such a struggle with poverty that for a long time he lived on poorer fare than many slaves of that day, buying a few pounds of corn-meal each Monday, which he mixed with water and baked into cakes, and made these last him through the week.

He subsequently became one of the most prominent ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church, and, had it not been for his untimely death, would undoubtedly now be occupying the highest position his church has to bestow.

A colored youth, who was one of the early students of the Centenary Biblical Institute, finding he could not afford the seventy cents a week it required for boarding in the club at that time, made an arrangement with a baker to take several loaves of stale bread at a greatly reduced rate, and with a little milk added to this hard fare, he worked his way through successfully.

He is now principal of the Delaware Conference Academy, one of the branch schools of the Institute.

It requires hard study and a never give-up spirit to get up the hill of learning.

Every time we get on a don't-care spirit we are slipping backwards.

If we see no way to get books, or to get all the time we think we ought to have, let us make a way.

Be independent!

This is the road to success.

The boy that depends upon begging from friends will never reach success.—Indian Helper.

THE SINGLE MUSIC LESSON.

He who can read one book can read many books. He who is master of one tune can soon sing many tunes. But few have the patience to drill upon elements till they learn the secrets of perfection. In Fetis's "History of Music" the following story is related:

Porpora, one of the most illustrious masters of music in Italy, conceived a friendship for a young pupil, and asked him if he had courage to persevere with constancy in the course he should mark out for him, however wearisome it should seem. When the pupil answered in the affirmative, Porpora wrote upon a single page of ruled paper the diatonic and chromatic scales, ascending and descending, the intervals of the third, fourth, and fifth, etc., in order to teach him to take them with freedom, and to sustain the sounds, together with the trills, groups, appogiaturus, and passages of vocalization of different kinds. This page occupied both the master and scholar during an entire year; and the year following was also devoted to it. When the third year commenced, nothing was said of changing the lesson, and the pupil began to murmur; but the master reminded him of his promise. The fourth year slipped away, the fifth followed, and always the same eternal page. The sixth found them at the same task; but the master added to it some lessons of articulation, pronunciation, and, lastly, of declamation. At the end of this year, the pupil, who supposed himself still in the elements, was much surprised, when one day his master said to him: "Go, my son, you have nothing more to learn —you are the first singer of Italy, and of the world!" He spoke the truth, for this singer was Caffarelli.

BE CAREFUL.

Be careful what you sow, boys!
For seed will surely grow, boys!
The dew will fall,
The rain will splash,
The clouds will darken,
And the sunshine flash;
And the boy who sows good seed to-day
Shall reap the crop to-morrow.

Be careful what you sow, girls!
For every seed will grow, girls!
Though it may fall
Where you cannot know,
Yet in summer and shade
It will surely grow;
And the girl who sows good seed to-day
Shall reap the crop to-morrow.

Be careful what you sow, boys!
For the seeds will surely grow, boys!
If you plant bad seed
By the wayside high
You must reap the harvest
By and by;
And the boy who sows will oats to-day
Must reap wild oats to-morrow.

Be careful what you sow, girls!
For all the bad will grow, girls!
And the girl who now
With a careless hand,
Is scattering thistles
Over the land,
Must know whatever she sows to day
She must reap the same to-morrow.

Then let us sow good seeds now,
And not the briars and weeds now;
That when the harvest
For us shall come,
We may have good sheaves
To carry home.
For the seed we sow in our lives to-day
Shall grow and bear fruit to-morrow.

ARAB CHILDREN AND THEIR GAMES.

If the little Arabs are heathen, they are at least picturesque heathen. In their colored clothing, with their dusky skins, their black eyes, and their lithe, active bodies, they are very picturesque. But, it must be confessed, they appear best at a distance; for soap is not so fashionable among them as might justly be expected from the people of a country which manufactures the most cleansing soap in the world. In watching the children at play, one soon notices that the girls do not always have a good time. Arab boys are not trained to be gentlemanly and courteous to their sisters, although they treat their elders with a delightful deference and respect. Little girls in the East are never welcome. When a baby is born, if it be a girl, "the threshold mourns forty days." So, in taking a glimpse at the amusements of the Arab children, we must be prepared to find that they are chiefly boys' games, in which the girls seldom participate.

A little boy in America asked a person who had lived in Syria if the boys there ever played base-ball; and on learning that they did not, he said, "Well, they can't have much fun there." It is very natural for the children of any country to imagine that the children in other countries amuse themselves in the same ways. And the number of games that are in reality universal among children in all countries is really remarkable. For example, the Arab children often play blind-man's-buff (they call it ghummaida) and biz zowaia, or puss-in-the-corner, and a game like "button, button, who has the button?" (which they play with a pebble), and owal howah, or leap-frog, and gilleh, or marbles. But there are other games of which you probably never have heard—such as kurd murboot, shooha, joora, taia-ya-taia, khatim, and the greatest and most exciting of all their games—the national game, it might perhaps be called—jereed.

The general plan of the game is as follows:

Sides are chosen by the leaders, and lines marked out, about a spear's-throw apart. This distance varies with the size and strength of the players, thirty yards being a fair average. Each player has a blunt wooden spear, about the shape of a billiard cue, only not so small in proportion at the smaller end. It is shaped in such a way that when balanced on the finger and then grasped, it will not be held at the middle, but at a point a little nearer the larger end. A jereed player must possess skill in two ways: He must be able to hurl the spear far and true, and also to catch a spear, when thrown at him, as it goes by. This sounds more difficult than it really is. The player dodges as the spear approaches, so that it will shoot past his side,—the right side, if possible—and then, as it passes him, he sweeps it in with his hand and brings it down to the side, reversing it so as to throw it back again, all in a moment.

The object of the game is for one side to drive the other side back and to occupy its line. But it is not so rough a game as this purpose would seem to imply. Not half so many accidents occur as in base-ball, and it is not nearly so rough as foot-ball, since the object of the game can be attained very easily and quickly by throwing the spear over the head of your opponent; for then he has to run back and pick up his spear,—and that not only weakens the enemies' line, but gives them, for the time, one less spear-thrower.—St. Nicholas.

TEMPERANCE.

AN OLD SALOON BATTLE IN CHICAGO.

Attempts to regulate the saloons in Chicago have not always met simply with petitions and protests. Thirty years ago the big-paunched, flabby-faced, old gentleman whose sole ambition seems to be to ride a capering cask on a wooden sign in front of a beer saloon, would not have been satisfied with the dismissal from office of a too-energetic advocate of decency. The "beer riots," or "Dutch riots," as many called them, occurred thirty-three years ago. Though the population of Chicago was largely of foreign birth, Dr. Levi D. Boone, a Know-nothing and a pronounced temperance man, had been elected mayor. The legislature, at its last session, had passed a law that amounted to practical prohibition. Mayor Boone proposed to prepare the saloon interests for the operation of the law by raising the license fee from $50 to $300. He had a board of aldermen that agreed with him. The ordinance was passed. Mayor Boone also undertook to close the saloons on Sunday in accordance with the new law, and in one day arrested 200 violators of the statute provisions.

The saloon-keepers and their sympathizers declared that the imprisoned men should not be tried for their offense. The city attorney and the defendants' lawyers agreed to try a test case April 21, 1855. The trial was to take place before Henry L. Rucker, a police magistrate who had a room in the old court-house, which stood in the center of the block now occupied by the city and county buildings. The trial was set for 10 o'clock in the morning. Long before that hour a mob gathered around the building. When the case was called, the crowd moved on the court-room. With fife and drum it attempted to make impossible a hearing. Mayor Boone had his entire police force on hand, and the mob was easily dispersed. Defeat enraged the mob. The leaders began parading the streets. The fife and drum led the column. The idle, the curious, and the vicious joined it. The procession passed through the South Side and across to the West Division. All the saloons were visited, and their keepers and friends turned out. The lowest resorts were on the North Side. Around the old Galena depot—now the Northwestern—were breeding places of thieves and burglars. Rough as it is now, it is a saints' rest compared with its character in that day. On "the sands" blossomed a bank of exotics in crime. "The sands" was the lake shore at the foot of Indiana Street. In these two localities a riff-raff of criminals recruited the mob. In the gathering crowd, however, were many small tradesmen who were led to leave their shops by the cry of "personal liberty." The North Side then, as now, was the residence of the German people, and the bulk of the crowd was of that nationality. For this reason the disturbance was called by many "the Dutch riots." By 3 o'clock a great mob had collected. It marched down Clark Street headed for the court-house. When half the crowd had crossed the river, Mayor Boone ordered the old wooden bridge swung. The crowd threatened to kill the bridge-tender, but he refused to swing back the bridge until he had an order from the Mayor. Presently that order came. The crowd with its fife and drums and noisy lungs pushed on to the court-house and surrounded it.

In the meantime Mayor Boone had sworn in 150 special police and had called on law-abiding citizens to resist the mob. When the crowd faced the court-house it found an array of officers and citizens before it. The mob was armed with shot-guns, rifles, pistols, swords, iron bars, pitch-forks, wagon spokes, and all sorts of clubs. At the Sherman House corner the mob met its first resistance. "Pick out the stars." "Shoot the police," yelled its leaders. A rattling fire from the crowd was the answer. The police replied in kind. A hand-to-hand encounter ensued. The battle was fierce but brief. In half an hour the mob had fled and fifty of its leaders were in the hands of the police. Though Randolph and Clark Streets were crowded and the buildings packed with people only one person was known to have been killed. He had a moment before discharged from a musket a load of shot and slugs, which tore the left arm of Policeman George W. Hunt to pieces. A number of mysterious funerals took place on the North Side a few days later, but none of them was directly traced to the battle for beer. The health department was not so strict about burial permits then as now.

After the battle was over a cannon was stationed at the Sherman House and old Board of Trade corners, commanding the four sides of the square, but no further demonstrations were made. Policeman Hunt's left arm was amputated at the shoulder. On his recovery he was detailed for duty at the comptroller's office, where he still remains.

No one was convicted of the crime of rioting. The trial was postponed to await the result of Mr. Hunt's injuries, and when the cases were finally called the prisoners had so bleached out while in jail that they could not be identified. Mayor Boone enforced the law and ordinances, but the liquor element made the riots a political issue at the next city election, and the Mayor's party was beaten.—Daily News.

VANDERBILT AND HIS FATHER.

The son was then thirty-two years old, and himself a father. They were on board the steam yacht "Northern Star," on their way to St. Petersburg. William, who was an habitual smoker, was puffing his favorite cigar. "Bill," said the Commodore, "I wish you'd give up that smoking habit of yours; I'll give you ten thousand dollars if you will."

"You needn't give me anything," was the son's answer, as he flung the cigar overboard. Your wish is sufficient." He never smoked afterward.

Would that more of our young men would follow his example!—Sel.

Dr. Grosvenor, a wealthy citizen of Providence, R. I., was recently arrested for letting buildings for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

The Chamber of Representatives, Belgium, has agreed to the convention for preventing the liquor traffic with fishermen in the North Sea.

The prohibitory law is vigorously enforced in Providence, R. I., and the daily arrests in a population of 125,000 have been brought down to seven.

The court in Huntingdon county, Pa., has refused every application for license to sell intoxicating liquors. Several brewers and distillers are included in the refusal.

Many of the saloons in Pittsburgh, Pa., closed under the prohibitory provisions of the high-license law, have reopened under the government license of $25 for quantities.

Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue Henderson reports an increase of 2,122,424 barrels of malt liquor produced during the year ending March 31, 1888, over the previous year.

The executive committee of the Ohio W. C. T. U. has appointed June 19 as a day of thanksgiving for the passage of the bill providing for scientific temperance instruction in public schools.

The Grand Jury of New York recently made a long presentment to the Court. They comment unfavorably on the enforcement of the excise laws, and say that nearly all the cases of homicide passed on by them were committed in drinking saloons, or committed when the actors were under the influence of strong drink.

The liquor men are trying the boycott in Chicago. A letter was sent by them to firms that signed the petition against licensing saloons within two hundred feet of a church or school-house, threatening them with withdrawal of trade unless they "retracted this heresy." Sprague, Warner & Co., one of the leading wholesale grocers, received such a letter, and their grand response was to double their subscription to the W. C. T. U., making it fifty dollars instead of twenty-five, a year. They reasoned logically that if the liquor power has become so audacious, the brave women fighting against it should be well furnished with the sinews of war. Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co., leading hardware dealers, also received a threatening letter from the liquor league, and responded to it in a manly, courageous way. If all business men would thus meet the arrogance of the liquor power, it would soon cease to dominate the country as it does.—Union Signal.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The calling of the elders. vs. 1, 2. Whatever we may think of the doctrine of election it has always been true that God elects or chooses certain ones to be in a peculiar sense channels of his grace. Those whom he thus honors may be engaged in manual labor like Paul, may be unlearned fishermen like the apostles, for God is no repecter of persons. But one thing is absolutely necessary—they must be fitted for his use. To be emptied of self is the prime requisite. Worldliness and selfishness will so narrow and contract a soul that it cannot receive any revelation from God. This same principle runs through other things. Nature herself has written on the rocks below and in the stars above, "A man can not serve two masters." To whom does she unlock her secret treasure houses of knowledge and reveal the beauty and harmony of her hidden laws? Agassiz once said, when urged to engage in a certain speculation, "I have no time for making money." Here is the secret: such a complete consecration of himself to science that the prizes of wealth were of as small account in his eyes as the soap bubbles that amuse a child. But, aside from this individual lesson, there is one of national application. These elders of Israel were the rulers. They represented God to the people, which is the true office of all just and righteous government. But if he were now to make a special revelation of his will to the American people, how many of our lawmakers at Washington would he be likely to choose to receive it? We are told that he is of purer eyes than to behold evil; that only he who has clean hands and a pure heart and who hath not sworn deceitfully, shall ascend into his holy hill. No admittance for the politician who will advocate indifferently high license or low license to capture the saloon vote, or who joins the secret lodge as a stepping stone to office. No admittance for the man of weak principles or stained private record, though our nation may have so far departed from "the ways of the fathers" as to raise him to the presidential seat. God-fearing rulers are the true guardians of national prosperity—the only real earnest of its continuance.

2. The covenant with the people. vs. 3-12. That the Jews were all the time breaking the compact between them and Jehovah only shows in stronger relief the faithfulness of their covenant-keeping God. Our nation has been peculiarly favored. The poor of other countries look to America as their star of promise leading to a brighter day than is possible under the tyranny of old world feudal traditions and caste lines. God has made a covenant with her no less than with his ancient people. He has not written it on tables of stone, nor has he spoken it in the thunders and lightnings of Sinai; but he wrote it on the hearts and in the lives of the forefathers and foremothers whose sacrifices and sufferings have made us what we are. They were the sponsors for our living generations, then unborn. When they crossed the seas to escape ecclesiastical tyranny they answered for every son and daughter of theirs to the remotest bounds of time, "All the words which the Lord hath said unto us will we do." We cannot, we dare not, throw it off though Irish Catholicism and German infidelity, though the beer garden and the saloon clamor to have us. When we do this, deliberately, willfully, persistently, there will yawn for America the same gulf which swallowed up the old world empires, with their drunkenness, their licentiousness, their pride, their fullness of bread, their worship at shrines of secret wickedness. In verses 8 to 11 we have typified the communion of saints with Christ here below, and that higher communion with him above. Asceticism is not religion. The triumph of Gospel principles will not mean less of earthly comfort but more. It will mean the supplanting of beer with bread; it will mean in place of standing armies the great army of labor making the waste lands teem with abundance. It will mean the true Communism of Christianity.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE LATE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

The Covenanter Synod adjourned last week, after a busy session of six days. The various departments of church work were presented with unusual encouragement. Our Synod never took as strong a position of dissent from incorporation with United States government. Some of the brethren had been disposed to relax a little in applying the discipline to members voting under the Constitution. An action of Synod some years ago was thought to have compromised the position of the church on this question, and Bro. J. C. K. Milligan of New York, to bring the matter to a focus, had been suggesting the idea of abandoning our non-voting position. His vigorous, ringing articles in the Banner, of which he is editor, produced quite a sensation throughout the church, and the discussions along this line at Synod were able and spirited, and were crystalized in the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we solemnly reaffirm our conviction that the Constitution of the United States is an agreement or compact to administer the government without reference to Christ or the Christian religion; and, that incorporation with the government on the basis of this Constitution is, therefore, an act of disloyalty to Christ. With this conviction in our hearts, we cannot do otherwise than maintain to the end the discipline we have maintained in the past, and we believe that the highest interests of our country and of the kingdom of Christ are involved in our fidelity at this point."

Our Synod represented 116 ministers, 506 elders, 121 congregations, 10,970 members. The contributions of the church for all purposes were $205,507, or an average of $18.68 per member.

The retiring moderator, Prof. D. B. Willson, opened Synod with a rousing sermon, showing among other things the infidelity of the national Constitution. Rev. J. W. Sproull, our choice for moderator, was fortunate, for he held us to the line in a pleasant and agreeable manner. Of all the city pastors he has the best reputation as a W. C. T. U. worker.

Rev. R. C. Wylie gave our Synod an interesting account of the National Prohibition Convention at Indianapolis, where he had spent several days. He deplored the fact that there was a letting down of the platform on the point of recognizing the Higher Law. In speaking of the influence of small tracts or leaflets, he referred to a leaflet that was widely circulated at the convention showing that Gen. Smith was a Freemason, and this tract he believed had the effect to prevent Green Clay Smith's nomination on the Prohibition ticket.

I had written to the President of the Allegheny Co. W. C. T. U., Mrs. H. C. Campbell, to allow me the privilege of giving a few lectures under the auspices of their Unions as I expected to be in the city two weeks. When I reached the city, I found these devoted women had arranged more lectures for me than I could possibly give. During these two weeks I gave six sermons, eight lectures, and addressed two W. C. T. U. conventions, besides attending the session of Synod and the Geneva College Commencement. The National Reform contributions given me at these meetings amounted to $84 85. Allegheny county is a grand field for reform work.

M. A. GAULT.

—The National organization of the Colored Young Men's Christian Association was completed at Louisville, Ky., Tuesday, Charles L. Morris, of that city, being chosen president.

—The Rev. Wilbur C. Crafts, of New York, addressed the ministers of the Congregational church at the Grand Pacific upon the observance of the Sabbath. He advocated the closing of stores and factories on Sunday, and the cessation of the Sunday handling of mail. Resolutions were passed asking Congress to prevent by law Sunday trains and mail-handling.

—The tenth annual camp meeting of the Iowa Holiness Association was opened last week at Des Moines. The organ of the association is the Highway, of Nevada, Iowa, edited by the Rev. Isaiah Reid. An almanac, a series of leaflets and large numbers of tracts, all devoted to the exposition and advancement of the dogma and experience of personal holiness, are printed also, and a number of evangelists are employed who hold meetings in halls and churches in the winter and in tents in the summer. The meeting will continue until the 24th.

—The anniversary of the American Home Missionary Society was held in Saratoga, N. Y., June 5th to 7th. Julius Seelye, President of Amherst College, presided. The income of the Society has exceeded that of any previous year by $24,000, and they closed the year with $39,000 in the treasury, $30,000 of which had to be placed to the credit of the Exigency fund for relief of the men during the summer months.

—Two million of the Scandinavian race are now in America. Chicago is the fifth Scandinavian city in the world and Minneapolis the sixth. There are 212 Swedish mission churches with 305 preaching stations, and in every essential respect they are congregational. Thirty Scandinavian students in Carleton College, and forty theological students in Chicago Seminary are preparing for work in this field. The Scandinavian Mormon population of Utah is now estimated at forty thousand. Mr. Montgomery, superintendent of the Scandinavian work, appeared before Congress and in the name of this society and the Congregational churches of America, protested against the admission of Utah under Mormon rule to become a State. In Northern Michigan twelve new towns need churches.

—The evangelist C. H. Yatman is holding a series of union young people's meetings in Washington, D. C., by invitation of the superintendents of the various Sunday-schools. In Columbia, S. C., where he held meetings the past month, the students of the Columbia College and South Carolina University were reached by the score. Nearly every student in the female college was converted. During July and August he conducts his large daily young people's meeting and Christian workers' training class.

—At the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America in Catskill, New York, the Committee on the State Religion reported 34 classes, 546 churches, 47,518 families, and a total membership of 86,932. There was contributed for benevolent purposes $284,902, an increase of $52,700 over last year, and for congregational purposes $969,847, an increase of $56,100.

—The committee appointed by Bishop Potter to investigate charges against Mgr. Bouland by the Roman Catholic press, when he renounced Romanism, has reported the charges without any foundation. He was transferred from diocese to diocese with clean letters, and was in good standing as a Romish priest.

—There are plenty of young men in the various theological seminaries ready and willing to go as missionaries. The want is of money to send them.

—Recent statistics show a total of about five hundred church-members within the walls of Peking, connected with the five Protestant missions in that city.

—Two Bohemian Congregational churches have been formed recently, one in Cleveland and one in Chicago.

—Mr. Robert Hume, missionary in Ahmednagar, notes an "unhappy spread of intemperance" in India.

—A United Presbyterian church of twenty-nine members was organized last month in San Diego, Cal.

—The United Presbyterian General Assembly at its recent session appropriated to the several Boards for the coming year $279 600 as follows: Foreign Missions, $110,600; Home Missions, $72,000; Freedmen's Missions, $40,000; Church Extension, $40,000; Education, $8,000; Ministerial Relief, $6,000; General Assembly Fund, $3,000.

—In Persia, the field of the old Nestorian mission of the American Board, more converts have been made during the last year than in any previous year of the history of the mission. During last year's revival, which was conducted wholly by native pastors, there were over five hundred inquirers. Of the seventy-nine students in the college at Oroomiah seventy are Christians.

—David Tatum, the Friends' evangelist, is on his way to Colorado for the health of his wife. He expects to continue in the work for salvation while among the mountains.

—Rev. Edward Judson, son of Dr. Adoniram Judson, proposes to erect a monument to his father in New York city. It is to be a "massive and beautiful church edifice, perfectly adapted to Christian worship and work," and situated in lower New York, "on the border-land between the rich and the poor." If his plan is carried out the seats will be perpetually free. Under the same roof he proposes to provide suitable headquarters for Baptist young men who come to New York as strangers, and also a library and reading-room. He expects to begin this during 1888, as the centennial anniversary of his father's birth occurs Aug. 9 of this year.

LODGE NOTES.

The Minnesota Grand Lodge of Good Templars began its sessions Wednesday at Minneapolis. There are 101 lodges in the State, with a nominal membership of 3,835.

A Calgary dispatch to Winnipeg, Manitoba, says that there is no doubt that W. J. McGarigle, the Chicago Masonic boodler, has been at the Canadian National Park since the beginning of May.

At Louisville, Ky., the colored Odd-fellows' twelve lodges celebrated the anniversary of the establishment of the organization in the United States. They had a parade, followed by a drill and addresses at the Colored State University grounds.

The two days' session of the Ancient Order of Hibernians at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, closed with a grand ball. Rev. George W. Pepper of Ashland, Ohio, was orator of the day. Short speeches were also made by Father O'Brien of Burlington, and Dr. Shuell, of Parnell.

There is one lodge of Knights of Pythias in this city which is largely composed of Spaniards; and nearly every man of that nationality in the city belongs to it. The ritual is translated into Spanish for them, and as they are all Catholics, it had in some respects to be changed to conform to their religious belief.

The Wisconsin Masonic Grand Lodge met at Milwaukee last week. The report submitted by the secretary showed the total membership in the State to be 13,157, distributed among 232 lodges. New lodges were established during the year at Hurley, the place made badly famous for its horrible dives of prostitution, and West Superior.

Two sets of representatives from Pennsylvania appealed for admission to the Knights of Pythias Supreme Lodge at Cincinnati Wednesday, but neither will be admitted until a committee of seven, appointed by the Supreme Chancellor and Vice Chancellor, examines and reports on the matter. Six thousand lodge men took part in the parade in the afternoon. Members of the order made frequent boasts that 30,000 would be in line.

The Rainbow, which represents the "Order of Chosen Friends," speaking of the "Supreme Councilor" of that lodge, says: "In fraternal matters he occupies a front rank, being a Mason, Sir Knight, Odd-fellow, Knight of Honor, Chosen Friend and a member of the Royal Arcanum, Legion of Honor, and other beneficial societies, in all of which he is greatly admired and has rendered his fellow members valuable service. He was selected to represent the fraternal orders before the New York State Legislature during the session of 1887, in opposition to what was known as the 'Baker Bill,' and his address was conceded to be of the most masterly and eloquent character. He has been three times elected Supreme Councilor of the Order of Chosen Friends."

SPIKE THEIR GUNS.

A few dollars expended in purchasing tracts and scattering them about through the community will perhaps do more to spike the guns of noisy secretists than anything else that could be suggested. Men have heard the lodges praised so often and so boldly, that they have come to believe that they are what they profess to be. It is high time that the war is carried into Africa itself. This is the work which the N. C. A. has in view, and would be glad to push forward in every quarter of the land. Who will help to do it?

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doeshurg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp. ..... 75 cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp. $1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

COMMON SENSE AND COMMON SLEEP.

Excitement, anxiety, and worry, which have their seat in the brain, interfere with the functions of the stomach, and in like manner anything that unduly taxes the power of or irritates the stomach, disorders the circulation and nutrition of the brain. The sleeplessness often complained of by gouty persons is due to the poisonous effect of the morbid material upon the nervous system. Excessive smoking, too much alcohol, tea or coffee often resorted to by over-worked persons, are frequent causes of sleeplessness. In all these cases the cause can be removed, while the effect may be counteracted by appropriate treatment. Nothing is more mischievous, however, than to continue the habits and to have recourse to drugs to combat the effects. A due amount of exercise tends to induce normal sleep, and such exercise need not be of a violent character. A walk of two or three miles daily is sufficient, and is, perhaps, as much as a busy man can find time for. A ride on horseback, the Palmerston cure for gout, is probably the best form of exercise for those whose minds are constantly hard at work. It has been well said that a man must come out of himself when in the saddle; he is forced to attend to his horse and notice the objects he meets. Walking may be a mere automatic process, and afford little, if any, relief to the mind, and carriage exercise may be practically valueless if the mind is not diverted from what has previously occupied it.—Fortnightly Review.

BABY'S EXERCISE.

Activity should never be stimulated in babies. As soon as they have strength to exercise it will manifest itself. The only thing to be done is not to trammel their body in any way, either by dress or by constant holding, and then give them a little "wholesome neglect" For four or five months the body should not be carried in a sitting position, as the dropping of the head to one side impedes breathing, and has caused death. A fond anxiety to see the baby take its first step has caused many deformities of limbs. Put the child upon a bed in winter, on the floor in summer, or even on the dry grass, and let it discover its own powers.

A child should never be lifted by the arms, either by one or both. Put the hands under the child's arms upon its side and you can lift it without injury. Neither should a child be pulled up by the wrists, though it may be encouraged to grasp your fingers with its hands and pull itself up. This tends to give it a good grip and may prevent future falls. The active child needs watching, but let the surveillance be silent; nervous outcries of alarm often precipitate the very evil dreaded.

Perambulators should be used with care. Children too young to hold the head erect should always be placed in them in a recumbent position, with the eyes sheltered from the direct rays of the sun. A better plan is for the nurse to carry them in arms, and the continental plan of carrying on a cushion is to be commended. The jolting, by pushing across gutters or down steps, is a cruelty. Tossing, jolting, tickling, trotting, and similar modes of quieting or stimulating to exertion are unwise. Let the child creep before it walks, and lie quiet until it manifests a desire to exercise. Let it unfold physically after God's own plan, in sunlight, pure air, and restfully.—Mary A. Allen, M. D., in Congregationalist.

LET THE BOYS HELP.

Why is it that the boys are allowed to sit around the house doing nothing, while their overworked mother is struggling against nature and fate to do about half the work waiting for her hands? Only the other day we saw three large able-bodied boys lounging about the house, not knowing what to do with themselves, while their mother, tired and pale, was trying to do all the work for a large family and company alone. Not a boy's work to help about the house? Why not? Is there anything about washing dishes that will injure him, or which he cannot do well? or about making beds, or sweeping or setting the table, or washing, or ironing, or cooking a plain meal of victuals? On the contrary, there is much to benefit him in such work, the most important of which is the idea that it isn't manly to let the "weaker vessel"(?) carry all the burdens, when it is possible for strong young hands to help. Most boys would gladly help in the house if they were asked to do so, and were taught how to do the work properly. Many a smart boy wants to help his tired mother, but doesn't know how, beyond bringing in the wood and water, and shoveling a path through the snow. That done she tells him to go and play, while she plods wearily on. Not a boy's work! It is a positive harm to a boy's moral character to allow him to think it right to be idle, while his mother is staggering under her burdens. Let the boys help, and those who cannot get help "for love or money," as they often write us, will see their troubles disappear.—Housekeeper.

There is nothing that so promptly cuts short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat or rheumatism as hot water when applied promptly and thoroughly. Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic, and hot water taken freely half an hour before bedtime is the best cathartic possible in the case of constipation, while it has a most soothing effect upon the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued a few months with proper attention to diet, will cure any curable case of dyspepsia. Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and the back of the neck.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Tell the good news to the suffering—
At last is a remedy found,
Which might have saved, had they known it,
Many who're under the ground.
Tell of the "Favorite Prescription,"
Bid hopeless women be glad;
Bear the good news to poor creatures,
Heart sick, discouraged and sad.

"Female diseases," so terrible in their effects, and so prevalent among all classes, can be cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best arguments on the nature and character of Masonic obligations of any book in print. Paper cover, 207 pages. Price, 40 cents,

FARM NOTES.

REST COWS FOR MILK DAIRYING —The cows most desirable for this industry are large-bodied animals, that give an abundant yield of fairly good milk, containing sufficient solid matter to mark a specific gravity of 1.030 on the scale of the lactometer. It will not pay in this business to rear calves, or to have dry cows feeding three months without profit. A constant succession of fresh cows must be kept up by purchase, and the failing cows must be disposed of to the butchers. It would be more profitable to give them away than to keep them to rear calves. Hence costly pure bred cows cannot be kept, unless a profit can be made of the calves sufficient to pay for the expenses of carrying the cows through their dry time. The cows most desired for this business are the half-bred Shorthorns, or grade Holstein Friesians. Many breeders of fine pure-bred Holsteins, which are large milkers, and whose milk is excellent for this purpose, devote their herds to the production of milk for sale, finding a good demand for the calves, which sell at prices that repay the cost of rearing them. Some Ayrshire breeders do the same with equal profit. But, as a rule, it is best to attend to one thing at a time in business, and the milk dairyman will find the best cows for his use to be the grade Shorthorns, Holsteins or Ayrshires. —American Agriculturist.

KILL THE ROOSTERS —For various reasons assigned, an authority advises poultry-keepers to kill their roosters. First, you are not apt to have little chicks running about late in the season; second, the old roosters are no longer needed, as next season you should get young roosters from another flock, and the old ones are just eating food for no use at all, besides being in the way of the other fowls; last, but not least by any means, your eggs packed for winter market will keep much better if no roosters are allowed to run with the hens. Clean out your old roosters then and try the experiment.

PAINTING OUT-BUILDINGS.—A rural Pennsylvanian tells his brother farmers who are about painting out-buildings that the application of a coat of crude petroleum will lessen the amount of paint required and cause the wood to last longer. A wash which he has found very satisfactory for outside work is made by slaking clean, fresh lime, mixing it with water, and adding to each peck of lime half a pound of salt and a pound of sulphate of zinc. This wash may be colored to any desirable shades. For cream-color, he adds yellow ochre; for gray, lamp black, dissolved in vinegar.

HOW TO DRAW A LOG.—Here is a bit of practical knowledge which may be utilized in both winter and summer. Some one who apparently knows from experience whereof he affirms, declares that, although at first blush it seems like taking hold of the wrong end to drag a log by the top, even a smoothly-trimmed one, a little consideration shows that the log, being in a degree conical or wedge-shaped, must go easier with the small end foremost. Any one ought to see this at once if attempting to propel a sharpened lead pencil along a sandy or dusty surface.

CURRANTS. — Thousands of farmers either buy currants or dispense with that healthiest of luxuries, currant jelly. Properly cultivated currant bushes grow so luxuriantly and produce such a mass of large leaves that it is an easy matter to prevent the currant caterpillars from doing any serious damage. The true remedy is powdered white hellebore, to be had from druggists.

On about 20,000 bushes last year we used forty pounds of hellebore. This is at the rate of about an ounce to thirty-two bushes. Every bush had a little hellebore, but if there was no signs of worms only the slightest shake of the box was given in passing. Some of the bushes where the caterpillars had commenced their work of destruction were dusted all over. This takes more time and more hellebore, but the cost is nothing as compared with the benefit. For dusting on the hellebore we use an old baking powder tin box. Punch holes in the top large enough to let the powder come through freely—say about the size of a pin's head. One of our neighbors who has one thousand bushes mixes two pounds of flour with a pound of hellebore, and he kept his bushes last year free from caterpillars with less than a pound of hellebore. It is better to dust the bushes on a still morning while the dew is on the leaves. But the point of greatest importance is to dust the bushes the first moment there are any signs of the worms. And the next thing is to keep a close watch, and if any worms have escaped or new ones hatched out, go over the bushes again, and stick to it till they are absolutely free from the pest.—Amer. Agri.

"The tetter board of life goes up,
The tetter board of life goes down."

Up and down, up and down—one day a millionaire, next day "dead broke;" one day buoyant in spirits, next day gloomy as a fog; one day in seeming perfect health, next day "laid out" with a bilious attack or your stomach "on a strike." This is the way the world wags nowadays. If you are bilious, melancholic, dizzy headed, dyspeptic, want appetite or have torpid action of liver, kidneys or bowels, take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets —purely vegetable, perfectly harmless; one a dose.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers is in one preparation, and never fails to color the beard a beautiful brown or black of a natural shade.

FOR MINISTERS

is especially adapted. They will at once understand the references to the idolatrous systems of the nations. And the idolatrous worship of the Masonic lodge is thus more clearly seen and easily understood. Will you furnish each pastor in your place with one of these pamphlets?

OF

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal thy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

OF
A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

General Sheridan was last week still on the mend. Those about the sick-room are greatly encouraged at the General's favorable symptoms. He slept nearly all Thursday afternoon, and the doctors thought there was a decided improvement.

Indian Commissioner Atkins has tendered his resignation, to take effect at the pleasure of the President, and has left Washington for his home at Paris, Tenn., to enter upon an active canvass for election to the United States Senate.

Congressman Mason of Illinois created quite a stir in the House by bringing a "Republican bandana" to the front. Congressman Spinola had a bandana fluttering from his desk in the front row. Mason observing this quietly attached a beautiful United States flag of the finest silk to a desk on the Republican side, saying that "this is a good enough bandana for Republicans." The incident created great applause in the House and galleries.

In the list of the names of the men confirmed by the Senate Thursday that of Melville W. Fuller for Chief Justice is conspicuously absent.

CHICAGO.

The chief business in Chicago this week and last is politics.

Another victim of the Haymarket riot, May 4, 1886, died Thursday. On that memorable night Officer Timothy Sullivan, of the West Lake Street Police Station, was one of the foremost policemen to advance on the Anarchist mob. Not until the close of the fusillade did he fall. His right thigh was pierced by a bullet and he sank to the ground near the corner of Randolph and Desplaines. Since his injury he has been hardly able to get about, and when blood poisoning set in he was compelled to take to his bed, and his life has been gradually sapped away.

A Woman's League of which Miss F. E. Willard has been made president has been organized for the purpose of combining the labors of all the women's societies in the city.

The National Christian Scientist Association held its annual convention last week at the First M. E. church. About three hundred delegates were present, representing every State in the Union. Mrs. M. B. G. Eddy of Boston was chosen president. She also delivered an address, in which she outlined the aims of the Christan Scientists.

COUNTRY.

The mother of General P. H. Sheridan died Tuesday afternoon in her home at Somerset, Ohio, aged 87 years and two months.

The venerable poet Walt Whitman had a relapse last Wednesday and continued to grow weak all day. His family were forced to admit that he is in a dying condition. Professor W. P. Osler, of the University of Pennsylvania, has been summoned to Whitman's bedside.

The thermometer registered 102 in the shade at Nebraska City, Neb., Wednesday, and there were several cases of sunstroke, though none were fatal.

The monument erected on the spot at Chancellorsville where Stonewall Jackson received his death wound was dedicated Thursday, speeches being made by Governor Fitzhugh Lee and the Hon. John W. Daniel.

The trustees of the Wall Street Methodist church, Jeffersonville, Ind., Wednesday sued the trustees of Walnut Ridge Cemetery for $20,000, alleging that the cemetery had been given to the church, and that the trustees, who are all members of the church, had converted the profits to their own use.

John J. Eichenlaub was convicted in Columbus, O., Wednesday, for violating the Sunday law in giving a theatrical performance. He pleaded guilty. Judge Pugh assessed a fine of $50 and thirty days in jail, the latter part of the sentence to remain suspended. In the event of further violations Eichenlaub can be placed in jail without further trial.

At Youngstown, Ohio, Monday night, Fred Workman, an anarchist, whose wife sued for divorce last week on the ground of cruelty, flavored his last glass of beer with strychnine, bade his companions farewell and drank the poison, dying Tuesday morning.

The militia of the Chickasaw Nation are assembled at Ardmore, preparing to march upon the stockmen, who, 500 strong, are resisting the payment of the tax on cattle. The cattle owners are armed with Winchesters. The government troops at Fort Reno are also preparing to take the field, and fears are expressed that this is the first outbreak of a civil war.

Fire in a tenement house at Second street and Second avenue, New York, early Wednesday morning, resulted in the death of one man and the burning or wounding of a dozen persons.

A severe storm Wednesday night blew down houses in Big Bend, Wand and Barnesville and other towns of Northern Minnesota, and injured several persons. The damage was very great.

H. M. Sloan, a workman in the rolling mill at Joliet, met with a horrible death Thursday a red hot steel rail running from the rolls to the saws passing entirely through his body. The old man could not see well, and attempted to pass in front of the rail as it came along the rolls.

For the purpose of testing the new law ordering the closing of saloons on legal holidays, the saloon-keepers at Ishpeming, Mich., decided Monday to keep their places open on the Fourth of July.

A barrel of fish, in which was a dynamite bomb, was a part of the cargo in the hold of the steamer City of Cleveland on her trip from Cleveland last Wednesday. The barrel was one of a number of others consigned by John Kingsborough, a wholesale fish dealer at Cleveland to Ryan & Bourke of Detroit. The bomb was discovered when the barrel was opened the following day, and was thrown into the river. From the appearance of the barrel it had been opened and the bomb placed in it after the barrel had left the warehouse in Cleveland.

Myriads of grasshoppers have appeared in many parts of southern Indiana, and are devouring all vegetation as they go. They destroy meadows first, then the foliage of the trees, and next corn, oats and garden vegetables. Thousands of acres of meadows have been devastated by them.

During a storm Tuesday lightning struck the house of Berlet Gunderson, living four miles south of Clarkfield, Minn., and killed two children and severely shocked the remainder of the family.

During a severe wind storm at Odell, Ill., June 13, Shelby's circus, which was giving an exhibition, was blown down, and fifteen people out of the large crowd at the afternoon performance were injured, one probably fatally.

A jury in the McDonough county (Ill.) court convicted John Sanders, aged seventy-five years, of receiving a bribe for voting. A Macomb policeman testified to paying him $2 for voting the Republican ticket this spring. Several cases of a similar nature are pending.

A terrible accident occurred at Menominee, Wis., to-day which has already resulted in the death of three men, while a fourth is expected to die at any moment, three others being badly injured. The men were all Norwegians and were employed in the brickyard there. They were at work digging clay away from the base of a high bank when, at 10 o'clock, a huge mass of earth, loosened by the heavy rains of the past few days, fell upon them, crushing them and completely burying them from sight.

The west-bound express train on the Northern Pacific railroad was stopped between Big Horn and Myers Station Saturday night by a danger signal exhibited at a dangerous place on the road by eight masked robbers. The thieves entered the express car and took a package containing $400. They then went through the coaches and rifled the male passengers. The latter had had time enough to conceal much of their property and their plunderers got only about $600. The coaches were all badly riddled with bullets, but no one was seriously hurt.

FOREIGN.

DeLesseps will cut down to the sea level through the Culebra Mountains in the construction of the Panama Canal by means of ten iron locks. The canal is to be thirty-seven miles long, of which nine on the Atlantic side and three on the Pacific side are completed. The canal's depth will be twenty-five feet, eventually to be deepened to accommodate the largest steamers. The mortality among the employes is not so great as formerly.

A dispatch from Lisbon to the Independance Belge states that the Arabs at Kinshassa, a town in the Congo Free State, say that Stanley was wounded in a fight with the natives, and that after the fight half of his escort deserted him. The Arabs also say that Tippoo Tip has not sent the promised convoy to Stanley.

Forest fires destroyed the gold mining village of East Rawdon, Hunts county, Nova Scotia, Wednesday. Twenty dwellings and stores, together with a mill crusher and hoisting gear, were destroyed. Forest fires have done enormous damage in Newfoundland. At Hall's Bay a southwest gale drove the flames with tremendous fury. Mothers, with babes pressed to their bosoms and half naked children clinging to their clothes, fought their way through blinding smoke and scorching heat. Mrs. Manning and two children were burned to death. John Driscoll saved part of his furniture but was burned to death in his efforts to save an old trunk. The fire has left 200 people homeless and destitute.

The German Emperor Frederick died soon after 11 o'clock Friday morning. Toward midnight on Wednesday the Emperor became worse. The Empress was informed of the change, and she did not leave her husband's bedside. Drs. Mackenzie, Wegner and Hovell exhausted their skill in trying to relieve the patient, but in spite of all their efforts his strength rapidly diminished. The Emperor became slightly more animated Thursday noon and asked to see his daughter Sophia, it being her 18th birthday. During the night the Emperor remained in a kind of stupor and failed until death came quietly. The funeral occurred on Monday.

Benjamin Harrison, Senator for Indiana, was nominated Monday afternoon by the Republican Convention sitting in this city. The labors, contest, struggles, bargains and quarrels that came to this result it is not our affair to record. The Chicago papers have labored through sometimes half a dozen pages daily to do this and have failed. The convention opened on Tuesday, the 19th, and organized. Next day the settlement of contested seats filled the time. The platform was adopted Thursday and nominating speeches were heard. On Friday there were three ballots and a row; on Saturday two ballots; on the Sabbath promiscuous caucusing by a majority of the delegates, in which Vermont nobly and absolutely refused to join, and their good example was not lost upon other States. After the first ballot Monday a break was made for Harrison and he was nominated amid tremendous enthusiasm.

It is a significant comment on the Boston Common affair and its present situation that the "Old Commonwealth" of the Adamses, of Webster, Sumner and Wilson gives to the nation no leading mind in its councils at Washington or in the conventions that lead its political hosts. One of our Chicago dailies remarks upon this fact in these words: "In the councils of the party leaders Massachusetts is without a representative. It has ceased to have any influence in caucus or convention. This is the plain truth about the matter. In past conventions Massachusetts's voice was potent. She sent men to represent her who were listened to with attention. While there are worthy men in the present delegation there are none of commanding talent worthy of the State of Adams, Webster and Sumner. The falling off is indeed melancholy. There is not even a Cabot Lodge from Massachusetts now in Chicago."

The Dakota Good Templars held their Grand Lodge meeting at Huron last week and were very particular to telegraph all over the country the names of all the individuals, otherwise insignificant, who were exalted to fame by the addition of a string of long titles. But there is also another dispatch which has been sent out which is even more significant. It says: "While the Grand Lodge of Good Templars were here it was ascertained that they have very little sympathy for the third party foolishness, and will generally oppose it this year, both in legislative and Congressional nominees." We believe this will be found to be the condition of most of the Good Templars who stand by their lodge. It is evident to the dullest comprehension that the triumph of the Prohibition party means death to Good Templarism and all the other orders which claim to be necessary for the success of the temperance reform.

In the ratification meeting at Washington reported by Secretary Stoddard, Mr. H. B. Moulton, who spoke for the District delegation and seconded the nomination of Samuel W. Small at the Indianapolis convention, related this incident: "On our way home from Indianapolis, at Pittsburgh, we met the Sam. Randall Club on its way to St. Louis. We both stopped for breakfast. The Sam. Randall train was drawn close up to the platform. Some of our delegates thought they would take a look into it. There was one car that had probably been a mail or freight car, which had a bar running the entire length, and in another car quantities of liquors were stored. In the two cars there were counted seventy-one barrels of beer, two barrels of whisky, and about fifty cases of assorted wines. Thus it took two entire cars to accommodate the Randall Club's liquors on its trip West. Our delegates went through these Democratic cars distributing Prohibition literature, but were soon put out."

The press dispatches tell us that a secret society among the farmers of the South-west, known as the "Agricultural Wheel," has begun to Morganize its seceding members. In Pulaski county, Missouri, last Saturday night a masked band of these lodge men KuKluxed a wealthy farmer named Gross, whom they took a mile from his home and deliberately whipped him to death. He had abandoned them and revealed their secrets. Pulaski is one of the central counties of the State, and not so far from the scenes of the Bald Knob murders and trials that the lesson of law against lodge taught by those trials should not have some effect. The story seems too horrible for belief, and we hope it may be contradicted.

The "White Caps," a KuKlux lodge which has disgraced the fair fame of Indiana for a year or two, seems not to die out by being let alone, as some vainly imagine we should do with the lodge. Like the West Virginia "Red Men" and the Missouri "Bald Knobbers," they have become emboldened by repeated successful outrages in southern Indiana, and have posted hand-bills prominently in nearly all the southern tier of counties notifying the people that they will visit and regulate all persons, male or female, young or old, who are reported to them as having committed offenses forbidden by their code. Then follows their code, a long list of offenses which would make a half column of a newspaper; the penalties presented as a certain number of lashes, well laid on, numbering from ten to 100, according to the grade of the offense. They order the local editors to publish the code and penalties under a penalty of fifty lashes. The other day a man was driven away from his farm near Salem in Washington county after being given some 200 lashes. His offense was refusing to join the White Cap lodge. This order of Masonic assassins have extended their jurisdiction to Illinois, and a lodge has been organized in Wabash county which proposes to flog all drunken men, profligate husbands and wife-beaters. The trouble as usual is the indifference of the lodge ring that forms the local officiary. The end will come soon, as it did a few years since in Cincinnati, with mobs, murders and conflagration. These are the legitimate results of secretism.

The proclamations of the young Emperor of Germany were noticed last week as the impetuous and immature writings of a youth rather than the considerate words of a ruler. The first alarm at his warlike tone subsided immediately, and it was realized that the proclamation alone would not turn aside the German nation from the pursuits of peace wherein is their strength. William's proclamation to the people bears a more noble tone, befitting the dignity and piety which become a ruler of a great people. "I have taken the government," it reads: "looking to the King of all kings, and pray God, like my father, to be a just and lenient prince; to foster piety and the fear of God; to guard the peace and to promote the welfare of the land; to be a helper of the poor and distressed; to be a firm guardian of the right, and progress in my kingly duties in unison with the people, who in good and evil days have stood true to their kings." If the young emperor shall rule in the spirit of these words the end of his reign will be mourned as sincerely as were those which preceded him.

THE GUNS IN THE PARK.

BY H. D. WHITCOMB.

[The following poem was suggested by seeing children playing about the cannon in Franklin Park, Bloomington, Ill.]

To east and west, to north and south,
Four cannon point with yawning mouth,
With aspect grim and cold and stark;
Strange objects in our city park.

Spring hides their tires with verdant grass
And summer heats their polished brass.
Here autumn leaves in beauty glow,
And winter wreathes the whole with snow.

Their useless presence seems to say,
"We stand here to invite decay—
By heat and cold, by worm and rust;
We yet shall be more useful dust."

Young men and maidens straying here
Lean on their sides soft words to hear;
And age here rests the weary half
Which does not have supporting staff.

Childhood and youth here gambol free,
Or pause the monstrous guns to see,
And infant toddlers' fingers feel
Their spokes of wood and tires of steel.

Before the muzzle baby stands,
With eager face and chubby hands,
And asks with curious eyes to note
The darkness of the cannon's throat.

Raise up the darling; let her see
How deep the cave of death may be.
And let her hear and feel and smell
The portal at the gates of hell.

She looks, then asks in artless words,
"Is this for boys and girls and birds
To play around? What is it for?"
"Oh, no, my child, it is for war."

"And what is war?" "It is to fight
To foster and maintain our right.
I must tell you all? why then
This cannon is for killing men."

"For killing! Why I heard you say
When you were killing flies to-day,
For bugs and fleas and insects small
That poison was the best of all.
If that is so, why surely then
This cannon is to poison men."

"Why no. How strange your questions seem!
That would be wicked in extreme;
The cannon shoots them, breaks their bones,
Scatters their brains upon the stones,
Tears off their hands and arms and feet,
And leaves them bleeding in the street."

"It makes them bleed? Oh, is it true?
And are they men the same as you?
Have they got homes and friends and brothers,
And do they love their babies' mothers?
This cannon is a dreadful fright.
Can they not keep it out of sight?"

Then surely would it not be well
To hide our engines of hell?
Oh, speed the day of all our hopes
When cannon, put with hangman's ropes,
Shall shun the rays of open light,
And not offend our children's sight.

THE LODGE OATH SHOULD BE BROKEN.

LETTER FROM A MISSIONARY OF THE FRIENDS IN THE WEST INDIES.

MANCHIONEAL, Jamaica, 5–28, '88.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR FRIEND:—I received four bundles of Anti-masonic tracts from your office a few days ago. Please accept my sincere thanks for them. I have just got a large portion ready for mailing to several of the ministers of the island, mostly to Episcopal, Baptist and Wesleyans.

If all the ministers of Christ would expose the darkness and sin of all secret societies by turning the light of the Gospel upon them, they would all soon disappear like the darkness of night before the rising of the morning sun. But they are so prone to only hold up the Light to the light that the dreadful works of darkness are seldom revealed. All sin is darkness and is of the evil one. And again, all that is in darkness, that cannot bear and will not admit of being revealed and made known by the light of Christ and his church, which is his body on earth, is sin. The very fact that Freemasonry and kindred associations will not admit of open discussion and investigation is absolute evidence that they are sin. Christ, the church and state have a right to know not only the object but the method to obtain that object of every organization of men on the face of the globe. An object may be very good, but the means used to obtain it may be evil and wholly detrimental to the public good. And when there is a concealment of the working of any order it bears upon its very face not only suspicion of evil, but it is evil, for "he that doeth good bringeth his deeds to the light." No man has a right to conceal and continue a thing that he has wickedly or ignorantly done, that may cause others to fall into the same snare. If a man takes an oath or makes a promise to do a thing and afterwards finds out that that thing is evil in its influence and likely to affect others by inducing them to join in or partake of the same thing, if he does not cry aloud and show the people the evil and the sin, and one fall therein because he did not know the evil, will not his blood be required of him who knew the evil and warned not his brother?

But for the oath's sake he will not. For the oath's sake Herod would not spare the head of John the Baptist. One, by the blood of Christ, faith and repentance, which is accounted for righteousness is justified from all sin. Therefore, the sin that a man has done, whether it be a lie, theft, or an oath to do wrong, by these terms is taken away, and the man stands clear of the sin, and is not only at liberty to do right independent of the wrong he has done, but it is his duty to do right for his own sake, the sake of others and for Christ's sake.

Therefore, one who has taken an oath to secrecy in any of these lodges is bound and under obligations to God, in receiving pardon himself, to reveal the evil, either direct or in tendency, to others. So Herod and the men who bound themselves with an oath to kill Paul ought to have repented of taking the oath and not have done the thing they swore they would do. Who would dare to say that if any one of those who agreed together with an oath to kill Paul had repented, that because of his promise and oath to the others he ought not to have revealed the secret to Paul and others? Why would he be clear of his oath? Because he saw that it was evil. So ought every secret order man to reveal the order and bring it to the light. It is the only way the world may know of the evil. JOSIAH DILLON.

THE DISARMAMENT OF NATIONS.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

One of the neat and ably conducted journals that come from the prolific press of Chicago is called The Dehorner, and is devoted mainly to the idea that domestic cattle can be reared without horns. It is held that these appendages are not only a useless encumbrance; hurtful to the cattle themselves, since they are constantly liable to gore each other, and that they endanger the life of all who have them in their care. In their wild state horns are needed for protection from wild beasts, and so God made them; but under the care of civilized man they are no longer needed and should be laid aside. Whatsoever is needless and capable of being used for evil is most likely to be so used, and hence becomes a perpetual menace.

But if this be true of brutes, much more is it true of men. The carrying of deadly weapons begets arrogance and tends to violence and crime, and hence public safety demands its prohibition. Great national armaments, like the horns of Taurus, are not only a terrible burden to the people, whose life goes into the immense taxes that build and sustain them, but are a source of just alarm to all peace-loving peoples. If we could imitate the cattle raisers, and have a general disarmament, it would take off an immense burden from the nations of the Old World, and put a stop to that agony of fear with which they mutually regard each other. Bismarck, the great Chancellor, has said this; but he fears France and Russia and dares not undertake the most needful and beneficent of all reforms. All the great nations are oscillating between the fear of internal revolution and the outward attack of some brute-like people that shall suddenly rob them of their power. They could and ought to trust to the good sense, the common honesty, and above all, the Christian principles that they mutually profess. The spectacle of a company of armed gladiators waiting to pounce on and destroy each other is quite out of harmony with the wonderful progress in the civilization of the nineteenth century.

But, however we may or may not excuse the Old World, our circumstances as a nation are widely different. We are menaced by no neighboring power; great seas fortify us on our right hand and on our left; the iron bands of commerce join us to our weaker neighbors on the north and southwest, and our great population and immense resources make us invulnerable. We have had no foreign invasion of our soil since the disastrous campaign of Gen. Packingham in January of 1815, and we are now five times stronger than then. The great occasion for domestic strife passed away with the great conflict of 1861–5. We are beginning to learn to keep the peace with the little band of Indians on our western border. Under such circumstances how safe, how beautiful and sublime would be the spectacle if we were to set the example of national disarmament.

Our best security is not in fortifications, navies, or armies, but in the intelligence, virtue and patriotism of the people. The abolition of the liquor traffic would do more for peace than all the navies we could build. Our best security against national dishonor is that we be honorable, nor need we longer emulate the Texas steer or the rhinoceros.

Chicago.

ANARCHY AND WAR.

In an address at Baltimore last winter by William Jones of the British Commission to secure international arbitration, he spoke as follows:

The terrible tragedy recently at Chicago, he said, was the result of misguided men, a malignant brood of Anarchists, who had not a shadow of justification for their action. There is no country where law and order is so well established, and the display of force so small as here. He said Anarchists, Socialists, and Nihilists were the result of the way Europe was governed. Beaconsfield knew what he said when he declared Europe was honey-combed by lawlessness and secret societies. The grinding military rule, the constant preparation for war, and the high taxes necessary to support the standing armies, keep the masses poor, and breed ignorance, pauperism and disloyalty. No man is more heartily welcome, or surer of getting rich, than the scientist who invents a new instrument for killing men.

Another war between France and Germany is inevitable. Since 1870 France has so fortified her 140 miles of frontier that every yard of it can be swept by the best guns made. Germany is nothing but an armed camp; and each is watching the other closely. The French say they have three times as many men as in 1870, and are better prepared in every way for war.

The problem now in Europe is, How many men can be extracted from productive industry and put in the army and be supported by the taxes drawn from those at work? The result of this plan is that in twenty years the national debts have doubled, and the interest now is more than two hundred million pounds. The laboring class live in poverty, squalor and dirt, crushed to the earth by heavy taxes, and filled with disloyalty and curses against the Governments. There are one million disloyal Socialists in Europe ready to vote against the Governments. Force cannot solve this question. Governments may hang and imprison the disloyal, but this cannot reach the feeling of discontent in the heart.

To illustrate the state of affairs in Europe, he gave some figures from Russia. Of the eighty million population, sixty millions are peasants; and of these latter, seventeen millions belong to the dangerous class, who live from hand to mouth. Stepniak says the war tax bears so hard upon them that they are worse off than when serfs. In the thirteen central agricultural provinces there, the richest black soil in the whole land, the death-rate is sixty-two per 1,000—three times as much as in crowded London. The birth-rate is forty-five per 1,000, so that the population is slowly dying out. Last year 169,000 poor Italians emigrated; but the Russians do not leave their country to any extent. The army tax is $2 50 a head, and the tax for education three cents a head. This was the case during the days of Alexander. Out of every 1,000 males, only 375 are fit to go in the army. The rest are too diseased from poor food and clothes, and badly ventilated houses.

When people like these get so low they feel they can't get worse; they become as clay in the hands of vicious men, and are easily led away by specious orators; and anarchy and socialism thrive. A Frenchman defined Communism as going to work in the morning with no breakfast, half a stomachful at noon, and going to bed with no supper.

GOVERNMENT BY THE GRACE OF GOD.

Rev. T. T. Munger, in a warmly appreciative article in the Century for April on Elisha Mulford, the author of "The Nation," writes as follows on the doctrine of that remarkable book concerning the supreme authority of God in human government. These sentiments are most suitable for the approaching national anniversary:

"Society is now making the dangerous transition from the aristocratic to the democratic idea of government, and with the change there is danger lest that truth be lost which alone makes any government real and binding—namely, that it is by the grace of God. Kings planted themselves on this truth, and hence had power and majesty. The pomp of courts is not the reflection of human pride, but of the divineness of government. In passing from one form to the other the insignia of power and majesty are largely dropped, and with them there is danger lest the conception of government as a divine thing be also given up and it come to be regarded, even as it already is by some schools of social science, as a mere matter of police, a negative check on crime, with the result of resolving society into nearly absolute individualism, the idea of humanity as a social facts lost, and progress reduced to a go-as-you-please scramble for the most that can be got, or to selfish combinations that turn society into a war between labor and capital—a condition already existing in part and sure to prevail unless it is checked by the conception of government as existing by the will of God and for righteousness, and as God's own instrument for blessing humanity—not an instrument merely, but a creatively ordained order, in which men must live if they would live at all. Dr. Mulford, whose work was always constructive and at heart conservative, saw the necessity of unfolding the truth that a democracy not only rests on the grace of God, but, beyond all other forms of government, is so grounded and must be so interpreted. Hence his continual assertion that the nation is a moral organism and has a life of its own, with certain necessary institutions and characteristics working towards certain ends. Being an organism, its processes are necessary as in all organic bodies. Hence social science is possible, and hence also there is no occason for or justification of the empiricism that so marks its history. If society is an organism, social science consists in finding out the laws of the organism and their methods and ends—a process the reverse of arbitrarily shaping society so as to get rid of certain evils and to secure certain good results. If society is a moral organism, its aim is righteousness and its action will be in freedom. His main thesis is that the nation is such a moral organism, that it transcends physical conditions, and finds the constituents of its life in freedom and law and in the conscious fulfillment of a vocation. He carries this thought through more than four hundred pages, with much apparent repetition but always with some advance of the argument, which is chiefly illustrated in the laws and institutions of the United States, but is abundantly re-enforced by quotations from literature and history. The constant refrain from first to last is that the nation is not constituted in the necessary process of the physical world, but in the order of a moral world; the ties of the nation are the ties of humanity, and the life of the individual in the two is one life, and it is moral. Moral action is conditioned on freedom, which is the law or essence of the nation. He makes the analogy between the life of the individual and of the nation exact and imperative, but each working out its destiny in mutual dependence and along the same lines.

"This theory is a repudiation of all social compact and police theories of government as something to be shaped by chance or apparent need. The outcome of such a line of thought, as we might suppose, is in the loftiest heights of religion—the nation is divine; its vocation is righteousness; it lives in freedom; its laws are moral, and are like those over the individual; it exists in God. In short, Dr. Mulford, by a scientific examination and in the actual process of our own institutions and in the confirming testimony of the great thinkers, reaches the same conception of the nation as that of the Puritans. They leaped, or rather flew, to the height of their truth on the wings of spiritual sight; he reaches it by an examination of humanity and by an elaboration of details often as dry as the statute-book itself. He reaches it also by an exhaustive study of the nation in its antagonisms, as against the idea of confederacy and the empire and other arbitrary or tyrannical conceptions. He finds himself carried by his argument beyond the limits usually set about politics, even to the very throne of God, from which he does not hold back, but draws nigh and lays down the allegiance of the nation where it receives its life—in no rhetorical or sentimental way, but with full logical necessity."

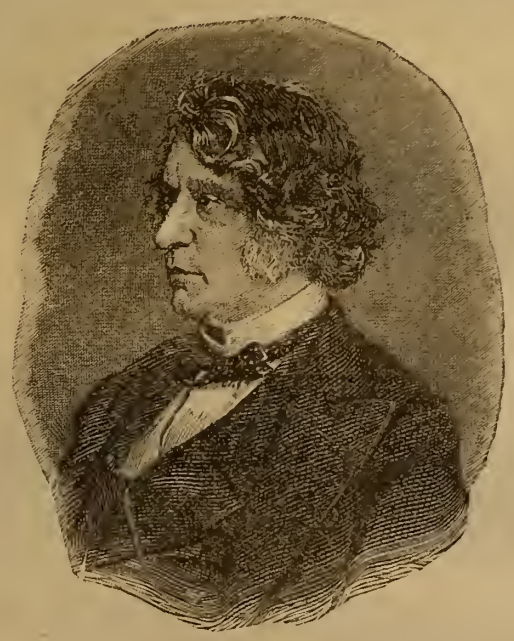
LINCOLN ON THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.



In an installment of the "Lincoln History" published in the Century an account is given of the famous Dred Scott decision, with quotations from Lincoln's and Douglas's opinions on that decision. Lincoln incidentally referred to the Declaration of Independence in the following striking language: "I think the authors of that notable instrument intended to include all men; but they did not intend to declare all men equal in all respects. They did not mean to say all were equal in color, size, intellect, moral development or social capacity. They defined with tolerable distinctness in what respects they did consider all men created equal—equal with 'certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.' This they said, and this they meant. They did not mean to assert the obvious untruth that all were then actually enjoying that equality, nor yet that they were about to confer it immediately upon them. In fact they had no power to confer such a boon. They meant simply to declare the right, so that the enforcement of it might follow as fast as circumstances should permit. They meant to set up a standard maxim for free society, which should be familiar to all and revered by all; constantly looked to, constantly labored for, and even though never perfectly attained, constantly approximated, and thereby constantly spreading and deepening its influence and augmenting the happiness and value of life to all people of all colors everywhere. The assertion that 'all men are created equal' was of no practical use in effecting our separation from Great Britain; and it was put in the Declaration, not for that, but for future use. Its authors meant it to be as, thank God, it is now proving itself, a stumbling-block to all those who in after times might seek to turn a free people back into the hateful paths of despotism. They knew the proneness of prosperity to breed tyrants, and they meant when such should reappear in this fair land and commence their vocation, they should find left for them at least one hard nut to crack."

ARBITRATION IN AMERICA.

In the retrospect of the work, the most striking observation that occurs to one is the enormous amount of pacific sentiment which exists among American citizens everywhere; and which, though apparently lying dormant, was ready to be evoked and to show itself in an unmistakably enthusiastic manner wherever the question of International Concord and Amity was forcibly brought before them. This enthusiasm and earnestness were gratifyingly present, both at the public receptions of the English delegates, wherever they made their appearance, and also in the meetings which were specially addressed by myself. And it was with the sincerest convictions that I was enabled to tell the President of the United States, at my second interview with him at Washington, that, after calling upon hundreds of influential and leading citizens, and addressing many meetings, almost without encountering a single dissentient, the seed sown had fallen into good ground, and that the people of the States appeared to me more prepared even than those of my own country to adopt the principle of international arbitration as the recognized substitute for war.

This visit has done much, as may have been observed in the public prints, and still more in private correspondence, to deepen and strengthen in America the spirit of kinship and of good-will towards the old country. Every allusion to the "Alabama" arbitration, and to the re-establishment of good feeling between the two countries as the result of that eminently wise and righteous method of settling our "burning questions," met with a most cordial and gratifying response from audiences in the Southern as well as in the Northern States.

If the American friends of peace will now only follow up the good work that has been initiated, and urge upon the various organizations, to whose care the matter has been committed, the vast importance of keeping the subject alive, and of maintaining undiminished the interest of the public in the subject, there can be little doubt that, ere very long, some presentation in reference to an arbitration treaty with England may be looked for from the American Government. And then will be our own opportunity to employ, in the words of John Bright, the "force of good men who are with us to induce our Government to consent to it." If this were done, can there be any doubt in any reasonable mind that it will indeed be "a grand step forward in the world's march?"—William Jones, Secretary of the English Peace Society.

CHARLES SUMNER ON WAR.

Sumner, one of the bravest and noblest of American statesmen, made his first great public address July 4th, 1845, "On the True Grandeur of Nations." This address, says Carl Schuiz, "was a plea for universal peace, a poetic rhapsody on the wrongs and horrors of war." The following are extracts from this oration. The whole is worthy to be read and re-read by all American patriots:

War is utterly ineffectual to secure or advance the object at which it aims. The misery which it excites, contributes to no end, helps to establish no right, and, therefore, in no respect determines justice between the contending nations.

The fruitlessness and vanity of war appear in the results of the great wars by which the world has been lacerated. After long struggles, in which each nation has inflicted and received incalculable injury, peace has been gladly obtained on the basis of the condition of things before the war.—Status ante Bellum. Let me refer for an example to our last war with Great Britain, the professed object of which was to obtain from the latter power a renunciation of her claim to impress our seamen. The greatest number of American seamen ever officially alleged to be compulsorily serving in the British navy was about eight hundred. To overturn this injustice, the whole country was doomed, for more than three years, to the accursed blight of war. Our commerce was driven from the seas; the resources of the land were drained by taxation; villages on the Canadian frontier were laid in ashes; the metropolis of the Republic was captured, while gaunt distress raged everywhere within our borders. Weary with this rude trial, our Government appointed Commissioners to treat for peace, under these instructions: "Your first duty will be to conclude peace with Great Britain, and you are authorized to do it, in case you obtain a satisfactory stipulation against impressment, one which shall secure under our flag protection to the crew. If this encroachment of Great Britain is not provided against, the United States have appealed to arms in vain." Afterwards, despairing of extorting from Great Britain a relinquishment of the unrighteous claim, and foreseeing only an accumulation of calamities from an inveterate prosecution of the war, our Government directed their negotiators, in concluding a treaty of peace, "to omit any stipulation on the subject of impressment." The instructions were obeyed and the treaty that once more restored to us the blessings of peace, which we had rashly cast away, and which the country hailed with an intoxication of joy, contained no allusion to the subject of impressment, nor did it provide for the surrender of a single American sailor detained in the service of the British navy, and thus, by the confession of our own Government, "The United States had appealed to arms in vain."

All this is the natural result of an appeal to war in order to establish justice. Justice implies the exercise of the judgment in the determination of right. Now war not only supersedes the judgment, but delivers over the results to superiority of force, or to chance.

It was amidst the thunders which made Sinai tremble, that God declared, "Thou shalt not kill;" and the voice of these thunders, with this commandment, has been prolonged to our own day in the echoes of Christian churches. What mortal shall restrain the application of these words? Who on earth is empowered to vary or abridge the commandments of God? Who shall presume to declare, that this injunction was directed, not to nations, but to individuals only; not to many, but to one only; that one man may not kill, but that many may; that it is forbidden to each individual to destroy the life of a single human being, but that it is not forbidden to a nation to cut off by the sword a whole people?

When shall the St. Louis of the nations arise? the Christian ruler or Christian people who shall proclaim to the whole earth, that henceforward forever the great trial by battle shall cease; that it is the duty and policy of nations to establish love between each other; and in all respects, at all times, towards all persons, as well their own people, as the people of other lands, to be governed by the sacred rules of right, as between man and man! May God speed the coming of that day!

UNARMED TRAVELERS.

For half a century Titus Coan labored in the Gospel in Patagonian and Pacific Island Missions. When he was a young man, at college, the American Mission Board had under consideration the subject of a visit of inquiry to Patagonia, about the year 1825. It was brought before the various colleges, and each student in one of these was requested to retire to his own room for prayer and guidance, as to whether he was required to go. Mr. Coan rose from prayer convinced that he must offer himself for the service; and another young man felt prepared to accompany him.

Having heard of the savage character of the Patagonians, the friends of the two young men desired that they should be supplied with weapons of defense; but Mr. Coan had a strong belief that all these, even his pocket-knife, must be discarded.

On nearing the Patagonian shore, the captain of the vessel in which these devoted followers of the Prince of Peace sailed, said that as the natives were so savage and untrustworthy he could not allow his crew to land; and he could only put Mr. Coan and his companion on the beach in a little boat with their goods, saying that if they lighted a fire the natives would come into sight.

It was a very lonely position for the two young missionaries, but the natives were soon seen lining the brow of the neighboring hill. They came near, and sought to satisfy themselves that the strangers were entirely unarmed by examining every part of their dress, and even taking off their stockings and turning out their pockets; but, finding nothing, they expressed their friendly regard by taking their new friends in their arms and receiving them into their tribe.

"They gave us," writes Mr. Coan, "horses to ride on, and we traveled with them about three months, east, west and north, visiting their camps and hunting grounds, and falling in with several other clans. In this way we saw nearly all the savages of the eastern Patagonian Pampas. The tribes are wild, and in the wildest state of savageism, living wholly by the chase, and roaming with their women and children most of the time, carrying their skin tents and their all with them. We had no interpreter; all our communications to the natives were through signs.

"Some of our friends had advised us to go armed into Patagonia. We had said, 'No, our weakness is our strength; our apparent unprotectedness our shield.' And so it was. The savages saw we were defenseless and harmless, and our God made them our protectors. They were not jealous or afraid of us, and we left them unscathed, under the wing of our Immanuel."—Philadelphia Friends' Review.

THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The recurrence of the annual business meeting of the N. C. A. this year at the time of great excitement in Chicago in connection with the Republican convention, it might have been feared that the counter attraction would diminish the attendance. There were, however, twenty-six corporate members present, and a considerable number of other friends. A feature of special interest was the presence of all the agents who are actively and constantly engaged in the reform.

The business of the day opened with the reading of the Scripture and prayer by President George. The roll was called, and the records of last annual meeting read and on proper recommendation Rev. Wm. Morrow of Bloom, Ill., and C. W. Sterry, Pontiac, Ill., H. Baldridge of New York, Mrs. H. L. Kellogg and John Sutcliffe of Wheaton were elected members. All visiting friends were invited to sit as corresponding members. Among these were A. R. Hotchkiss of Columbus, O., Rev. B. Williams of Warren., Ill., Mrs. W. B. Stoddard of Columbus, O., Mr. Fifield of Berrien Center, Mich., Mr. Hogue of Nebraska, Rev. L. G. Jordan of Texas.

A letter from Miss Sarah E. Morrow of Leanna, Kansas, requesting admission to the National Association as a life member accompanied by $25, was received with favor and the request was granted.

The report of the Executive Committee by the secretary E. R. Worrell was accepted and further action was deferred.

The report of the General Agent and Corresponding Secretary was read and received. The report of the treasurer was read and laid upon the table until the appointment of a committee of reference.

As committee on reports Alexander Thomson, M. R. Britten, and E. R. Worrell were appointed, and to them were referred the reports of the Treasurer, General Agent and Board of Directors.

A report of the editors of the Cynosure being called for brief statements were made respecting the importance of the paper to the success of the work of the N. C. A., especially in the South.

The Chair then appointed the following committees:

On Deceased Members: H. H. Hinman and B. F. Worrell.

On Nominations: C. F. Hawley, J. L Barlow and M. L. Worcester.

On Anti secrecy League: J. Blanchard, E. A. Cook and Hiram Baldridge.

On N. C. A. District Headquarters: C. A. Blanchard, L N Stratton and M R. Britten.

Foreign Work: H L Kellogg and A. D. Zaraphonithes.

The report of H. H. Hinman as Southern Agent was called for. The annual report having been already printed in the Cynosure, the agent was not asked to repeat it. He wished, if time permitted, to hear from Rev. Mr. Jordan of Texas.

Statements of the work in Iowa and Ohio were made by Rev. C. F. Hawley and W. B. Stoddard. The latter had taken 322 subscriptions for the Cynosure, delivered some 60 lectures, and distributed much literature. A discussion on the reports of State agents, publisher, etc., after some time was settled by the adoption of a resolution requiring all the agents of the Association to make an annual report to the annual business meeting.

After the noon recess Rev. L. G. Jordan, the Cynosure's Texas correspondent, lately at the Indianapolis convention, was called upon for a statement of the situation in his State. He said the colored people were more ready to accept the anti-lodge than the prohibition reform. This had been his observation after extensive traveling and a year or more of speaking for prohibition. He urged that Mr. Hinman or some other competent lecturer visit Texas immediately, as there were to be more than twenty associations or conferences to be held in the State within a few weeks, and such an opportunity would not come again for a year, if ever. The result of the discussion about New Orleans is felt all over that part of the South, and it would be wise to take advantage of the rising sentiment of opposition to the lodge.

The reports of committees being called for, that upon deceased members was presented by Rev. H. H. Hinman. The committee was desired to add a minute respecting the death of Rev. A. G. McCoy. Their report is as follows:

The Committee on Obituaries beg leave to report that there have fallen during the past year five members of this corporate body: Rufus Stratton, Rev. A. G. McCoy, Gen. A. W. Riley, Prof. H. Woodsmall and J. C. Allis.

Bro. Rufus Stratton was born at Harvard, Mass., Nov. 11, 1802, and died June 30, 1887. He was an earnest Christian reformer and stood faithful to the last. The following are some of his last words: "I do not regret that I have stood boldly against the popular sins of my day. I know I was right and that the truth of God will prevail." "Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. They rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Rev. A. G. McCoy, a member of this body, died during the past year in Colorado, where he had gone for the improvement of his health. He was for some years an editor of the Christian Instructor, and a warm friend of our reform.

Next to fall in the ranks was Prof. H. Woodsmall, who died at Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 27, 1888, aged about 48. He served with credit during the late war in the Union army, and suffered from wounds received in that service. He entered the legal profession, but gave up a lucrative practice to devote himself to Gospel study and labor in the South. Perhaps no man in modern times has exhibited more self-sacrifice and devotion to the cause of the poor and oppressed than did our brother during his fourteen years' labor among the Freedmen. His last work was in teaching in a school established for ministerial education, and he taught up to the day of his death. In his early life he thought favorably of Freemasonry, and was duly initiated: but he soon discovered its incompatibility with Christianity and republicanism. Once, making a speech "for the good of the order," he expressed his gratification that there was at least one brotherhood that could reach out its arms to all men without respect to race. He was severely rebuked by the Worshipful Master, and told that American Masonry was for white men only. He withdrew from the order, and as he advanced in Christian experience he saw more and more the unchristian character of the whole lodge system. Everywhere in his labors among the colored people he besought them to have "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

Next in order was Gen. A. W. Riley, who died at Rochester, N. Y., April 2, 1888, aged 93. He was the oldest of the great temperance lecturers, having had as intimate associates, Samuel Carey, Frederick Douglass, Gerrit Smith, Myron Holly and Thurlow Weed. He survived them all except Douglass. He traveled and lectured more widely in Europe and America than any man except Gough, and he took a deep interest in the rise and prosperity of the Prohibition party. Though less active in the anti secrecy reform, his sympathies were wholly with us, and his earliest associates were the most pronounced Anti masons. His long life and remarkable physical and mental vigor were doubtless due to his temperate habits and faithful Christian life.

Of Bro. J. C. Allis, since we have not the particulars of his death, we can only say that he was a devoted Christian and an earnest reformer. He was taken away in the midst of his years, and many brethren and friends will mourn his loss. Who will fill up the ranks?

The nominating committee reported by C. F. Hawley and was adopted, after some modification, as follows:

President, Rev. H. H. George, D. D.
Vice President, Rev. M A Gault.
Corresponding Secretary and General Agent, Rev. J. P. Stoddard.
Recording Secretary and Treasurer, W. I. Phillips.
Directors: J. L. Barlow, C A Blanchard, M. R. Britten, A. J Chittenden, H. A. Fischer, John Gardner, G. R. Milton, Wm Morrow, L. N. Stratton, Alexander Thomson, E R. Worrell.

The Committee on Foreign Work reported by H. L. Kellogg. Their paper and recommendations was accepted and referred to the Board of Directors. It reads thus:

For several years the Association has answered occasional calls made by individuals for tracts and other literature in foreign countries. Our publications have thus been circulated widely in Southern and Western Africa, India, the West Indies and England. The Board during the last year voted to approve the opening of a Foreign Fund by the Treasurer, and through the Cynosure has invited donations. This was in response to urgent calls from India, where a systematic colporteur work has been begun by W. J. Gladwin, publisher of the Bombay Watchman and secretary for India of the Gospel Purity Association of London. Copies of our tracts are stitched in the two monthly magazines issued by Bro. Gladwin, and his colporteurs circulate tracts and sell our books, which are furnished gratuitously to them by means of our Foreign Fund. As a further assistance to this work, and to secure more frequent letters from India for the Cynosure, Bro. Gladwin has been promised the sum of one pound sterling per month

In view of the hopeful openings for our reform among English speaking peoples, we recommend that the Board endeavor to systematize this work and open correspondence with missionaries and others in all foreign countries to which we have access, and secure as wide a circulation of our literature as possible. We recommend also that so soon as this work increases so as to warrant it, a Foreign Work department be opened in the Cynosure, where weekly reports of donations, of grants of literature, expenses and results may be reported.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard reported for the committee on District Headquarters. There was some objection to the final recommendation, which did not favor the opening of any new district agencies until the means would warrant it, and the demand evident. The proposal for an office in New Orleans had been in favor with some and the desirability of such an enlargement was discussed at length, a change was made in the report and it was adopted thus:

Your committee to whom was referred the subject of District Headquarters respectfully report as follows:

1. We believe that there should be District Headquarters at Boston, at Washington, at New Orleans and on the Pacific coast as soon as means for the support of such headquarters can be secured.

2. We believe that when such headquarters are established it should be understood that the region in which they are situated should largely contribute to their support. Our labors in places where there is small local support should, we believe, be performed by agents and not by the establishment of permanent depositories.

3. At present we favor a determined effort to make the Boston and Washington Headquarters self-sustaining. We believe that there are friends of our cause on the Atlantic coast who can support these agencies, who ought to do so, and who, if properly approached, will do so.

4. We recommend that the Board of Directors be directed to enlarge the agency work in the South, and open a district agency at as early a moment as a suitable agent can be found and the funds secured to carry on such an agency, so as to avoid closing the year in debt.

President George stated that it was necessary that he leave the body, and requested that the chair be filled. He wished to urge the consideration of another Congress of Churches similar to that held in March, 1887. The influence of that meeting was felt throughout the country, and should be repeated, and such an effort made to secure ample delegations from the various conferences, synods, associations, etc., of all denominations as would guarantee success. The churches in their organized capacity should be enlisted. The fact that so many already opposed the secret orders, with membership of hundreds of thousands, if not millions, was a powerful argument of itself, which should be used more skilfully in creating a public sentiment against the system of secretism. As Dr. George retired, his hand was so warmly grasped by a score or more that he had the satisfaction of knowing that he was popular in Chicago as well as in Geneva College.

Rev. Alexander Thomson was chosen to preside, and the business continued with the report of the committee to which was referred the annual official reports. This report seemed to take a more severely literal understanding of the General Agent's report than was probably intended. A portion of that report lingered upon the agreeable incidents of city mission work and the timidity of little colored children changing to enthusiasm in the school room. The committee approved of such work under individual control, but the Association could not in honor give attention to it. Thanks were given Mr. Ford of Washington for his offer to aid in securing prohibition literature, but there should be no engagement by which the Association should be responsible except for its own literature. The religious meetings held under management of the N. C. A. should not be sectarian. The Treasurer's report was referred to the new Board of Directors, with the understanding that the auditor should complete the examination of the accounts of the year. The report of the old Board was approved with the recommendation that renewed effort be made to enlarge the circulation of the Cynosure in the South.

The first part of the report seemed to some to be a reflection, but the committee explained that if there was any reflection it must rest upon the Board of Directors to whom each of their number belonged. Secretary Stoddard spoke earnestly for the work as now laid out in Washington, with opposition to secret societies at the fore-front of every part—reading-room, industrial school, prayer meeting, etc. It was not urged that these efforts be discontinued, but that they be not made a charge upon the treasury of the Association or the time of its employed agents.

Later in the day it was voted that Secretary Stoddard should continue his efforts at Washington for the present; that there was no objection to a deposit of such publications of the W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition party as those organizations might furnish; also that the General Agent might receive donations or collect money for the purchase of such publications or for maintaining any branches of mission work outside the lines of N. C. A. work.

The report of the committee on the American Anti-secrecy League was presented by E. A. Cook, as follows:

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

The object of this League is "to prevent the nomination and election of men who are under secret obligations," by circulating a pledge, as the temperance cause was inaugurated by circulating a total abstinence pledge. The advantages of such a league, vigorously pushed, are manifest:

1. It will furnish something for every meeting and every person to do.

2. It will call public attention to the secret relations of the nominees of all political parties, and enable voters to oppose the lodge by scratching the names of secretists from their tickets.

3 It will lay the foundation and prepare the way for an American party, whose fundamental principle is opposition to the despotisms of priestism and false worships

4. We, therefore, endorse the organization of the American Anti-secrecy League, with Mr. Phillips as Superintendent, and hope it will be vigorously pushed.

The report was adopted without dissent. A resolution endorsing the nomination of Fisk and Brooks was not so fortunate, and resulted in quite a lively discussion of politics in which a number took part. A motion to table was lost and a substitute was presented which noticed in a courteous way the recognition of the anti-lodge sentiment by the Prohibition party. This, however, was regarded as a little too partisan for official action,and the following was finally adopted:

RESOLVED, 1. That we are grateful to God that in his providence the cause of prohibition, to which we, as members of the National Christian Association, have from the first given our moral and political endorsement, has been brought to the front.

2. That we rejoice that the Presidential candidates now before the country, so far as we are informed, are clean of the lodge; and we trust that the time may soon come when no member of a secret society shall be considered eligible to any public office in the United States.

3. That we are grateful to the leading members of the Prohibition party for the consideration which they have extended to the representatives of this Association.

The concluding business of the day was passed without debate or division. For auditors of the Association S. A. Kean and John Culver were selected. The editors and publisher of the Cynosure were reelected; and the latter was instructed to make a detailed report of the list and financial condition of the paper and the publication business to the Board for publication. H. H. Hinman was re-appointed as Southern Agent. The recording secretary was instructed to report the minutes of the annual meeting to the Board for approval.

After prayer by Elder J. L. Barlow the Association adjourned.

MISSION WORK IN THE WASHINGTON BUILDING.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 21, 1888.

DEAR READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:—I have been thinking for some days past that I would like to write you of the children who, through personal effort of Mrs. Cunningham and myself, have been gathered in here as a nucleus for an industrial school. This I wished to do; first, because it is a work which deeply interests me; secondly, because I wish to interest you in this much needed work. But, say you, we do not know just what the work is, how extensive the plan, its needs, and requirements. This I propose to give you.

The colored people in this beautiful city are, as a rule, crowded together into the alleys and by-ways, sometimes a whole family in one room, and that a basement; the mothers as well as the fathers working to support their families, the mothers being away from home much of the time, and the children left to roam on the streets. Just such an alley lies back of 4½ street, and it was there that our footsteps turned as we started out to visit the homes and see if there were any children who did not attend public school, and would be glad to come in here certain days for instruction. Several were found on our first tour, the old grandma of one bright little girl saying, "I has been praying for something of this kind, and the good Lord has sent you to answer it; if there isn't something done for the children right round here, I see no hope of their ever getting to heaven." All the mothers, in fact, seemed glad that we were going to try to help them.

On Wednesday, the 13th, I opened the school at 2 P. M. with fifteen children in attendance, and at present shall have school three afternoons in the week, teaching the first hour reading, spelling and writing, the rest of the time being devoted to sewing. Miss Susie Hinman has assisted me so far, in drilling them on the sounds of letters. The children range from six to fifteen years of age and are about equally divided as to sex, the boys sewing just as industriously as the girls.

Our school is opened with repeating the Lord's prayer in concert, singing a hymn, and a drill on the Commandments, of which they knew nothing. Last Friday afternoon I asked the children how many of them attended any Sabbath-school, and found that none of them did so. I saw at once that I must take up that line of work also, and, accordingly told them to come on Sabbath morning. A few did so, and we had a very interesting time. On inquiry why others were not here, found that lack of Sunday clothes kept them away. I called on the mothers this week and asked them not to keep them away for that, that cleanliness was all I asked.

It will be necessary in this work to furnish nearly everything needed in the school. The reason many of those already in the school gave for not attending public school was inability to furnish necessary books, etc. Then the children, in order to sew, must have material aid. My thought has been that, when I saw it was needed, cloth for a single dress or skirt, etc., could be bought and cut, and the child earn it by making the garment. The question arises, Who is to furnish these materials? And in reply I would say to you, dear readers and fellow workers, I must look for the funds to carry on this grand line of work, and to you I now make an appeal. Will you not "come up to the help of the Lord" in this matter? Not that I would detract from other objects, but has not the Master a "thus saith the Lord" for you in this department? We have gathered in but few, as yet, and it comes through personal visitation. This will be kept up, and much good can be done in this way, and a large number gathered in. When making our last visit from house to house we took such papers and tracts as we had by us, and they were eagerly received; and the thought has come to me that the children throughout the country would like to be counted in, and would be glad to save their Sabbath-school papers, and send them here for distribution; and Sabbath-school superintendents, when they have a surplus, could hardly find a worthier object to which they could devote them. Take these thoughts to the Lord in prayer, and "whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." All contributions of funds, or of other things, will be credited through the Cynosure. Yours in the work for the Master, ANNA E. STODDARD.

REFORM NEWS.

TO THE MAINE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. Kimball went to Lewiston to-day to attend the meeting of the Maine Christian Association. Will friends of the cause pray that the isolated workers scattered over the length and breadth of the Pine Tree State may from this time be encouraged to come up together to the help of the Lord, and inscribe on their hearts and banners, "Holiness to the Lord," and consequently have an abhorrence of and opposition to the secret empire in every phase of its being and action? Miss Haines, the secretary of this youngest association, has contended almost alone for God amid the taunts of her brethren in the ministry. "Oh, you don't know anything about Masonry; you're a woman." But a woman, ordained of God if not by men, with the Holy Spirit on her heart, with Quaker blood and training in her character, and God-given health in body, is able to stand alone with God, and "having done all to stand." Let the prayers of her Christian sisters from Maine to California uphold her hands and heart, that not Amalek but Israel may prevail in this great battle of the light of God's truth against "the unfruitful works of darkness." MRS. S. C. KIMBALL.

IS NOT PAGE THE BANNER COUNTY OF IOWA?

COMMENCEMENT AT AMITY COLLEGE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Before leaving College Springs I preached again in the Congregational and the Free Methodist churches. I was present at the morning exercises of Amity College, located at College Springs, twice, and each time by invitation of President Kennedy,I conducted the religious service,and on one of the occasions addressed the students.

Amity College is a Christian reformatory school and undenominational. Christian ladies and gentlemen are employed as teachers and professors who are members of the various orthodox evangelical churches, the test being personal merit and not denominationalism. Amity College is a fine and flourishing institution and is a center of interest for that region of country.

I attended the Commencement exercises on Thursday, June 14th. The interest taken in the work of the college is manifest on Commencement day. Not only the seats but the standing room was all taken, and then many could not get in who had come to hear the orations of the graduates. I was told that two or three hundred usually fail to get into the hall, and that many more would come than do but for the fact that they know there will be more present than can crowd into the hall.

The graduates acquitted themselves well, and I could but feel that Amity College, under the presidency of Dr. Kennedy, is destined to develop and become an important educational center.

After completing my work as the agent of the Iowa Christian Association at College Springs I went to Coin. A tabernacle meeting was in progress there, conducted by a lady from Illinois. I attended what I could and do the work of canvassing for donations and subscriptions to the Iowa Association and the Cynosure.

While the meeting was yet in progress, I went to Blanchard and called first on Mr. Sharp, who is a merchant and a member of the Covenanter church. He donated $5 to the State work. Mr. Walkinshaw, another Covenanter, did the same; as did also A. B. Wilkinson, a Wesleyan Methodist. Mr. McCrowsy, a Covenanter, gave $4; Mr. Murchie,a Baptist, $3; Mr. McKeown, $2.50, and Mr. McKnight, Pollock, Spear and Dunn, two dollars each, and a number of others gave $1.50 each and received in return the Cynosure. Some of these were members of the United Presbyterian church and some of the M. E. church. Every one of the Covenanters of the Blanchard church manifested a deep interest in the anti-secret society reform, and as Bro. M. A. Gault said of them,they "materialized well."

While here I preached at the Wilkinson schoolhouse, near Westboro,Mo. After finishing the canvass around Blanchard, I returned to Coin and preached in the U. P. and also in the M. E. churches.

I have taken one hundred and ten subscriptions to the Cynosure in Page county during this visit to southwest Iowa. This, with eighteen old subscribers, makes one hundred and twenty-eight Cynosures coming and to come to Page county. For Cynosures Page is the banner county of Iowa. If any reformer in Iowa knows of a county that would take more Cynosures than Page, let me know and I will come and work it up, and Page will gracefully surrender the banner.

The drouth was so severe in Page county last year that I have not tried to get large individual donations to the Iowa work in Page county this year. Fayette, Clay, Mills, Washington, Van Buren and Henry counties are in the lead of Page in respect to the amount of individual donations.

As we are behind in our cash receipts, allow me here to ask those who have not yet paid your subscriptions to the Iowa work or to the Cynosure to send the money for the same to the treasurer,James Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Jefferson Co., Iowa, as soon as you can. We don't want to urge any one to pay when it would inconvenience you to do so, but for the sake of the cause please bear it in mind and watch your opportunity and remit the amount of your subscription to Mr. Harvey as soon as you consistently can. Please bear it in mind and send in the money as fast as you can that the deficiency in our cash receipts may be made up.

C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Temperance work among our boys and girls—A lodge incident—A noble charity—What a single voter can do—Why the platform of the American party is always read.

The temperance outlook is steadily brightening in spite of "set-backs;" and one of the most encouraging indications is the number of Loyal Legions and Bands of Hope which are being started under the auspices of local unions all over New England. It is true that many of them die out, but who can measure the worth of even a few months of earnest temperance instruction at just the period when the heart is most impressible, and the dividing line between right and wrong has not yet been muddled by political sophistry and self-interest. Mrs. Helen G. Rice, the State Superintendent of juvenile work for Massachusetts, is one of the brightest speakers in the W. C. T. U. The writer has listened to her forceful appeals and her convincing logic, made more forcible and more convincing by her sweet, womanly face and gentle attractiveness of manner, and thanked God for the noble work she is doing among our children and youth. If it could be supplemented by some instruction in relation to the lodge, the Secret Empire would not find it so easy to seize upon every reform as soon as it becomes popular, in order to ride into power, generally riding the poor steed nearly if not quite to death by the time its goal is reached.

But the W. C. U. themselves greatly need to be enlightened on this subject. Their forty different departments of work show that they are fully alive to the importance of meeting their foe at every avenue of approach; and if they can once realize the truth that the lodge is the ally of the saloon and the one plays into the hands of the other, secrecy is doomed. An intelligent person can hardly fail to come across facts to prove this, unless he wilfully shuts his eyes, so abundant is such testimony all over the land. A very trustworthy woman who has been a hotel cook told me that at one hotel in Boston where she worked a Knight of Pythias was taken fatally ill, and a brother knight was deputed by the body to watch with him. When she came down in the morning she heard his labored breathing and went into the room. The man was dying, while his lodge brother lay in a drunken sleep from which it was impossible to arouse him, the bottle of liquor by his side telling the tale. And so the poor soul which had put its trust in the lodge instead of Christ met the king of terrors, with no hand to soothe his last agony, no voice to whisper holy words of comfort, and point him even at the last hour to the atoning cross. God save us from lodge salvation.

It is an unfortunate omen for society when wealth shows a disposition to accumulate in the hands of the few. At the same time one redeeming feature is the large and noble charities which are thus rendered possible. An instance has been lately given by Mrs. M. Day Kimball of Boston, a daughter of Gov. Marcus Morton, who has made a free gift of the magnificent homestead owned by her father in Taunton for a hospital, the gift being subject only to one condition,—that it should bear and thus perpetuate his name. The election of Gov. Morton was made memorable by the curious fact that he was elected by a plurality of only one vote, added to the still more singular fact that the Democratic party chose him year after year to lead its forlorn ranks in the old Bay State, until victory thus coyly perched at last upon their banners. The scale was turned by a single voter in the town of Meedway, who came to deposit his ballot just as the polls had closed, which happened to be two minutes before the time. Had he insisted, as he might have done, on his right to vote, Morton would not have been elected. To an incident seemingly as trivial we owe the Mexican war—that blotted page in our national history which no true American can read without a blush. In DeKalb county, Indiana, a doubtful voter, undecided whether or not to go to the polls, finally went and voted for the Democratic candidate for Congress, who was elected by a majority of one. This member, Mr. Hannegan, was president of the Senate pro tem when the vote was taken for the annexation of Texas. It was his casting vote which decided the tie and launched the South on its shameful career of conquest for the extension of the slave power. As we shall soon be on the eve of another Presidential election it is well to gather up some of these facts which prove how true it is that

"One east amiss
May blast the hope of Freedom's year."

The Maine Republicans have adopted a platform which has much to say about the tariff and other material issues, with a prohibitory clause sandwiched in between that would have a more refreshing sound had not Republican officials in that State gained such a reputation for non-enforcement of the law. The platforms of the old parties, the Democratic especially, are curiosities in the way of labored literary effort; for like that persistent talker we have all met and been bored with, the less they have to say the more words they take to say it in. I have never met with any one as yet, unwilling to take the time and pains to read the platform of the American party, and the reason is because it is such a model of brevity and directness. Compare it in these respects merely, letting alone its lofty standard of national morality, with the labored verboseness which characterizes the platforms of other parties, and it seems in its noble simplicity almost an inspiration. E. E. FLAGG.

IS MR. BROOKS ELIGIBLE?

PLEASANT PLAIN, Iowa.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—How and why did the Prohibition convention nominate an ex-rebel soldier for Vice President, since such are debarred from such office by law? Otherwise I doubt not he is a fit man.

As for the League, I have never favored the system of pledges, as they are, I believe, nine times out of ten, more or less premature, rash, and very liable to and generally do become somewhat of a hamper in the future. Even temperance pledges I have never had any faith in. They don't remove the cause, nor would they be any reliable stay to me. Temptation comes at a thoughtless or forgetful moment when no fore-given promise answers the purpose. Real and diligent watchfulness in prayer and obedience, making right the sole object and foundation of our motive and deed, is the only safe dependence for all.

I regret to hear of anti-leaguers going into leagues. I believe it is a misstep in that sense.

I have for years been thoroughly in favor of holding our own ticket always in the field, unless there may be such consistent men running on another reform ticket whom we can use and gain if possible a double advantage in, by and for the truth and the people. No policy will do but the undaunted and fearless truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. I think it is our sole duty to stand for and stand by, in religion and in politics, those principles which, if right, are inseparable and blend in one.

I am poor, but my faith in reform is my brightest earthly theme. I say by all means go on with all speed to the final and full salvation, and I am with you. AARON BURGESS.

A PROTEST FROM ARKANSAS.

PINE BLUFF, Ark., June, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—As an American citizen and a lover of freedom and a worshiper of the truth of all good things, I am constrained to write to you.

It seems to me that the North is losing that manhood and respect she once cherished and held so dear, in that she is willing to put any kind of declaration in her platforms of religion or politics in order to carry popular sentiment and to get votes. The Presbyterians have done much good in establishing schools and missions among the Negroes of the South and the North. So have the Methodists and the Baptists. But since they have succeeded in educating and training some few colored men and women, they now want to build their church-houses with a partition wall, so as to divide the "niggers" from the whites. In my judgment it would be better for all the white religious denominations to let the "niggers" alone and go on and take care of themselves, than to be continually stirring up such seditious strife as they have been for the last few months. The Negro has as much religion to the square inch as anybody; all he needs is to be so trained as to make use of his religion in a practical way. If they make this division here on earth, they cannot do it in heaven, and that is the place for which we all are striving. And the Negroes in mass know as well as the whites that the Bible teaches that God is no respecter of persons, and when the whites teach differently we have no confidence in their religion whatever.

There is something strange in the white man's religious code, i. e., he believes the Negro was made for menial, servile duty to him, and is nothing more than a serf, after all. But straws show which way the wind blows. The Republicans in New York State tell Mr. Sherman they cannot vote for him for President because he favors the Negroes of the South; and Mr. Powell Clayton of Arkansas says that the Negro should have been made the wards of the nation, and should not have been given the ballot.

Just think of Powell Clayton wanting the ballot taken away from the Negroes, when they, time and again, have done him honor in electing him, first to one high position and then another. No, as long as that class of men could use the Negro vote it was all right, and the Negro franchise was a boon to the Republican party; but as soon as the Democrats captured the South then it was an unwise measure. Fine statesmanship!

Now, Mr. Editor, life is too short for men to undertake such frivolous, foolish and selfish plans. Let justice rule the fate and destiny of every man, and let monopolies, tyrants, shysters, jay hawkers and religious hypocrites eternally go to the wall.

May God bless the Cynosure to stand against caste and all that hinders the promotion of our Lord's kingdom. A. M. MIDDLEBROOK.

PITH AND POINT.

CHRIST AGAINST ANTI-CHRIST IN THE UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH.

I believe it to be my calling, under God, more than any other one thing, to work in the cause of reform. Whenever we can help the cause in any way we shall do so, and ask God's blessing upon it in the name of Christ. We rejoice in the success that God has given Bro. Hinman in the South. We feel that success is attending the cause everywhere. We are sorry that so many United Brethren are being deceived with the anti-Christ of the lodge. The fight in that noble church is Christ against anti-Christ. Theological infidelity puts on a cloak of United Brethrenism to deceive this anti-secrecy church and cause her to cease her aggressive warfare against sin, and has caused some "men of brains" to even go back on the anti-slavery record made by God and his church. —CYRUS SMITH, DeKalb, Iowa.

GOOD USE FOR YOUR PAPERS.

As I see in the Cynosure very often the need of anti-secret literature so much needed in the South, and especially amongst the colored people and their preachers. I would suggest a plan to remedy that want and supply them abundantly. Mention two or three places in the South and let the subscribers of the Cynosure know, then we can surely send one-half our papers to one of these places. If we only send one-half it will cost but twenty-six cents. By so doing they can get the news at least in one week after we get the paper from the office. The other one half distribute about home, as the Cynosure is too valuable a paper to find its way in the old waste paper box. I think if we, the subscribers, would act on this plan, there might be very many souls saved. May God prosper the above, or any other plan to further on the anti secret cause.—PHILIP KRIBS, Lamertine, Pa.

LITERATURE.

THE HOLY LAND AND THE BIBLE. A book of Scripture illustrations gathered in Palestine. By Cunningham Geikie, D.D. In 2 vols, half morocco, price $3.00, postage, 32c. John B. Alden, New York.

If his previous works, "Hours with the Bible" and "Life and Words of Christ," had not secured it, this certainly should establish the reputation of Dr. Giekie as one of the most popular religious writers of the present day. Thompson, Oliphant, Stevens and others have given us so many accounts of the little section of the earth called Palestine that he must be a man of some confidence in himself who would venture another elaborate work before the public on this subject. But Dr. Gieke has made the effort and the world of Bible readers bless him for it. He gives a view of Palestine rich in style, vivid in its description and fresh and attractive as if we listened to the story from a traveler's own lips. Learned in critical scholarship as his previous volumes show he has been ever wary in a land covered as deep with traditions as are its buried villages, and few guides could be more safe in intricate and difficult places. As an instance of the value of his critical knowledge of the early history of the land he describes, it may be noticed that the limited extent and barren desolation of a great part of Palestine in modern times have often led to a belief of the exaggeration of biblical enumerations of population, and the apparently improbable number of "fenced cities" so frequently impressed upon us. But there is abundant evidence that, if not strictly accurate, the statements fairly illustrate the truth. We are startled at the enormous force here and there ascribed to the Jewish and Israelitish armies, but we have to remember that a Hebrew army represented almost the entire population capable of bearing arms. That that population was extremely dense, we may easily allow from a consideration of the undoubted change which has taken place in climatic conditions, and, by consequence, in the fertility of the soil. There is no doubt that in the days of the kings and earlier the Holy Land abounded in streams and brooks, and had a far greater rainfall than at present, and that this condition was due to the existence of forests and trees, which, having been destroyed by the ravages of war and the recklessness of uncultivated races, the country has shared the fate of all others to which this misfortune has befallen. Fertility and population assumed there need be no difficulty in crediting the number of cities, even in the absence of direct proof. But the direct proof is not wanting. Dr. Geikie only corroborates two or three other careful explorers, who have discovered the traces of fortified cities so thickly strewn over the country that their number and proximity seem almost incredible to the eye witness himself. No doubt these cities were not large, but the ruins of their foundations are cyclopean in solidity and plainly indicate that they must have been fortressess of great strength. Of the villages, which no doubt stood thickly interspersed between the walled cities, there is of course now no trace; indeed, it is difficult to fix with anything like certainty the sites of several mentioned in Scripture, and of some which are distinctly referred to as the scenes of important episodes.

The whole work cannot better be described than in the words of Dr. Geikie's preface: "The land is, in fact, a natural commentary on the sacred writings." It is, we believe, the most readable transcription of this commentary, if not the very best. It is worthy of a place in every home, by the side of the family Bible. An especially attractive feature of these volumes are the fine illustrations with which they are crowded. Aside from this general character of the book Dr. Geikie discusses, in the last chapter, the probability of the return of the Jews to their fatherland. He denies this probability in an argument of original interest and value.

The illustrated features of the Woman for June comprise the second installment of Olive Thorne Miller's series on "Representative Woman's Clubs," which discusses specifically the New England Woman's Club, the prototype, and, by about one month, the predecessor of the famous Sorosis, of New York, and concludes with an account of the Wisconsin Woman's Club of Milwaukee; an essay on the important subject of "Physical Culture for Our Girls," by Charles Richards Dodge, representing pictorially a variety of forms of physical exercise adapted to women; the second of Helen Campbell's thrilling account of "Prisoners of Poverty Abroad," in which the hard experiences of the London working poor are graphically depicted: a charming descriptive sketch of Scotch scenery, by Sarah L. Roys, entitled "Through Ayrshire with Burns;" besides a variety of minor articles. Special mention should be made of several important papers in this issue, such as Emma Haddock's discussion of "Women as Land Owners in the West," and Ella Rodman Church's valuable recommendations on "Harmonious House Interiors," which is replete with practical and wise suggestions. In similar manner the several departments of the magazine are also commended to our readers' attention, comprising "The Household," "The Table," "What to Wear," "Societies for Christian Work," "Temperance," and other themes, the significance of which is patent to every family.

The Missionary Review of the World for July is on our table in advance of all the other July monthlies. The cause of missions certainly has reason to rejoice in the establishment and marked success of such a monthly—in literary ability the peer of our secular monthlies, while in religious force and spirit of consecration to missions all that the most ardent friends of the cause can desire. Among the noteworthy articles in "Literature" section (eleven in all), we specially note "The Romance of Modern Missions," "The Great Commission," "Mission Problems and Work in Abyssinia," and "Miracles of Missions." The first is one of the most thrilling narratives ever written. We have also reports from nine societies, intensely interesting correspondence from nine important fields, the "International" pages. the Monthly Concert Service, the Monthly Bulletin, giving the latest news and facts from the whole world-field, and the Statistics of the World's Missions.

IN BRIEF.

The latest fad in social circles in Chicago is news classes among young ladies. A large party meets twice a week in the afternoon, and the teacher, a lady of great culture, discusses with them the news of the day. She takes a newspaper, and, selecting matter of foreign and domestic interest, discusses and explains them in a most entertaining manner, the members of the class asking questions and making comments and suggestions freely.—Educational News.

A New York man has made a small fortune of $25,000 in two months through an invention. He had often noticed the trouble which school children have in cleaning their slates, and he invented a little tin box, in the bottom of which is a small sponge saturated with water. In the center of the box he placed a piece of tin drilled with holes, and on top of this another small sponge. A pressure moistens the upper sponge, and the slate can be instantly cleaned. One firm of stationers purchased 10,000 gross of the little invention, and the lucky inventor hopes to become a millionaire.

A Connecticut man tells this story of a remarkable exhibition of nerve by a professional sneak thief: "One day he walked quietly into a bank, took off his hat and coat, hung them on a nail, put on an office coat that hung there and walked into the rear room which contained the vaults. The directors were holding a meeting, and one sat in front of the door, blocking the passage. The thief politely asked him to move, and when the obliging director did so, the man went through the door, picked up two of the largest bags of gold in sight, coolly walked out with them, and thief and gold were seen no more there."

A Youngstown, Ohio, dispatch of June 11, says: "Nannie Evans, the ten-year-old stage prodigy, daughter of Owen Evans, hotel proprietor, had her vocal chords paralyzed seven months ago, after overtaxing them singing in large halls, and has not spoken above a whisper since. Eminent physicians to whom she has been taken pronounced her incurable. Yesterday, during a hard thunder-storm, she was sitting at an open window holding a silver half-dollar; there were two loud claps of thunder, and a moment after the little girl called to her mother, in her natural voice, to take the piece of money. To-day she is a little weak, but can talk and sing as well as ever."

A relic of the Revolution has been offered to Mr. Morrill, of the Senate Library Committee, which is worthy of preservation. A youth in the Pension Office brought it to the attention of General Black. It is the original document given to pass Major Andre through the American lines when Benedict Arnold had resolved to betray West Point into the hands of the British. The pass is signed by Arnold as Major-General, and is countersigned by General Gage. The possessor is a direct descendent of Paulding, one of the scouts that arrested Andre when he attempted to pass the picket under the name of Anderson. This document, if its authenticity is established beyond question, ought to be preserved in the archives of the nation.

The first article of the "Railway Series" in Scribner's Magazine is entitled "The Building of a Railway," and it contains much valuable information, new to the public in general, and of interest to everybody. In this article the following questions are answered:

How many miles of railway in the United States? One hundred and fifty thousand, six hundred miles, about half the mileage of the world.

How much have they cost? Nine billion dollars.

How many people are employed by them? More than one million.

What is the fastest time made by a train? Ninety-two miles in ninety-three minutes, one mile being made in forty-six seconds on the Philadelphia and Reading railroad.

What is the cost of a high-class, eight-wheel passenger locomotive? About $8,500.

What is the longest mileage operated by a single system? Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe system—about 8,000 miles.

What is the cost of a palace sleeping car? About $15,000 to $17,000 if "vestibuled."

What is the longest railway bridge span in the United States? Cantilever span in Poughkeepsie bridge, 548 feet.

What is the highest railroad bridge in the United States? Kinzua viaduct, on the Erie road, 305 feet high.

Who built the first locomotive in the United States? Peter Cooper.

What road carries the largest number of passengers? Manhattan Elevated railroad, New York—525,000 a day, or 191,625,000 yearly.

What is the average daily earning of an American locomotive? About $100.

What is the longest American railway tunnel? Hoosac tunnel, on the Fitchburg railway—4¾ miles.

What is the average cost of constructing a mile of railroad? At the present time about $30,000

What is the highest railroad in the United States? Denver and Rio Grande; Marshall Pass, 10,852 feet.

What are the chances of fatal accident in railway travel? One killed in ten million. Statistics show more are killed by falling out of windows than in railway accidents.

What line of railway extends furthest east and west? Canadian Pacific railway, running from Quebec to the Pacific Ocean.

How long does a steel rail last with average wear? About eighteen years.

What road carries the largest number of commuters? Illinois Central, 4,828,128 in 1887.

What is the fastest time made between Jersey City and San Francisco? Three days, seven hours, thirty-five minutes and sixteen seconds. Special theatrical train, June, 1886.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla operates radically upon the blood, thoroughly cleansing and invigorating it. As a safe and absolute cure for the various disorders caused by constitutional taint and infection, this remedy has no equal. Take it this month.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont:—One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?

Philo Carpenter:—This saint of God (Moses Stuart) like the old prophets, was satisfied with the institutions and ordinances of God's house, and consequently did not give his influence or aid in supplementing the same with human ordinances and worldly alliances; in other words, he was opposed to secret, oath-bound societies, into which many good men, and even clergymen, have been, and are being "ensnared."

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellowmen."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

General J. W. Phelps:—All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 28, 1888.

INDEPENDENCE DAY.—Charles Sumner gave us a theme for our Fourth of July number, which is better for being early, as it in turn may be a suggestion for some profitable thoughts upon that day. There are unhappy marks of degeneration upon our national holiday. Let us by the consideration of such principles as are discussed in this number of the Cynosure—the deliverance of our good land from the evils of war, the saloon, the lodge, and forgetfulness of God—help to restore the day to its pristine glory.

THE ROAR OF THE LOCUSTS continues. They are the harmless bag-pipers of invisible armies whom God sends for the sins of men. We next week will give a curious and interesting theory by a keen observer, Mr. Roswell Dow, which appears in the Sycamore, Ill., City Weekly.

OUR ANNUAL MEETING, reported in this number, should be scanned with care. It was interesting and important and lively, but its conclusions were generally unanimous. Our Washington matters never looked so well as now. Secretary Stoddard's work there gives good satisfaction. He has headed our cause up stream, and Prof. Bailey's evangelizing work is working finely. But whoever expects the lodge-cancers to be extracted from this leading nation of the world without a mighty struggle, self-denial, and even suffering, mistakes this world altogether. Look over the false worships of the Bible and see what it costs to root one up. "We WRESTLE not with flesh and blood but with principalities," etc.

POLITICS.

It took twenty-eight solid years of hard fighting, that is, from 1832 to 1865 to force the discussion of slavery before the American people, so that no newspaper could blink it, sneer at it, or wholly, silently ignore it. If an editor took up the slavery discussion in earnest, he was liable to lose from one-half to the whole of his list of subscribers; so that almost an entire new set of prints had to be produced before slavery and its abolition could get a hearing. It has taken ten years longer to force the liquor question into the American press. And, even now, the two parties, whose conventions represent the whole forty-five American States and territories, endeavor to blink and ignore the liquor issue. The Democrats did not dare even to put a "sumptuary legislation—personal liberty" plank in their platform, but contented themselves with "reaffirming" a former platform which had that plank in it; which they do not now care to repeat for fear of the rising anti-liquor sentiment.

The Republican platform, after the platitudes of politics, reaffirming "our unswerving devotion to the Union and Constitution," challenge our support "by its fealty to tariff for protection;" as if every tariff did not "protect" the article on which the tariff is laid, by keeping out foreign competition, and produce "revenue" to support government. And no party has ever existed which seriously proposed to pay the expenses of government by direct taxes without a tariff. To avoid a surplus revenue the platform proposes to repeal the tariff on tobacco; but says not one word on the liquor question, which now agitates the people from the capes of Florida to those of Alaska. It needs no doctors' diagnosis to learn that such parties are moribund. Conscientious and patriotic men will soon leave them, as New York "barn-burners" left the Democratic party under Van Buren in 1848; anti-Texas men, under John P. Hale in 1852; and under David Wilmot soon after. And they, and the Sumner and Wilson Anti-slavery Whigs, formed the Republican party in 1856 under Fremont.

These old parties thus winnowed by new issues contained only the debris or faculum of politics, consisting of office-seekers and bummers.

The nucleus of the new reform party is already well under way. The Indianapolis Convention of the Prohibitionists was a stupendous meeting. They were wrought up to the highest pitch of enthusiasm without any hope or expectation of electing their candidate next fall: which shows that they are what the Republican party once was, the "Party of Principle." They fear God and love men. The secret temperance lodges are their only stumbling-blocks. But the death of John B. Finch has left the leadership of the secret wing of the Prohibitionists in the hands of a few men of moderate stature and parts; and the woman's ballot issue only produced a jar in the movement of the great convention. But twenty-eight protested against it while a full thousand voted in its support.

The Americans voted for St. John and Daniel four years ago; and we need only to continue to reach the Prohibitionists with facts and arguments to induce the entire body to adopt the whole American platform, as they have already adopted our recognition of God, the Sabbath, and the Bible as the standard of law and morals. This we shall do.

Gov. St. John, Gen. Fisk, and Miss Frances E. Willard, with their compeers, openly declare their conviction against the lodge, and these are "the First Three" in the Prohibition army.

On the whole, American politics was never in a more hopeful condition than at present. Slavery confronted the fathers of '76. Reconstruction threatened our peace after slavery fell. But the lodge and liquor are the last hope of the devil. These gone, and our national sky is clear.

"HEATHEN POPE BOB."

The numerous candidates before the Republican National Convention were, as might be expected, no aid to its harmonious action. Sherman's strength was greatest, but his adherents were no more persistent than the backers of Blaine, Alger, Harrison and Gresham. The latter, though properly from Indiana, was endorsed by Illinois, and all the local influence in Chicago was thrown in his favor. The great Republican dailies here have urged his claims with great force. A large procession of workingmen, numbering thousands, each carrying a tin dinner-pail, marched through the streets Thursday evening to create a demonstration in favor of the able judge of the United States Court who daily attended to his work and let the convention take care of itself. Had he interfered Friday evening he might have prevented an unhappy reminiscence. The Convention hall was literally packed that evening. The local politicians had done their work and thousands were going in without tickets until the delegates could hardly pass the door.

Business was begun and a speech by Depew, withdrawing his name, seemed about to precipitate a stampede to Harrison. To prevent this his opponents carried, amid greatest confusion, an adjournment. The shouts of the galleries prevented the announcement of the vote. A large proportion of delegates were leaving and the chairman himself left his place and gave over the meeting to the crowd. The Chicago men brought forward R G. Ingersoll and he was heard for a time with patience until he gave his voice for Gresham, when a storm of applause followed by yells of opposition which he could not quiet; and he slunk back out of sight with the satisfaction of knowing that he had destroyed all hopes of his favorite. Disorder reigned until the meeting dispersed, and about the hotels was heard the derisive shout, "What's the matter with Gresham?" "Who knocked him out?" "Heathen Pope Bob."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bro. R. N. Countee writes that he hopes tocome North for rest and recuperation soon.

—The independent church of Washington Heights, Ill., of which Rev. E. R. Worrell, of the N. C. A. Board has been acting pastor, has sent out invitations for a council to ordain him formally to the pastorate, to meet this week.

—Pres. L. N. Stratton, of Wheaton Theological Seminary, has been in poor health for several weeks past, yet has attended to his regular duties. He has gone East hoping to regain strength while visiting the New York churches.

—Rev. E. B. Graham of the Midland, Omaha, though a Prohibitionist, felt the attractions of Chicago and a great convention, and was here in time to see Benjamin Harrison nominated. His brief call on the Cynosure made us wish for more.

—Mr. J. B. Hobbs, candidate of the Prohibition and American party for Governor of Illinois in 1884, lately gave $25,000 for the erection of a building for Dearborn Observatory, which was removed with its great telescope to the Northwestern University on the closing out of the Chicago University several years ago. Mr. Hobbs had the pleasure of laying the corner-stone of the new building last week with appropriate but un-masonic ceremonies.

A characteristic story is told of Rev. Myron Reed, pastor of the First Congregational church, Denver, Freemason and "hale fellow," who two years ago ran as the Democratic Congressional candidate in Colorado. It seems that during the canvass he was interrupted in the midst of a public prayer by a man who shouted, "Louder!" Reed stopped short, looked at the interrupter and said coolly: "I wasn't addressing you, sir. I was addressing the Almighty." Then he went on with his prayer. If it should be that this story is true the Masonic lodge must be credited with the irreverence as it was in that school that Mr. Reed learned to insult Jehovah.

—What says Van Buren county, Iowa, to the challenge from Page?

—There was no hiss in the Prohibition Convention this year, when secret societies were condemned by Mr. Tate of Tennessee. Next time we hope to hear such a sentiment received with applause.

—Among the standing committees of the Reformed Presbyterian church is one on Secret Societies, of which Rev. David McFall of Boston is chairman When all the churches shall have such a committee the end of the lodge is near.

—The Living Way of last week announces that the corner-stone of the Memphis Baptist Bible Normal School will be laid Thursday, Juue 28th, about four o'clock. Every church in the city is asked to send the names of the pastors and officers to be deposited accompanied with $5.00. Individuals may deposit their names for 25 cents each.

—On Monday afternoon a meeting was held in the W. C. T. U. hall in Wheaton for the Anti-secrecy League movement, at which addresses were to be given by brethren J. P. and W. B. Stoddard, H. H. Hinman and L. G. Jordan of Texas. As we cannot get a report of it until the forms are ready for press, our readers are asked to wait for it.

THE N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

By arrangement with the members of the Board present at the annual meeting the first meeting of the new Board was held on Saturday morning. There were present brethren Thomson, Barlow, Gardner, C. A. Blanchard, Milton, Chittenden, Fischer and Worrell. After prayer by Rev. H. H. Hinman, permanent organization was completed by the election of Alex. Thomson as president; G. R. Milton, vice-president; E. R. Worrell, secretary.

The resignation of M. R. Britten was presented and accepted, and John Sutcliffe, who was present, was elected to the vacancy. The following standing committees were elected:

On Finance: H. A. Fischer, John Sutcliffe and E. R. Worrell.

On Buildings: W. I. Phillips, J. P. Stoddard and Alexander Thomson.

On Publication: L. N. Stratton, H. L. Kellogg, and J. L Barlow.

It was voted to refer the Treasurer's bond to the Financial committee.

At this point the General Secretary commended the Board to prayer and Elder Barlow was called upon to lead in the devotion.

The question of the salaries of the different employes of the Association was considered, and the treasurer was directed to pay the same amounts as last year to the editors, publisher and agents.

In regard to the Washington work it was voted that the General Agent should continue for the present the work now begun in the capital. It was further voted, after some discussion, that the matter of securing a permanent agent for the Washington district be referred to the General Agent and the Committee on Publications who should act together in their inquiries.

The enlargement of the Southern work was considered at some length. Some desired that immediate steps should be taken to raise funds for the establishment of a New Orleans headquarters; others that there should be an enlargement of the Southern work in other directions before a district agent should be there located. The Southern Agent was anxious to engage in this work at once. It was finally voted that Bro. Hinman be directed to spend the summer months in lecture work, raising a fund meantime to enlarge the work at the South and establish a depository there.

It was settled that the Board should hold meetings once every three months, beginning on the last Thursday in July, other special meetings to be held at the call of the chairman and secretary.

W. B. Stoddard, Ohio agent, spoke of the gratitude of the Ohio Association for the aid granted by the N. C. A. in carrying on its work, and requested that 25 per cent be allowed on the renewals to the Cynosure subscriptions taken during the past year to make up a deficiency in his salary. The request was granted and the arrangement was voted to be continued in the future with all the State agents.

It was also voted to instruct such State agents as are paid in part by the N. C. A. to make every proper effort to organize counties in permanent associations.

The Board adjourned after prayer.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON.

The twenty-eighth anniversary of Wheaton College was ushered in by the usual preliminary class meetings, literary society meetings, etc. The entertainment given by the Conservatory of Music on Saturday evening, June 16th, was a fine exhibition of the skill of Prof. Harris's pupils.

On Sabbath morning the Baccalaureate sermon was preached by ex-President J. Blanchard from the texts Isaiah 5:13, "Therefore, my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge;" and John 17:3, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." The address urged an obedient understanding of the law of God in Christ, that the world might be delivered from the fictions by which priests, lodges and despots have controlled the people. In the evening the missionary discourse by Rev. J. Wyckoff, State Evangelist of the Home Missionary Society, on "The World's Exodus," was an earnest plea for Christian self-sacrifice for the salvation of the world.

The address of Rev. Dr. Trowbridge of Aurora before the Art School Monday afternoon was an agreeable conclusion to a year of excellent and profitable work by that branch of the institution under the charge of Mrs. S. H. Nutting.

Tuesday the Board of Trustees held their annual meeting. L. N. Stratton and Roswell Dow were re-elected, their time having expired. Rev. Wm. Pinkney was elected to take the place of Mr. Breckenridge, deceased. The only change in the Faculty was occasioned by the resignation of the Lady Principal, Miss Hulbert, whose just and gentle rule during the two years past has endeared her to the whole institution. The treasurer reported donations and legacies amounting to over $10,000 during the year, for the building fund, endowments, and general expenses. There was still something short in the latter, some $340 being needed to pay all salaries and have no debt.

The meeting of the Alumni Association met in the afternoon for the annual reunion and was marked by large attendance and abundant good fellowship. Among the distinguished guests of the Association was Pres. H. H. George, D. D., of Geneva College, Pa. Brief addresses from a number of the alumni formed the literary exercises of the evening.

The exercises of the graduating day were highly favored both by nature and art. A more delightful June day there could not be, and within the College Hall tasteful decorations met the eye. Flags, portraits, statuary, were arranged with charming skill, intermingled with abundance of flowers, water-lilies prevailing. Lyon's fine orchestra, well known to the frequenters of Farwell Hall, Chicago, was ready to attend the entrance of the Faculty and Trustees with a stirring march and to discourse attractive music during the exercises.

The opening prayer by Rev. Dr. George, was an earnest appeal, moving all hearts by its plea for fellowship among colleges which stood for Christ against the world's evils.

The opening oration was by the only lady of the class, Miss Jessie Clare Beach of Ashton, Ill., who, like the gifted Helen Hunt Jackson, chose the Indian for this her greatest public effort. She chose well and honored the humane sentiment that inspired "Romona".

William L Enlow of Birmingham, Iowa, spoke on "Pilate's Question." He reviewed in a conscientious manner the characters and occasions which raise the question, "What is Truth?"

George A. Conrad of Grinnell, Iowa, spoke on "Expediency," a term of which he is far from being an exponent, any more than were the Calebs and Joshuas of an elder day who feared not the giants that guarded the Eshcol of the promised land.

"Our Sabbath" was a good theme, finely treated in an earnest address by Arthur E. Northrup of Wheaton.

James Parsons of Harmon, Ill., spoke on "Socialism," and though this topic has in all its various phases been widely discussed for two years past, his ideas and their presentation were fresh and well appreciated.

A. Burton Stratton gave play to a strong imagination in an oration on "Milestones", which kept the audience rather in mind of the time and place than the other topics discussed by the class.

Franklin F. Ames of Menominee, Wisconsin, dealt with "Imperial England" for her treatment of the Irish demand for home rule; not forgetting how much civilization and republican constitutional government owes also to English history. To his valedictory address to the trustees, faculty, and the class the audience listened with breathless interest.

The class of 1885 furnished one of their most illustrious representatives for the Master's Oration, which was spoken by Rev. E. R. Worrell of Washington Heights. His topic, "The Tendencies of Modern Education," was an ably considered and well-spoken vindication of conscience and Christian morality in all processes of education.

President C. A. Blanchard conferred the degrees and Rev. Mr. Abbott of Geneva pronounced the benediction.

Lyon's Orchestra, assisted by Mrs. Goetz, a soloist who captivated every listener, gave a fine concert in the evening preceding the annual President's levee.

Wheaton Theological Seminary graduated this year a class of three on Monday evening, June 18: W. H. Clatworthy, G. H. Croker and John Croker. Their graduating addresses were heard by a fine audience. The annual sermon before the Seminary was preached by Rev. William Pinkney, president of the Illinois Wesleyan Conference. His theme was the preparation and qualifications of the Gospel minister, and his earnest and practical address grew eloquent as he closed with a fervid appeal that the gracious work of the Holy Spirit should take the first place in all preparation for Christian work.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

—Commencement at Geneva College occurred May 24. A class of twenty graduated, all of whom pronounced an oration. Thirteen received from Dr. George the degree of B. A., and seven were from the scientific course. The whole anniversary at Geneva continued a week and was an occasion of varied and unalloyed enjoyment. Dr. George preached the Baccalaureate sermon from 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17, on the necessity of Bible study to a perfect manhood.

—Dr. Newton Batemen, president of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., after informing the Board of Trustees in his annual report last Tuesday that 514 students had attended the college during the year, and that the tuition receipts had increased $1,500, tendered his resignation, to take effect July 1, ill-health being the cause. Major R. W. McClaughrey, warden of the penitentiary at Joliet, Ill., and a graduate of Monmouth, is suggested as Dr. Bateman's successor. It is thought that his great executive ability would greatly increase the attendance at Knox; but the great work he is carrying forward in reforming penal institutions would suffer a corresponding loss.

The king of Popo (Dahomey) writes to Rev. Bryan Roe, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society: "Since my accession to the throne of my fathers, I have always had it in mind to confer with you regarding the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ which your committee in England have sent to this country and which myself and the sons of my people have joyfully accepted.... I have granted a piece of land to the Wesleyan Mission, and on it I intend myself to build a church for the above mission and for the glory of God in this country. This subject is the foremost one in my mind amidst the storms of difficulties I am called upon to pass through, and by God's grace I will do it."—Missionary Review.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

With one-third of our law makers at the Chicago convention and the other two-thirds attending chiefly to the bulletins which give the news from that city, legislative business is not brisk on Capitol Hill. Still Congress pretends to be at work on the appropriation bills, and these measures are provoking a great deal of wrangling, as they always do. The Sundry Civil bill, for instance, always contains a dozen or two bones of contention, and it has been before the House for the past week. There is something of a fight over almost every item that it contains, and there was quite a sharp discussion over another appropriation asked for the National Library building now in course of erection east of the Capitol.

Congress voted more than a year ago for a new Congressional Library and appropriated $3,000,000 for the same. It was considered quite a victory for the cause of public education and liberal statesmanship when, after a struggle of ten or twelve years, authority was obtained to begin building operations. The ground was purchased and cleared of the buildings upon it, excavations were made and the footing laid. But the claim is made that the original estimate for the building was $3,000,000 only, whereas it is now evident that the cost will amount to $7,000,000, and by a vote of more than two to one it has been decided to stop work on the structure, dissolve the board, repeal the first act, and then have the Senate and House committees together agree upon some plan for the Library that will not exceed the expenditure of $3,000,000.

The Democratic Congressmen who attended the St. Louis National Convention had scarcely settled themselves in their seats again when the Republican members left for their convention in Chicago. All is not well with Congress during Presidential campaigns. Legislation suffers because of the absence of members, and those who remain cannot debate any question without interlarding it with campaign talk, entirely irrelevant to the subject.

While the District Police bill was lately under consideration, Representative Struble of Iowa arraigned the majority in Congress for giving no attention to the demands for temperance legislation, declaring that it was prohibition or substantial restriction of the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia that was needed more than increased police or police facilities. The committee to which the temperance bills had been referred was attacked by Mr. Dingley for its remissness in not having reported back these measures. He said the arrests for drunkenness in the State of Maine were not more than one-tenth the number of such arrests in the District. The District Committee was defended by Mr. Rowell, one of its members, who said it had had all the work it could do, and that it had been deprived by the tariff bill of five days to which it was justly entitled to for the disposal of its business. Mr. Campbell, the chairman of the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic Committee, said his bills would have been acted upon but for the failure to get a quorum of his committee. In the question of prohibition, he said his committee was awaiting the action of the Senate Committee.

One of the pleasantest sights of the capital is the Gospel Wagon. It is a church on wheels, and is one of the agencies used by the workers of the Union Mission. Every Sabbath it passes from one point to another where preaching services are held, and nearly every evening it carries Christian workers on their evangelistic trips. Different churches in the city are interested in the work of the Mission, and their representatives take part in the meetings and assist in the missionary efforts that are being made. Representatives of a number of the churches have some one evening in the week when they take charge of the Gospel Wagon, and conduct the services at the several localities in the city where the services are held. The purpose is to reach the class of people who do not go to church and who have no church connections. The church is in this way brought to them. The chief field of operation for the wagon is the outskirts of the city. It is twenty feet long by seven feet wide and six and one-half feet high. The wheels are low and of the same size, so that the box can turn on them, and all of the running gear is unusually large and strong, having been made to order just for the purpose. When on its way to meeting, the wagon, drawn by four horses, looks like a new kind of excursion vehicle. When it stops for a meeting it is quickly transformed into a comfortable little pulpit and choir platform, with the organist ready to play and the leaders and singers standing in front. *

THE HOME.

NATION BY THE PILGRIMS PLANTED.

Nation, by the Pilgrims planted,
In their weakness, faint and few,
Braving Western wilds, undaunted,
Founding here an empire new,
Gird thee for thy sacred mission,
Take thy place in freedom's van,
Rise, to equal thy commission,
Stand for God, and truth and man.

Nation, heir of all the ages,
Called to scepter in such time,
Fire of prophet, light of sages,
Guide thee on thy path sublime:
Once, earth's eyes were on thee gazing,
When her cheeks for thee grew pale;
Now, thy grand achievements praising,
Glad, she greets thee. Hail, all hail!

Nation, by rich blood defended,
Shed on many a hard fought field,
Where thy realm shall be extended,
Be the Saviour's sign revealed:
Let his cross above thy banner,
Build his kingdom up the first!
Till with shoutings of hosanna,
Glory on the world shall burst.

May thy laws, O great Jehovah,
Ever be the nation's guide;
Her, thy wings in battle cover,
And in peace from peril hide:
Like the voice of either ocean,
Making each to each reply:
May the sound of her devotion,
East and west, mount up on high!

WILLIAM TAYLOR AS PEACEMAKER.

A late paper, in giving an account of one of Bishop Taylor's journeys in the region of the Congo, has a pleasing incident to narrate concerning how he made peace between two tribes which were at war with each other.

The Bishop, with a small unarmed party, had left Pungo Andongo for Malange, sixty-two miles to the eastward. Malange is the easternmost of the Methodist mission stations. On the morning of the third day, the travelers were met by two natives bearing spears, who came from the near-at-hand town of Mambalungo. After the interchange of a few words the two natives set off rapidly in the direction of the aforesaid town, the Bishop's party following.

Soon the king came, attended by a body-guard of one hundred soldiers, armed for combat. His towns were at war with those of another tribe, a battle being any day expected. The bishop without hesitation stepped up to the king, and extending his hand to royalty, said, as he did so, "I am glad to meet you." The king responded that he had heard of the old white man, well-digger, long-walker, who speaks kind words, and wished to know what he proposed to do in that country. The bishop assuring him of the pacific and disinterested sentiments of himself and his people, and that he came amongst them for their good, the king then continued: "We have heard that the men of Kumbua are coming to make war upon us. They lie between here and Malange. You will not venture to continue your journey before we have defeated them and brought about a peace?"

"Yes, O king," replied the bishop. "I shall go on as soon as I can. I am a friend to the people of Mambalungo and their king, but I am also a friend to the Kumbuans and their king likewise. There is no danger for me from them any more than there is danger from you. There is One above me to guard and protect me."

"The white man's God is indeed very powerful," assented the king gravely, "and the white man speaks bravely and frankly. None other would I permit to pass from our town to the arm of the Kumbuans. I believe you are my friend, and I will show you that I am yours."

Thereupon, the king calling his chief lieutenant, the ceremony of "blood brotherhood" between him and the Bishop was gone through with.

The next morning Bishop Taylor pushed on, but it was not until within an hour of noon that any signs of the Kumbuans were seen. A small party of warriors was then met, who proved to be an outpost of the advancing enemy. At first sight of the Bishop's carriers, the warriors fired a volley of arrows, with the result that one poor fellow fell with a shaft sticking into his breast. The warriors had not seen the white man. When they did so, they pressed forward, the Bishop and the trembling carriers awaiting them. They explained that though they had come from Mambalungo and its king, they were also the friends of the Kumbuans and their king. The captain of the attacking party was disturbed, and said he would at once despatch a message to the king's camp. The latter proved to be but two miles distant. The party was received by a detachment of perhaps two hundred men, and escorted silently to the king's tent. It was evident at once that the war upon Mambalungo was more of a foraging expedition than an attempt at conquest. The camp had been pitched several days, and on every hand were evidences of good living and the accumulation of contraband goods of various descriptions. There were heaps of ivory, utensils taken apparently from villages that had been destroyed, a few captives, articles of food and the like. From appearances the whole army might muster a thousand men. The Bishop was conducted, after a short pause, into the presence of the king, and stood with folded arms and awaited advances.

"White man," said the king, "you are welcome, although you come from Mambalungo."

"Kumbaloa," responded the bishop coldly, "I came from Mambalungo, it is true, and I came as a friend to the Kumbuans. See what your men have done to me," and he pointed outside, where the wounded carrier lay on the litter. The king was evidently disturbed.

"White man," he continued, "if what you say is true, then it is a bad day for the mighty Kumbaloa and his nation. If, indeed, we have injured a friend, it bodes little good for our war. But tell me, what do ye in this land?"

Then the Bishop explained, as he had to the king of Mambalungo, the purpose of his mission. Kumbaloa was gravely impressed. He gave an order to an officer who stood by, and then addressed the Bishop.

"White man, I believe that you come as a friend to Kumbaloa. It is a bad thing that we have done to you and we must atone for it or withdraw from our war upon Mambalungo."

He stood for some moments in thought. The Bishop was inclined to argue that the war be abandoned, but he considered it best to wait developments. Presently the officer returned leading a large detachment of men, and in front was the party that comprised the outpost that had attacked the bishop. The king looked up and said: "See, white man, there are the men who injured you. They shall all be put to death."

The Bishop raised his hand quickly and exclaimed: "No, Kumbaloa, the mighty, not so. The death of these will not atone. I want no one killed. Let them live, and do you and your army go back to your own country and live in peace."

"Tell me," he said, "did the people of Mambalungo seem prepared for war?"

"They are thoroughly prepared," replied the Bishop, "and will meet you with a great force."

"We could destroy them utterly," insisted the king, "but one can do nothing against the desires of the gods, especially if the white man's fetich has been offended. Be it so; we will go to our own country and wait a year. But for you, white man, we will supply a strong guard to take the place of your man. Men will carry you and him to Malange."

The rest of the day accordingly was spent in the camp of the Kumbuans, and on the following morning the bishop set out again, this time with a large party of attendants. He refused to be carried, however, and walked as before. When he arrived at the borders of Malange the escort stopped and bade him farewell. They went off to the northwest towards their own district, and the Bishop made his way into Malange with the assistance of some natives, who were working in a banana field near by.

Arrangements for the mission station were soon completed. The Bishop stayed in the town, working hard on the buildings and the land of the station until his co-workers came. They reported that the people of Mambalungo had disarmed and gone about their ordinary occupations, and that they gave the most extravagant praise to the bishop for bringing the little war to an end. No sign of the Kumbuans had been seen, except the marks of their old encampment.—Messenger of Peace.

The department of temperance work among foreigners has published leaflets in the German, French, Italian, Bohemian, Scandinavian, Hollandish, Polish, Spanish, Chinese and Portuguese languages.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children says that in the past three months, of 600 children coming before the society for the first time, 249 had intemperate fathers, 139 intemperate mothers, 152 had lost one or both parents, 90 had a parent in prison, and 35 were illegitimate.

THE FRAULEIN VON MEYER.

A FOURTH OF JULY STORY.

When you remember that in Germany every young man is obliged to serve a certain time in the army whether he likes it or not, then you may realize the freedom of our country, and you will appreciate the blessings we have here. I tell you the story, so that you may learn to appreciate the freedom in America from knowing the restraints of other governments.

The Frau Von Meyer had but recently taken up her abode in the city of Frankfort. She did not feel quite at home, and was as yet a stranger to her neighbors. As she was of a social and friendly nature, her loneliness depressed her; but this was not the sorrow which weighed upon her spirits and caused her kindly blue eyes to fill with tears as she sat looking wearily into the street in the early twilight. She was depressed because her two grown sons, handsome young fellows, had gone to America to avoid the years of service in the army required from young men of their age in Germany. They had not dared to say farewell to her, for that would have been to involve her in the consequences of their action. Even as it was, she had been brought up before the magistrates in her former home, but as she could truthfully say that she knew not where her sons were, and that she had nothing to do with their going, she was allowed to return unmolested to her lonely house. It was, however, this action on the part of the magistrates that made her determine to leave, and to seek in another city a residence less full of sad memories and painful associations.

As she sat there she was thinking of her Carl, how handsome he looked as he leaned over her bed the night he left and said, "Gute nacht, gute nacht, liebe mutter?" "good night, good night, dear mother." Then Teodore had come and put his arms about her neck, and there were tears in his eyes also as he kissed her—kissed her so tenderly—for he was her youngest, her baby, as she had but recently called him. Alas, that he too should go! He had laid his hand on her head—her hair was getting gray now—and patted her softly, caressingly, and he, too, said, "Good night, good night, dear mother," and their tears mingled. Ah, she knew full well what it meant, although no word was spoken.

She had raised five sons to manhood, and in the advancing years in which she had looked for their companionship and comfort she sat alone. One son had been taken by death; she had mourned for him, cut off in his youth, but it seemed a more bitter sorrow to her when the next two were compelled by the law of Germany to leave her and enter the army. Now, when the two left to her would have been obliged to follow in the career of their brothers, they had taken the matter in their own hands and had gone to that fair country across the sea where liberty stands smiling and beckoning those who want to control their own career and select their vocation. So she sat pondering over it all with heavy heart and tearful eyes, as she had done many a time before.

Suddenly there seemed to be more than ordinary bustle around the corner of the quiet street in which she had rented rooms. A man rushed past her window; without knocking he entered the narrow hallway, and without waiting to ask permission he lifted the latch and entered the room where she sat. He had a frightened look—she could see that even in the faint twilight; and he was young—it was still easier to see that; but neither of these facts touched her; it was the words in which he appealed to the mother heart. "Mother, mother, hide me!" he cried.

Feeling as she did at that moment, could she turn over that young deserter from the army (for she saw that he was such), to the hands of his pursuers? Even then she heard voices without, and knew that the approaching footsteps would soon be at her door. Nay, an appeal to motherhood could never be refused by the loving heart of Frau Von Meyer. With but one sigh at the thought of the punishment that would follow harboring a deserter if discovered, she asked no question but hid him quickly, and then turned to open the door, for one clad in the uniform of the Emperor's soldiers knocked for admission.

The tall and dignified lady, who so quickly opened the door with no apparent hesitation, for a moment abashed the man without. But presently others came up and demanded in rough tones to see the deserter who had disappeared somewhere in this direction.

The Frau Von Meyer made no opposition to their searching her premises. Her apparent unconcern had its effect. They made a show of entering her room; she seemed unmoved and placed no obstacle in their way. She would neither affirm nor yet deny that she had seen one enter; she appeared merely as a proud lady indignant at their intrusion.

"We're losing time," exclaimed one. "The fellow will hide while we waste the minutes here," exclaimed another, and with that they noisly departed.

Frau Von Meyer seated herself at the window as before until the excitement had subsided and the street had returned to its accustomed quiet.

If she had not hesitated to stand between the young soldier and his pursuers on first seeing him, still less did she hesitate when she heard his story. He looked so young, so young, like her own Teodore. He was so handsome, fair and blue eyed like a girl, this poor lad, and he was so homesick, pining to see father and mother, and—ach—he could not stand it, he had ran away. Would she betray him now that he was in her power? No, lad, no. For the sake of the two who had left their farewell tears on her cheek she would not, she could not betray the soldier lad.

For days the shelter, the food and the hiding-place were given, but it was not so much the desire to leave the army as it was most intense homesickness that had caused the young soldier to desert. The Frau felt that as soon as all suspicion was allayed she might arrange for his departure.

It was about this time that the Frau Von Meyer announced that she was expecting a visit from a niece of hers, the Fraulein Von Meyer, who, not long after, made her appearance as a tall, broad-shouldered young lady. She said that she could only stay a day or two, as she expected to visit some other relatives who lived beyond Wilhelmsbad. She was certainly a very quiet visitor, for she never seemed to care about gadding along the streets of the city in open-eyed wonder, as many young ladies do while visiting friends.

When the Frau Von Meyer announced to the few neighbors whose acquaintance she had made that on the next day the Fraulein was to return home, they regretted for her sake that this interesting young lady should feel obliged to leave so soon, and said many polite little nothings, such as people under the circumstances feel constrained to say.

There was constant anxiety, however, in the mind of Frau Von Meyer, for a few doors from them lived on old soldier who had had government work assigned him, not of much importance it is true, but enough to justify him, according to his views, in feeling that he was a great man.

It seemed strange to the Frau Von Meyer that he should suddenly assume an appearance of friendliness and endeavor to make her acquaintance; that he should ask little Lena Von Meyer how long her tall cousin intended to stay with them; that he should even condescend to pat the little Gretchen on her curly head and ask her where she lived before coming to Frankfort.

It may have been only the state of her mind at this time, keenly awake to the anxieties of the hour, but the Frau Von Meyer felt that to harbor this guest longer was only to expose him to be recaptured, and to bring upon her own household the punishment due her according to the law of the empire.

A train left at ten o'clock at night, and another train at eight in the morning; which would be the safer? That was the question that now perplexed this tender-hearted woman in her unselfish desire to give to some other mother the blessing which she could not herself enjoy—that of having a son restored to home and parents. It might seem suspicious to have a young girl, or one apparently such, sent from under the protection of her relatives alone and at night. On the other hand, at that hour the Fraulein Von Meyer would not be exposed to the questioning gaze of fellow passengers. Circumstances controlled the decision. That snuffy, disagreeable little man, Jacobi, was seen at the bahnhoff when the good Frau went to purchase a ticket.

"Your niece leaves you to-morrow?" he asked, with a low bow, meant to be very courtly, but which, instead, she felt to be malicious indeed. However, under the necessity of being guarded, she could only accept his politeness and answer evasively that "Probably she would. The Fraulein, her niece, was not feeling very well, and her visit might be prolonged for that reason."

In the shade of early evening the Fraulein took leave of the kind family circle. She was wrapped up even more closely than that autumn evening required, but then it "grew cold toward morning," she explained to a neighbor who happened in. They walked to the station together, the Frau took an affectionate leave of her niece, and then, as the train moved off toward Mayence, she walked homeward, holding an empty purse in her hand.

The next day Herr Jacobi called with an officer at the door of the Frau Von Meyer and demanded the young deserter who had some time before taken refuge in her house. She received him with dignified politeness, and handed him her keys. The house this time was thoroughly searched, but there was nothing found to implicate the good lady. That her niece had come and gone, meantime, was no ground for taking the Frau herself before the public authorities; young ladies surely might visit their relatives—that was not an unlawful thing to do!

The Herr Jacobi was furious; his chagrin and disappointment made his red and ugly face even uglier than ever. The Frau Von Meyer was calm and composed. His anger did not provoke her to reply, and she gave no cause, by word or act, either to justify his suspicion or to justify him in calling the attention of the public authorities to her or her former guest, the Fraulein.

The Frau Von Meyer was poor; she was greatly reduced, and the comforts of her younger days had been cut off one by one. The expression, "she had seen better days," applied to her in many ways. She had been healthier, happier, richer all her life than she was now. She now sat at her window looking into the street more sadly than ever before. Even the little ones, Lena and Gretchen, heedless as children are, noticed her pale face and sad eyes.

One day a loud rap from the postman; and a thick, foreign-stamped letter was handed in, addressed to the Frau Von Meyer.

Her hand trembled, her color came and went, the light shone in her eyes as she read. The letter was from the mother of the young soldier, and was full of expressions of gratitude. But this was not all. The young man had read the secret of their poverty. and had rightly inferred at what cost to her family she had assisted him. The return made was, what seemed to her, munificent. It caused her struggle with poverty to be only a memory of the past. There was no possibility of refusing the gift, even had her pride dictated such a course, for there was no address enclosed, and it might have imperilled both his safety and hers had she made inquiries.

And, dear young readers, when you realize how free you are to control your time and develop your own resources without the interference of the government, you may the more appreciate the blessings of independence, and feel thankful to our heavenly Father who has continued to us the freedom which you celebrate on the Fourth of July.—Christian Intelligencer.

TEMPERANCE.

THE BREWERS VERGING ON A PANIC.

The verbatim account of the Brewers' 28th National Convention, held in St. Paul, May 30, 31, is published in the Brewers' Journal, and makes interesting reading. Throughout the proceedings this fact appears in strong light—namely, that the great brewing industry of the nation stands before the public on the defensive. It is no longer declaring its triumphs in the courts and governmental departments. Its plans are no longer plans of future conquest. It is fighting for the very ground it holds. Report after report shows this. Whether it is that of the president,or of the trustees, or of the literary bureau, the strain is the same.

The Supreme Court of the United States is the first body against which the Convention strives to defend itself, and the way in which the defense is conducted is characteristically weak. It accuses the court of having rendered its recent decision sustaining the prohibitory laws of Kansas for political reasons, just as though political reasons would not have weighed overwhelmingly on the other side. It sneers at the statement of the decision that "disorder, pauperism and crime.... are, in large measure, directly traceable to this evil"—the evil under consideration being Ziebold & Hagelin's brewery—and assures the country that the very reverse is true. Then the Convention goes on to defend itself against the Knights of Labor and its organ, the Journal of United Labor, the recent strikes of brewers' workmen furnishing the topic. The Bureau of Statistics at Washington and its head, Col. Switzler, and the Bureau of Agriculture, are taken to task for reports issued by them which tell against the brewing "industry," and the official figures and scientific facts given by these bureaus are dogmatically denied. Judge Maynard, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is assailed for a decision likely to facilitate the enforcement of prohibitory laws. The defense that is made, it must be noted, is not the defense of a mere outpost or a strategic point; it is a defense of the very citadel itself—a defeuse of the very right of the "industry" to live. Judge White's recent arraignment of the business from the bench is met with a sneer at his physiological ignorance. Dr. Geo. W. Samson's exposition on the divine law as to wines is met with a quotation from Hudibras. The Methodist church is brought up to time for its faithlessness to the Scriptures. (Think of it, the Brewers' National Convention defending the Bible against the M. E. church!) The Pennsylvania law is denounced as "the most atrocious high license law ever conceived outside a lunatic asylum." Why? Not, obviously, because of the high license ($500) it contains,for the Illinois and Nebraska laws with yet higher license are not complained of; but because of the bonds and penalties which give the judges the chance to refuse two out of three applications. The W. C. T. Union and the National Temperance Society are, of course, held up to public execration, and the motives animating them are clouded with suspicion.

But the one great enemy that is never lost sight of is prohibitory law. The fear of that is seen on every page of the report. Against high license, as such, there is not a word, and even against high license and local option coupled together,there is but one slight reference. It is the advance of prohibition that is causing this desperate defensive combat on the part of the brewers. Whatever helps on this advance is assailed; whatever hinders is commended. Even the Anti Saloon Republican movement, and the high license and local option craze are spoken kindly of as likely to check the advance of prohibition! Between forty and fifty thousand dollars (including $9,000 paid out to the Literary Bureau) is reported as paid by this one organization in the last year to fight prohibition. Of course, appearances are kept up by a weak iteration at long intervals that "no prohibitory law can successfully be enforced," but all the rest of the report gives the lie direct to the assertion.—The Voice.

LABOR AND LIQUOR.

At present the workingman can hardly make both ends meet. Is it not because he insists on creating capitalists out of saloon-keepers, and, not content with that, on submitting all his rights of citizenship to the same object of worship?

The saloon in politics is the most hideous abuse of the day; but where would it be if the workingmen withdrew their support from it? It keeps them poor. It keeps our politics corrupt. It supplies a constant stream of base adventurers, who disgrace the American name at home and abroad. It makes the terms "public office" and "public plunder" synonymous. It stifles progress, fosters pauperism, brutalizes husbands and fathers, breaks women's hearts, puts rags on the workingmen's back, disease in his body, and shame and despair in his heart. Yet, when labor is most disturbed, when the demand for advanced wages is the loudest, when strikes are most frequent, when hunger and misery are most rife in the homes of the poor, the saloon flourishes still. There may be no bread at home, but there is always beer and whisky at the bar; and the men who consider themselves the victims of circumstances, of the "thrall" of capital, squander their earnings and spend their savings in these dens.

Can there be a serious labor question while this state of things continues? Can workingmen talk gravely of their wrongs, while it is plain to all the world, that, if they only saved the capital, they would be comfortable?—Atlantic Monthly.

The danger of a young Christian traveling in Bunyan's "By-path-meadow" was, perhaps, never more aptly illustrated than in the career of Robert Reitzel. About ten years ago this young man from Germany came to this city, and was installed pastor of Trinity Reformed church, corner of Sixth and N streets now. He was young, handsome, well educated, a fluent speaker in German, and very popular. He won the heart and hand of one of his fair young parishioners, and the prosperity of the church seemed assured. Soon, however, rumors of convivial gatherings and late hours came to the ears of the church. Remonstrance of friends was vain. He could see no harm in drinking beer, even to such an extent as to require the assistance of friends to find his home in the early morning hours. He left the Reformed church and organized an independent church or society, which soon degenerated into a free-thinker's club, and ceased to exist when Reitzel left the city. The building for this independent church still stands on Fifth street, between M and N, but has not been used by the Reitzel club for many years. Reitzel himself was forgotten, except by a few friends to whom he sent his paper, Der Arme Teufel, until his appearance in the Chicago cemetery to eulogize the dead anarchists. The "By-path-meadow, via the beer saloon, not only landed him in 'Doubting Castle,' but in the infidels' camp, and instead of being a blessing, he is a curse to his race, one of the characters whose influence makes it necessary to build jails and prison walls." His career should warn all young men, who think they can steer life's course without God, and who lightly throw aside the restraints of religion.—Exchange.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON 2. Third Quarter.- July 8.

SUBJECT.—The Golden Calf.—Ex. 32:15-26.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Little children, keep yourselves from idols. —1 John 5: 21.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Tables of Stone. vs. 15-19. The Ten Commandments were the visible revelation of God's righteous and holy character. They contained no new truth, for there is no such thing as a new truth. Like Him who inhabits eternity she has neither beginning nor end. But these laws had before this been only written on the human conscience, the characters growing more imperfect and the writing more dimmed and defaced as man wandered farther and farther from God into the darkness of idolatry. Moses's action in casting the tables out of his hand and breaking them was not a mere ebullition, even of just anger; it had the solemnity of a prophetic act. Already, in the short space of forty days, the people had broken their covenant with Jehovah, and hereafter, as a nation, they must live under the shadow and curse of his broken law. As with an individual, so with a nation. The first deliberate departing from God makes every step in the downward way easier, and final destruction more certain.

2. The Calf of Gold. vs. 20-24. In reducing the golden calf to powder and mingling it with the water that the children of Israel drank, Moses did another symbolic act. "They were to eat the fruit of their own doings and be filled with their own devices." We are told that "what a man soweth that shall he also reap." So must a nation. No more striking illustration of this law was ever given to the world than when our national sin of slavery brought on a civil war, which carried mourning and death to nearly every hearthstone, North and South. It is a law which operates even more surely with nations than with individuals, for the existence of the former is limited to this earthly stage, on which they must of necessity be judged. The Bible pronounces a curse on him who puts the bottle to his neighbors' lips, yet we know that the rumseller often runs a career of great worldly prosperity. The woe waits for him hereafter. But are we, therefore, to conclude that our nation will escape the penalty God has affixed to this crime when it not only permits whole shiploads of rum to go to the Congo for the debasing and enslaving of a race it has already wronged so cruelly in the past, but becomes an active participant in its sale by taking the lion's share of the profits? Will he be more lenient with the American people when they turn aside to worship the false gods of the lodge than with ancient Israel? Aaron's conduct in laying the blame of his weakness on the people is the very type of those political leaders among us who truckle to our foreign population to get their votes, while they despise them in their hearts. The great majority of those who clamored for the golden calf were probably foreigners, the "mixed multitude" who followed Israel out of Egypt. Our present administration, when it sent out a government vessel flying the American flag to greet the papal envoy, and gave a present to the pope at his jubilee, afforded a striking instance of this tendency in our public men. The rum interest owes all its power to this want of backbone among those who should control our dangerous classes, but instead, allow our dangerous classes to control them. Many Aarons are to be found in the pulpit. They let Masonry, the calf-worship of our day, corrupt the church, yet raise no cry of warning against it, even participating in its mock religious rites themselves, with the weak and silly plea that they will thus strengthen their influence. Such ministers would do well to ponder Moses's solemn question to Aaron, and also Ezek. 3: 17-21.

3. Who is on the Lord's Side? vs. 25, 26. This is a query which everyone must answer to his own conscience. To be simply negative in a warfare where such mighty interests are at stake is to be on the devil's side. It is to be in that terrible category with the fearful and the unbelieving, who are classed with the abominable and murderers, with whoremongers and idolaters, and who shall receive their final portion with such—the punishment of the second death.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

A NEW MISSION SCHEME FOR INDIA.

READ IT!

What new project is this? Some grand and complicated project? No; the simplest thing available.

The readers of this paper have been informed of our mission work in India in connection with the Watchman Repository, etc. You have been told of our colporteur evangelists who go from station to station selling books and preaching the Gospel. They take a small supply of the publications of the National Christian Association, so that this agency is the best method of promoting the reform in India which the Cynosure advocates.

Already our work here has attracted such an attention as to induce friends connected with the reform in America to send £1 per month to promote the same good work in India. Why cannot others add enough to support a colporteur evangelist? They get part of their support as they move among the people from place to place. Only one or two pounds more per month would enable you to say that you are supporting a foreign missionary. Is not this a blessed thought?

Of course we would not ask the Association itself to undertake any more responsibility, nor would we expect any of God's people to divert anything which they have been contributing to other causes. But we are well aware that much more ought to be given, and here is one of the best openings possible. Now, who will send to the office of the Cynosure monthly subscriptions for this purpose? Is it too much to expect that among the thousands of readers of this paper there should be found, say, ten persons, who are willing to send one dollar each to the office of the Cynosure to support a missionary in India. Would it not be a delightful thing for the Cynosure office and the multitude of friends to have a in India? Bless God for the happy thought! I am sure it is inspired by him, and I am confident that it will be warmly welcomed and permanently sustained by the readers of the Cynosure. God bless you.

THE WORLD'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE on the occasion of the centenary of Protestant missions, opened in London, June 9. The Earl of Aberdeen presided at the opening of the conference. One hundred and fifty American delegates, representing fifty-one societies, and twenty-seven Canadian delegates were present.

On June 11 there was a discussion on the increase of Islamism. Mr. Schrieber, of Berlin, read a paper on the spread of Islamism in the East, especially in the Dutch possessions. He said that Moslem schools had been established to oppose Christian missions. Dr. Post, an American, dilated upon the destructive social and political influence of Islamism in perverting individual morality and crushing the life out of the people. At the evening session, the Earl of Aberdeen presiding, Dr. Pierson gave a general survey of the work of missions.

On the 13th, General Fisk, the President of the conference, referring to mission work in Africa, urged the necessity of opposing the liquor traffic in that country, and of inculcating higher standards of morality in general dealings. He said that nothing was so calculated to prejudice the native and retard the work of the missions as fraudulent commercial transactions.

Dr. Murdock, of America, spoke of the success of female missionaries as Zenana teachers, and approved the extension of instruction on secular matters within the native homes through the medium of Christian women. Miss Child took part in the debate. In the evening Mr. Blackstone, the Chicago Methodist delegate, described the work done by female missionaries among women in Japan.

—Angles, a converted Jew, has started a mission at 472 South Halsted St., Chicago. He has asked for the Cynosure for the reading-room of his mission, which is called the "Hebrew Christian Mission." This note is of the greater importance when we remember that nearly all the Jews in the city (one Jew said "all") are Freemasons.

—The Augustana Synod, meeting at Galesburg, Ill., has adopted a resolution which provides that hereafter the Synod shall consist of one clerical and one lay delegate for each 1,000 members. This reduces the membership of the Synod from 800 to 150. The Synod ordained twenty-nine preachers last Sabbath.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard preached at Galva, Ill., on the Sabbath and begins a series of evangelical meetings at Huntley in the northern part of the State on Tuesday.

—The Synod of the Holland Christian Reformed church, established by the churches that withdrew from the Reformed General Synod because of the unwillingness of the latter to declare against the lodge, was meeting in Grand Rapids, Michigan, last week.

—The Wesleyan Methodist Connection of Great Britain reports for 1888 a total of 415,790 members with 34 564 on trial. The increase of members is 3,446. There are 151 candidates for the ministry.

—According to the Year Book of the Disciples of Christ for 1888, they have 6,437 churches; 620,000 communicants; 4 500 Sunday-schools, with a membership of 318,000, and a teaching force of 33,340; number of preachers, 3,263. The value of church property is $10,368,361. The estimated annual increase of members with churches is 47,600. The number of institutions of learning which have been received is twenty-nine—five universities, nineteen colleges and five institutes; but there are some fifteen or twenty from which no report has been received.

—Bishop William Taylor has issued a letter denying the truth of the statement made in the Methodist General Conference that his African Mission is from $50,000 to $70,000 in debt. He does not say, however, whether there is any debt or not. He said in the General Conference that there was no debt. His letter concludes thus:

"There never was a time when it was so needful for the patrons of my self-supporting missions to stand by me and my Transit and Building Fund Society as now. Let them send their gifts for a rapid advance of this work to our treasurer, Richard Grant, 181 Hudson St., New York, and his receipts will serve as vouchers for ministers who may desire a memorandum of all such appropriations of funds as a postscript to his missionary report to his conference."

—The centennial of Negro Baptists of Georgia began in Savannah on June 6, and was to continue two weeks. Five thousand Negro Baptists are present. At the opening of the celebration over 300 preachers were in attendance. It was expected that 50,000 Negro visitors would be there during the celebration.

—An Interdenominational Bible Conference will be held at Ocean Grove, N. J., July 25–31, 1888. Dr. L. W. Munhall, evangelist, Philadelphia, will conduct the same. Among those who are expected to be present, as instructors, are the following: Bishops Newman and Nicholson, Professor W. G. Moorehead, Luther T. Townsend and S. L. Bowman, and the Rev. Dr. James H Brooks, Nathaniel West and W. J. Erdman. The subjects to be considered are: "The Fact and Nature of Sin," "Inspiration," "The Atonement," "The Office and Work of the Holy Spirit," "The Priestly Office and Work of Jesus Christ," etc. A number of special subjects, however, will also be presented.

—An effort is being made by the Italian Christian Association of New York to open a Christian home in a suitable locality. They have met four years in the old church, No. 309 Mulberry street; but, because the edifice is lacking all the requirements and conveniences of a home, it is found necessary to remove to quarters better fitted to promote growth and usefulness. There are about two hundred and fifty young men and women in the Association, and more than two hundred children in the Sunday-school.

—A French Congregational church building has been dedicated in Springfield, Mass. The Rev. Mr. Cote, who was instrumental in giving the society a start four years ago, outlined the condition and needs of the French Canadian population of this country, which numbers not less than 1,000,000. The French Canadians, he said, need something else than Romanism. It is our work to evangelize them. Their ignorance and superstition are almost incredible, and they need looking after as much as so-called heathen in China, Japan and India.

—Senator Ferrier died at his residence in Montreal on the 31st ult., in the eighty-ninth year of his age. He was president of the Bible Society, Chancellor of Magill University, and for more than sixty years he was superintendent of the Great St. James Street Church Sunday-school, His funeral was one of the largest ever seen at Montreal. A tablet will most likely be erected to his memory in Trinity church, now being erected, the corner-stone of which he laid a few months ago, and subscribed $2,000 to the building fund.

LODGE NOTES.

The "Book and Snake" is a secret society of the Yale Sheffield Scientific School that has just erected an elegant society and dormitory building called the "Cloister," and costing about $40,000.

Thomas Grace, of Pulaski, Mo., was taken from his home Saturday night by night riders and terribly whipped because he revealed some of the secrets of the Wheel, an agricultural secret society which he had recently joined.

TheGrand Lodge of GoodTemplars met at Huron, Dakota, the morning of June 20th and continued two days. The secretary's annual exhibit shows seventy-five lodges and 3,000 members in Dakota. Receipts last year, $1,246; expeses, $1,-127.

The Senate of the National Union met in Cleveland last week. This is an insurance lodge. A proposition to cancel the certificates of members subsequently engaging in hszardous occupations was rejected as inexpedient; also one to change the sessions to biennial instead of annual was voted down. The committee on laws reported favorably a number of minor changes, which were adopted.

The Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias at Cincinnati, Ohio, adopted the report of the committee on endowment rank, authorizing the board of control of that department to levy an assessment in addition to one per month as heretofore when necessary. The lodge adopted a resolution declaring explicitly that no authority has ever been granted for the creation of a lodge of colored knights, and that no colored man can lawfully be admitted to any lodge.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seakers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The anthor, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will maka our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent raader who really wishes to laad a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its pernsal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. Tha author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volnme, abounding throughout with apt illnstrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Rallgions Telascope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains mnch clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It isa practical and experimental leason taught out of God's word, and is worthy of nniversal circnlation."—Church Union.

This enlarged edition is a heantiful large 12mo volnme of 240 pages.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

HOME AND HEALTH.

FRUIT AS MEDICINE.

Grapes come first, especially black grapes, which are most nutritious, and at the same time purifying to the blood. Grape cures are quite the fashion in some parts of the continent, and are said to work miracles at times. Peaches, also, are most hygienic to the human system, as well as being one of the most exquisite fruits in nature. Nothing, indeed, is more palatable, wholesome and medicinal than a good ripe peach. Peaches should not be eaten overripe, however. They may be eaten at meals or between meals. They are particularly hygienic when eaten at breakfast. All fruit, indeed, is good eaten for breakfast, or before breakfast. An orange eaten before breakfast, will, it is said, cure dyspepsia sooner than anything else. Apples are also very hygienic, especially when baked or stewed. They are excellent in many cases of illness, and are far better than salts and pills to cure constipation and liver complaints.

When oranges are taken, only the juice should be swallowed; the juice of oranges, as of lemons, is valuable to make drinks in case of fever. Tomatoes are also excellent remedies in liver and bowel complaints, and certainly more pleasant than medicines; only juice, however, should be taken. Figs, raspberries, strawberries, currents and cherries are all cooling and purifying to the system, while being nutritious at the same time. If we but knew what health there is stored up by nature in our gardens and orchards, we should rarely have need to seek the chemist. How little, for instance, is the water-melon known, yet there is not a better medicine for fever and kidney complaints than the juice of the water-melon. It may be taken in sickness and in health, and almost in unlimited quantities, except when cholera is raging, when it must be avoided, like most other fruit. This alone will tell how beneficial fruit in general is in all ordinary times.

It is claimed that the juice of a lemon squeezed into a cup of strong coffee will afford immediate relief in neuralgic headache.

A tea made of ripe or dried whortleberries, and drank in place of water, is a speedy cure for many forms of scrofulous difficulties.—Home Guardian.

SUNSTROKE AND ITS PREVENTION.

Several cases of sunstroke have recently been reported from the west of England, and intelligence from America shows that deaths from this cause have also been very frequent there. A few observations on this subject should, therefore, be not unseasonable at the present time. To speak of sunstroke as being due to more causes than one, may sound at first sight rather like a contradiction in terms, but there can be no doubt that besides the principal influence at work in such cases, there are others of real, though secondary significance. In seeking to explain the causation of this morbid state we must, indeed, regard at least two different conditions as commonly acting together to produce the result. One of these is external heat, not necessarily that of the direct solar rays; the other is the presence in excess of impurities in the blood circulation, with a want of due nutrition in the tissues which it supplies. The consequence of this abnormal state of body is necessarily to delay the blood current, and the state of congestion thus engendered in the nerve centers of the brain and cord renders the latter unusually irritable to the action of external stimuli, of which external heat is, for the case we are discussing, the most important It follows accordingly that prevention must include some care as to modes of living, as well as means of regulating or resisting heat from without the body. For example, the free use of alcoholic stimulants, which tends to impair nutrition, is not longer considered to be advisable, while tea and coffee, which check the formation of waste products, are proportionately valuable. Tight clothing about the chest is generally condemned as likely to impede the aeration of blood in the lungs; and experience has proved that for a similar reason the imperfect ventilation of workrooms in warm weather is conducive to heat stroke. As regards protection against the sun's rays, it should be remembered that not only the head, but the back of the neck must be suitably guarded in order to insure the traveler against the risk of injury. The wearing a damp handkerchief, or a leaf, such as that of the cabbage, next the head, has also been found very useful. One word as to the immediate treatment of a case of sunstroke. In some instances, doubtless not even the readiest assistance will save life, but in case of need it is well that all should bear in mind that the most effectual form in which first aid can be rendered is the application of cold—as cold water, ice, etc.—to the head and neck.—London Lancet.

A LOVELY WOMAN

overheard one say of her, "By heaven! she's painted!" "Yes," retorted she, indignantly, "and by heaven only!" Ruddy health mantled her cheek, enthroned on the rose and lily. Yet this beautiful lady, once thin and pale, with a dry, hacking cough, night sweats, and a slight spitting of blood, seemed destined to fill a consumptive's grave. After spending hundreds of dollars on physicians without benefit, she tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery; her improvement was soon marked, and in a few months she was plump and rosy again, the picture of health and strength.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

FARM NOTES.

STRAWBERRIES

It is time to plant strawberries any time till mid June, provided they are not overheated in package or carelessly set. When I am transplanting home-grown plants I often do it in autumn, carefully moving each plant with abundance of earth: but plants from a distance it is a delusion to set out in the late months of the year; and as for potted plants ignore them, unless you are quite too skilled to need advice. Spring planting is right every time, and late spring is as good as early spring, or better, with the precaution named above. Remember that when it is too late to fill up defective raspberry or blackberry rows, you make your strawberry garden all right—down to the middle or end or June.

But to plant a strawberry, there is the secret. There is no other plant that needs so much exactness in planting as this, and I will tell you how to do it. The hole should not be a hole at all, but well-softened dirt, not just after a shower, but when the mold is loose and friable. Then with a circular movement of your hand leave the dirt slightly conical; over this spread the roots; then crowd down hard until the plant sets with its crown just above the level of the earth. Now brush in dirt and crowd that down, and remember to crowd hard—you cannot press it down too tight. Now, last of all, brush in a little loose earth that you do not press down at all. This serves as mulch, retaining moisture. The process is simple, but it is all necessary, every step of it. If the weather be dry, let a pint of water be poured in after the last pressing and before the loose earth is thrown in. Now your plants stand with the crowns cut and clean, and are ready to grow. You should not leave over one third of the leaves on the vines if they have been sent to you from a distance, and you should pick out the blossom buds, that is if you wish for quick growth and thrifty plants. If you are setting home-grown plants, taken up with a ball of earth, they need not be pinched much.

Of the different methods of strawberry growing for home use, where only a small plot is to be set, by all odds the best plan is to set in hills. In this way a bed will do well for several years. It is too expensive a method for market growers. But the row method is also good if your rows are narrow. Don't heed the wise-acres who tell you not to hoe or clean out your strawberries until after they have fruited; they should be well cleaned out in early May, and should, if neccessary, be cleaned again; only do not let the hoe slip under the fine surface roots of the plants and disturb them—if you want a good crop. The only rule is to work with care and use common sense. You cannot hoe them as you would potatoes.

If you can, select for your strawberry plot a piece of ground that, while open to the sun, is not easily dried up in case of a drought. Our worst trouble is with dry spells as the fruit is ripening. A good plan is to have it near a well or a brook or reservoir, and with a force-pump deluge it as needed—at night. All watering should be done at night, so that the water will gently soak in before the sun begins to suck it out. Be sure of one thing, a dried-up strawberry bed is a nuisance and will never tell you the truth. The truth about a Sharpless is about five inches in circumference.

Mulching strawberries is by all means to be practiced; it is not difficult to adopt nor expensive. If you have old leaves, put them on in autumn, and in spring rake them off between the rows, and lightly fork them under. Coal ashes do not work badly, but of course ordinary wood ashes will soil the fruit. Tanbark is at times used, so also any waste straw or weeds or refuse. Immediately after picking I should fork under the mulch and thoroughly work the ground.

Of the older sorts of strawberries there are just two that should be set down as universal family berries, Cumberland and Sharpless. The Cumberland has stood the test for fifteen years, and is still as good as ever and as popular. It is soft for a distant market berry, but it is beautiful in form and color, of excellent flavor, free from acidity, an admirable cropper, and a really excellent bearer. On the table it is always a favorite, and all in all no family garden should miss it. Sharpless is a delicious berry, enormous in size, a heavy cropper on good soil and moist land, and always a good cropper on all soils. It does not ripen, or rather color, its tips well; but it is always sweet to the tip. Two other old sorts are fairly entitled to follow them—Manchester and Crescent, because of their bearing quality and rich color; but they are both too sour.

A strawberry bed cannot be well kept up longer than four years on the same ground. You must calculate on new plantings as often as the third or fourth year. Frequently it is better to plant anew each second year.

Enrich enormously. You can hardly overdo in that direction. Be sure to rely on well-rotted barnyard manure. Put it on after the crop, and again as a thin covering for winter. Rake off and fork it in in the spring.—E. P. Powell in Independent.

"An idler is a watch that lacks both hands;
As useless if it goes as when it stands"

Alas! how many women, though household and children need their care, are necessarily idle, because suffering from diseases peculiar to their sex. To all such Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a precious boon, speedily curing internal inflammation, leucorrhea, displacement, ulceration, tormenting periodical pains, prolapsus, "bearing-down" sensations, morning sickness, bloating, weak stomach, nervous prostration, and tendency to cancerous disease. In all those ailments, called "female complaints," it is the most reliable specific known to medical science.

Rich and Poor,

Prince and Peasant, the Millionaire and Day Laborer, by their common use of this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. They are sugar-coated; contain no calomel; are prompt, but mild, in operation; and, therefore, the very best medicine for Family Use, as well as for Travelers and Tourists.

"I have derived great relief from Ayer's Pills. Five years ago I was taken so ill with that I was unable to do any work. I took three boxes of Ayer's Pills and was entirely cured. Since that time I am never without a box of these pills." Peter Christensen, Sherwood, Wis.

"Ayer's Pills have been in use in my family upwards of twenty years and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afford greater relief than any other medicine I ever tried." —T. F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for a number of years, and have never found anything equal to them for giving me an appetite and imparting energy and strength to the system. I always keep them in the house."—R. D. Jackson, Wilmington, Del.

"Two boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of severe from which I was long a sufferer. —Emma Keyes, Hubbardston, Mass.

Headache,

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again." —A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

"Ayer's Pills are in general demand among our customers. Our sales of them exceed those of all other pills combined. We have never known them fail to give entire satisfaction."—Wright & Hannelly, San Diego, Texas.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

WASHINGTON.

The 100th anniversary of the ratification of the New Hampshire constitution was celebrated on the 16th, and the United States Senate, in honor of the day, adjourned till Monday.

Gen. Sheridan's condition has continued to improve. The intense heat is, however, beginning to tell upon his strength. It is evidently becoming necessary to consider the question of his removal at an early day to a more favorable locality. Gen. Sheridan will probably be removed to the seashore during the present week, provided his condition justifies it. Fortress Monroe or Atlantic City will probably be selected as the most convenient of access.

CHICAGO.

A verdict for $1,002,491 24 was rendered by the jury in Judge Clifford's court, in this city, in favor of the plantiff, in the case of Augustin I. Ambler, of Washington, D. C, against Rodney M. Whipple, a resident of 1523 Michigan avenue. This is the largest verdict returned in a single case in Chicago for years. The litigation was over a patent.

The Burlington road brought into Chicago 125 special passenger trains loaded with visitors to the Republican Convention.

Three men died from the effect of sunstroke in this city last Wednesday, one of them an Ohio delegate to the Republican Convention. The weather was not extremely hot.

Lucy Parsons, the widow of the dead anarchist, was twice arrested and once fined last week for scattering circulars in the streets.

Some Sundays sixty or seventy baseball games are played in this city. Last Sunday Frank and Matthew Daly, two brothers, of 355 May street, became involved in a quarrel on the way to a game of ball. Frank seized a ball bat and struck Matthew twice, breaking two ribs and fracturing his skull. His condition is precarious. Frank is locked up at the Twelfth street station.

COUNTRY.

The stockholders of the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company held their annual meeting in Denver Thursday evening. It was decided not to wait any longer for Congress to grant the company a charter, but to incorporate immediately under the laws of Colorado. Reports were received from the engineers fixing the cost of the canal at $50,000,000. The company decided to double this amount in order to cover all incidental expenses, and incorporate with a capital of $100,000,000. Work will be begun September 1, and it is expected the canal will be completed in five years

Dr. Kossuth Morgner, of St. Louis, who has been spending a week at Niagara Falls as president of the St. Louis company, with an alleged capital of $15,000,000, proposes to develop an enormous power by stringing a series of wheels at the brink of the falls, sustained by a cable.

While Mr. and Mrs. James Gillespie, living near Sturgeon Bay, Wis., were driving home from the village the horse ran away, throwing Mrs. Gillespie out. When the horse was stopped Mr. Gillespie called his wife, but receiving no answer concluded she had returned to town, and drove home. In the morning the woman was found dead in the road, having been killed by the fall.

For three days the heat in New York city has been almost insufferable. The highest thermometrical point reached today was 97 degrees. There were four deaths reported from heat and thirteen prostrations in this city and fifteen heat prostrations in Brooklyn.

A party of sixteen ladies and gentlemen hired the steam yacht Olivette and left Newark, N. J., Saturday night. The boat ran upon the jetty, upset, and six of the party were swept away and drowned.

Greenwood county, Kansas, is said to be terrorized by rabid dogs. Nine persons have been bitten and three have died from hydrophobia. A month ago a mad dog bit several other dogs and a number of cattle. Two weeks ago a dog ran into the yard of William Jones and bit Mr. Jones and two of his children. Wednesday one of the children died in great agony, and the next day the father and the other child died. A madstone was circulated among the persons who had been bitten, and a wholesale slaughter of dogs is going on.

FOREIGN.

The Berlin Courier says that Emperor William has expressed to the Grand Duke Vladimir an earnest desire for the continuance of the friendly relations with Russia that existed during the reigns of his grandsire and father.

Dr. Mackenzie, who attended Emperor Frederick, says he parted on friendly terms with all the German doctors except one. He had been fully aware of the dangerous nature of Emperor Frederick's malady since last February, but if he had admitted it a regency would have been probable, which would have pleased a section opposed to the accession of Frederick A communication from Dr. Mackenzie shows that all hope of further prolonging Emperor Frederick's life was abandoned on the night of the 20th. He adds: "Throughout his illness the Emperor uttered no word of complaint and gave no signs of impatience. The doctors and servants who attended him will always cherish the memory of the grateful acknowledgment of services that ordinary patients exact as their right."

A dispatch from St. Paul de Loanda, dated June 20, says: "Several deserters from Stanley's expedition have reached Camp Yambungo. They say that after traversing Aruwhimi Stanley struck into a rough, mountainous country covered with dense forests. The natives, who were excited by reports spread by the Arabs, disputed the passage of the expedition, and there was continuous fighting. Stanley was severely wounded by an arrow. He was compelled several times to construct camps in order to repel attacks, and was obliged to use the reserve provisions that were intended for Emin Bey.

A strike of priests, says the London Graphic, is horrifying all devout Roman Catholics in the Argentine Republic. The government having issued an order lowering the fees for masses, marriages, buriels, and other ecclesiastical functions, the priests determined to resist such an encroachment on their privileges, and refused to officiate. So all the churches are closed, and not a bell is to be heard, as if the whole country were under an edict.

The remains of Beethoven were exhumed at Vienna, June 21, and placed in a new coffin. They were conveyed through the principal streets of the city and interred in the Central cemetery. The grave is marked by a handsome obelisk on which is inscribed the name Beethoven.

The Emin Bey Relief Committee of London state that, from facts in their possession, they place no reliance whatever on the pessimistic reports of Henry M. Stanley's death lately circulated.

Detailed accounts of the gales which occurred on the coast of Ireland last month show that 400 French fishermen drowned. Thirty vessels were wrecked.

A dispatch from Shanghai says: "A feeling of uneasiness prevails among foreigners in Corea on account of the threatening attitude of the natives. All the foreign consulates are guarded by soldiers. An American man-of-war has been sent to give assistance.

No matter what the school of physic,
They each can cure an ache or phthisic—
At least 'tis said they can;
But as Science turns the wheel still faster,
And quacks and bigots meet disaster,
To us there comes a man
Whose merit hath won countless zealots,
Who use and praise his "Pleasant Pellets."
The "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" of Dr. Pierce, though gentle in action, are thorough, and never fail to cure biliousness, diseased or torpid liver, and constipation.

The great Cincinnati Centennial which opens July 4 and continues till the 27th of October promises to be the event of the year for the central States of the Union. Vast preparations have been made, the permanent exposition buildings will be used, and additional structures have been erected to provide for the exhibits and the crowds. The centennial of the passing of the celebrated Ordinance of 1787, which began a year ago, will form no unimportant part of the present celebration, as that memorable document gave the keynote to the prosperity, growth, peace and happiness of the States of the great Northwest.

General Harrison, the Republican candidate, is not a man to create party enthusiasm, but there are some considerations that indicate the hand of God in his nomination. He is a Christian man, member of a Presbyterian church, and not unmindful of his obligations to God and his fellows. So that, while there is little hope of his election, it should not be unobserved that he bears this relation. His piety is not so aggressive as that of General Fisk, who, besides being an active man, a leader in the Christian army, is a man of superior general qualifications to either of the other candidates, and even Prohibition and religion aside, would make an abler President.

The labor lodges are organizing to defeat Harrison. They are moving to form anti-Harrison clubs all over Indiana, and inquiries come from all parts of the country about the standing of the Republican candidate. The leaders claim that he opposed the strikers in 1877, and said if he were governor he would order them shot; that he was, in 1886, when candidate for governor, attorney for the Western Union Telegraph and Union Pacific monopolies, and all his sympathies are against the labor interests of the country. It must be seriously doubted if these charges can be made good; but whether they can or no, it should begin to open the dull eyes of our fellow citizens of one party to the dangers which are inseparable from the lodge system. On the strength of a probable canard the lodge can secretly operate, and organize the defeat of parties and candidates.

On the last evening of the Republican convention, when the delegates were tired out with a hard week's work, and both nature and pocket-book urged an immediate adjournment, Mr. Boutelle of Maine proposed an afterthought to the platform. He was a suspected man, and was met by loud objections before the nature of his amendment was known. The matter was understood by the leaders, however, and he was heard. This was his resolution:

"The first concern of all good government is the virtue and sobriety of the people and the purity of the home. The Republican party cordially sympathizes with all wise and well-directed efforts for the promotion of temperance and morality."

The representatives of liquordom who had opposed the measure before they heard it, immediately gave their approval, and voted it unanimously. The object of these fair sounding sentences is obvious. There are many temperance men who were anxious for some excuse to hold fast to the old party. The platform had absolutely no peg upon which they could lay hold and save themselves; and as "drowning men catch at straws," this gives them a pretext about as good as a straw. They will not care to know that every liquor dealer in the party is well pleased with this resolution; but a delegation from the Peoria distilleries did come up to fight the free whisky plank.

Following closely upon the great Republican Convention two national meetings of importance are to be held in Chicago this week. They are the Society of Christian Endeavor and the National Music Teacher's Association. The former, which represents the organization of young people in many of our churches for Christian work adapted to their age and experience, meets in Battery D on Thursday, and will be attended by some 4,000 delegates. Eminent Christian workers from different parts of the country are to make addresses, and others not so eminent. Dr. Barrows, of California, and Bishop Fallows, who divide their time between church and lodge, God and devil, are unfortunately among the speakers. The music teachers invite the public to their gathering at Music Hall, and in the evenings they will join Theodore Thomas and his orchestra to entertain everybody in the Exposition building.

Mayor Roche of Chicago has begun a change in the City Board of Education which we hope his successors will carry forward with some power of moral conviction. Upon the new Board the name of Mrs. Helen Mitchell was substituted for that of Allan C. Story. Mr. Story is a capable lawyer, but is strongly opposed to the Bible in the schools. Mrs. Mitchell's religious proclivities (Swedenborgian) may not make her any warmer friend of a change in this matter, but there is hope that this appointment begins a separation of this important Board from local politics. It is now run by men who care apparently more for a vote than for a conscience; and to place the vastly important interests of the public schools of a great city in their control is a reckless act of folly, if not a crime. An earnest effort by Mrs. E. A. Cook and other ladies, endorsed by some of the most influential business men of Chicago, to secure a change in the Board in favor of morality and the Bible, seems to have been ignored by Mayor Roche.

The Chicago Monday papers report an even hundred base ball games going on in some part of the city last Sabbath in violation of State law. There seems to be an idea that this city is exempt from statutes in favor of morality which control other parts of the State. This is evidently untrue. On the contrary there should be more severe restrictions with so large a body of people living in a confined area. In Minneapolis ball games have been suppressed by the courts, and the manager goes whining about of his loss of $10,000 because he could not have a Sunday game. A man so devoid of conscience ought to fail in everything he undertakes until he repents and becomes less dangerous to the community. In Atlanta, Georgia, there seems to be a wholesome regard for public morals which our Northern cities, run by foreign-bred politicians, would do well to emulate. A German wedding was celebrated with a dance on a recent Sunday night. The police heard the festive strains of music and broke up the performance.

Those who read the life of Mrs. Kelley, noticed in this number, will mark with pleasure and surprise the fact that these African tribes are generally so friendly, so accessible, and so often give to the axious missionary marked tokens of God's blessing on his labors. One of the Taylor missionaries is Dr. Summers, who seems to be on the advance line, farther toward the interior than Rev. Edward Mathews, whose letter from Arlington Mission appears on another page. He writes from among the Bashilange people, after a long journey, and pleads for more workers most earnestly. "Can you not do something to stir up our home-givers? My tears are my food all the day long, not because my enemies reproach me, but because my friends fail to come on to the battle. Here the people are crying out for missionaries and teachers. What can I do? I have none in my pocket, nor yet at my bidding. I promise that some are on the way, and I believe this is so, but our river communication is broken."

NATIONAL DEFENCE OR NATIONAL VIRTUE

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

A friend who wears the title of Professor before her name, and wears it too as worthily as did that fair maiden who graced the chair of mathematics and philosophy at Padua three centuries ago, said to me the other day as we sat enjoying the scent of lilacs and apple blossoms: "I have been much impressed this spring while digging among my plants with the thought of what a clean thing life is, how its vital currents even in the weakest organisms have a mysterious power to repel defilement. How clean and shining even the little cutworms come out from their long sleep in the ground. There is a beautiful analogy here between the physical and the spiritual life. I think this must have been in the Psalmist's mind when he sang, 'The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever,' for you see how he makes the two ideas supplementary, purity and everlastingness." Oh, ye evergreen hills of God, as ye rise up against the gold and purple of Life's sunsetting, it is good to know that the real life is beyond us—the life which has nothing to do with the mortal, the corruptible, the fleeting. The power to corrupt and defile is a deathly power, the revivifying, purifying power belongs to life; and so it depends on the reality and the amount of life which we carry in us, whether our "environment", to speak scientifically, or our "circumstances", to use the vulgar tongue, be too strong for us. Our lot may be the hardest, the most disagreeable, the most unfavorable to spiritual growth, and yet we may come out from it all, clean through the life which is in us, the mighty inbreathing of that same Word which kept St. Paul's converts pure amid the abominations of heathen Corinth. For where sin abounds grace doth much more abound. The highest lights are where the shadows are most heavy; the fullest life is over against death, the broken chrysalis, the bursting grain, the empty tomb. I know why the saints walk in white; I know why the purest thing on earth, a fountain of cool, crystal water, is made to image forth the life which is in God, for life and purity are inseparable.

A corrupt art, however gorgeous its fruitage, always has a destroying worm at the core; and corruption in society means exactly the same thing now that it did in the times of the Roman Cæsars—social death. Talk about national defences when national virtue is decaying! about the need of forts and navies when all the cannon that were ever cast, and all the armies that ever reddened field and wave with their blood, will never save America from her certain doom so long as Mammon and not Christ rules in her councils, and those of her public men who dare stand up for trnth and honor and righteousness are so few a little child can write them! "I sit a queen and am no widow," said Tyre of old, and even as she complacently wrapped her purple around her, the wealthy, voluptuous, haughty Tyre was dead—dead as she is to-day with the sea rolling over her, and the wail of prophecy her funeral dirge forever. Christian voters, look to it. Already the deathly plague spots of the saloon and the lodge have made the whole head sick and the whole heart faint, and what America wants now, for she only grows sicker and fainter with every nostrum prescribed by her wise men at Washington, is the oxygen of Christian politics, filling her lungs and purifying her blood; and then only shall we have an enduring nation because a clean nation; one we shall not have to blush for, as so many times in the past we have had bitter and shameful occasion to do. I know that many good men and women have a horror of politics. They consider it the devil's ground, and so it is, but only by usurpation. I claim that it belongs to Prince Immanuel, and every time I read the doings of a Prohibition convention I rejoice that this old and bad idea is being exploded. National Reform is national life. What we want is Christ in the market-place, Christ in the shop, Christ in the home, Christ at the polls, Christ everywhere.

Shall America be founded on the living Rock? Shall her age be only bounded by Time? Then let her hear the voice of God, "Wash you, make you clean." And let millions of snowy ballots, from Christian voters, weave her a spotless garment, unique among the nations of the earth; which so long as she wears it, though not a single cannon crown her grass-grown ramparts, will make America invulnerable.

GOD'S BOOK.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The Scriptures are to be regarded as a letter of instruction from God to us. They are God's revealed will to man. They tell us all God wishes us to know respecting his nature, character, work and government, and respecting man's origin, fall, redemption and destiny. It would be interesting to dwell upon revelation—the Holy Spirit making known to men the future—a gift enjoyed by only a few; upon inspiration, such an influence of the Spirit as made it impossible for the writers to err in recording the mind of God, a gift enjoyed by all the Bible writers; or upon illumination, the Holy Spirit enabling the human mind to understand the teachings of the Scriptures, a gift enjoyed by every believer in Christ. But our purpose at present is simply to consider the Bible as the Word of God. That it is such appears:

I. From its adaptation to the human heart. There are certain questions that are of eternal moment to every human being. From whence did I come, and whither am I going? What is wrong with my soul that it is natural for me to sin, as it is natural for the bee to sting or the serpent to bite? What is sin and what are its deserts? How can I be delivered from sin and its consequences? What becomes of me when I die? What is the destiny of my body? What will be the difference between the righteous and the wicked in the future world? These are questions of overwhelming interest to every son and daughter of Adam. The Bible is the only book in the world that answers them satisfactorily. Then on the principle of adaptation it must be from God. Adaptation proves divinity of origin. The eye is adapted to light and light to the eye. The ear is adapted to sound and sound to the ear. Food is adapted to the stomach and the stomach adapted to food. Fins and scales adapted to water and water adapted to fishes. Wings and hollow bones adapted to the air and the air adapted to birds. So the human heart is adapted to the Bible and the Bible to the human heart. It must be from God.

II. From its perfect oneness. The Bible was fifteen hundred years in writing and was composed by forty-two different men. These men lived in different places, in different generations, wrote in three different languages, Greek, Hebrew and Aramaic, and were largely ignorant of one another. They represented every different occupation. Some were prophets, some priests, and some kings. Some were carpenters, some fishermen, and some shepherds; some mechanics, some lawyers, and some philosophers. They wrote in every different style of composition. Some wrote in poetry and some in prose. Some wrote didactic paragraphs, some biography, some history, some parable, some epistle, some vision, some psalm, and some proverb. And some were educated, while others "were ignorant and unlearned." And yet when their writings were put together they made a perfect unit. There must have been a divine mind operating through these men, so that they wrote in harmony. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

III. From its majesty and purity. No human book compares with the Scriptures in majesty. They are written upon such an elevated plain that all the changes of view which have arisen from the discoveries of modern science have in no way affected them. The sun appeared the same and was just as useful to those in old times who believed that he revolved around the earth, as to us who know that he is the center around which the earth revolves. And so the Bible is so high that they could read it, believing as they did, and we can read it, believing as we do, without either party being shocked or disturbed in the least. It is infinitely above any human book. Moreover, it is a book of perfect purity. It is absolutely without a flaw. Those who read and study and practice the Bible teachings are universally pure. But here experience is the only test. Nathaniel Hawthorne observes that "Christianity is a grand cathedral with divinely pictured windows; standing without we can see no beauty, nor possibly can imagine any; but standing within, each ray of light reveals a harmony of unspeakably splendor."

IV. From the fulfillment of prophecy. If you had a very complicated lock, with a great number of wards and springs and bolts in it, and a key that fitted it perfectly, you would conclude that that key was made for that lock. In fact, no other conclusion would be rational. Well, the correspondence between that lock and key is not so perfect as the correspondence between Old Testament prophecy and New Testament history respecting Christ. The prophecies furnish as accurate a biography as the Gospels. The ancient heathen oracles dwelt in generalities but the prophecies in particulars. Babylon is "to be left without inhabitant." Tyre is to be "like the top of a rock whereon fishermen spread their nets;" Damascus "a ruinous heap;" Egypt "the basest of kingdoms;" and Jerusalem "sowed with salt." The fulfillment of these proves their divinity.

V. From its fruits. An Indian prince, who had been in England for some while studying her institutions, was asked what he thought of the Bible. He replied: "I believe it is a book from God, for I see all the good people believe in it and all the bad people reject it." Remove from this city all the roughs, all the drunkards, all the thieves, libertines and money-grips, and leave it to those who believe and study and practice the Bible, and there would be no need of policemen. They would be a law to themselves. On the other hand, take away all the churches and Bibles, and all who respect and honor them, and leave the city to the lawless and disobedient, and all the policemen in the State could not keep order. When the Queen of England was asked the secret of England's greatness, pointing to a Bible, she replied, "That Book." Three hundred years with the Bible has converted bleak Scotland into a garden; while fertile Spain without it has become a wilderness. Contrast those countries where the Bible is known and honored with those where it is unknown or repudiated. You compare England with China, the United States with Turkey, the North of Ireland with the South. Tennyson says:

> "Through the shadow of the globe
> We sweep into the brighter day,
> Better fifty years in Europe
> Than a cycle in Cathay."

Cincinnati, O.

THE HORROR OF NEGATIVES.

The expositions of secret societies contain, besides signs of recognition, others of admonition, which are used when a member sees another about to do anything which may affect the interest of himself or of the organization. These are called cautionary, trading or working signs, and are of constant use, while others are of rare occurrence, and obedience is enforced by the penalties of the order. In the consideration of secret societies they should not be omitted, because they are the tools and language of such institutions, by means of which one member becomes a master over others and is enabled to employ such in the furtherance of wrong; for they are as applicable to and as promotive of bad purposes as of good, which is the germ of the evil. An exposition without them is defective and deceptive. It is the tiger without the claws.

Most expositions of Freemasonry are incomplete, but Richardson's is more perfect in this respect; though in this work the subject is discussed in a pretended "Secret Monitor," which is inserted in the Chapter, whereas, by analogy and to be as effective as other societies, these working signs should be and are used by Master Masons. It must be a deviation from truth by the author. The signs are divided into affirmatives and negatives, and specimens are given; but in practice they are abbreviated to avoid observation, and are more arbitrary than represented and not limited to trade. They are enforced by the penalties of having the heart torn out and "being left without friends in the days of trouble,"—ostracism and boycotting, in common parlance. The enginery of this society is chiefly responsible for the prostitution of courts, the defeat of justice and the protection of crime, and the attention of the public is therefore particularly directed to it, more especially as it is the original which has been imitated in numerous systems of secret communication. It is the source of the dialects of clans and of evil.

Every town and village is within the jurisdiction and under the influence of a Masonic lodge, and by virtue of its laws the pretended friend interferes clandestinely by signs—the behests of slaves—in trade to diminish your gains and increase those of another. Judge, jury, lawyers and witnesses conspire by signs in court to reduce or defeat your claims in civil actions, and in criminal to spare the guilty authors of your injuries. The order by signs also secretly prevents employment, aid, comfort and charity in persecution and fills almshouses for the support of the public. It turns away friends and severs social intercourse; renders the peaceable, upright and honest the reverse; encourages the revengeful and malicious and raises mobs. The member makes a log-rolling for legal robbery or revenge, —the art of the craven wolf—for a lie, or token cast, is sufficient to set the machinery in motion. Evasion of sight is the sole escape from deference to signs for the initiated; the boycott is the penalty of open defiance. They are emblems and finger-boards of darkness, plotting secrecy, that in Morgan's time exhausted every expedient to avoid and still avoids honest speech, and an excess of negatives betokens hate and unpopularity, the terror of the worldly. It is the tyranny of a thousand. Neighbor owns neighbor and moves heaven and earth at dissent.

Unfortunately the use of the working signs of Freemasonry are not limited to the order, nor to secret societies, but have evidently extended to some of the uninitiated. The latter may be ignorant of their origin, but have recognized their use and acquired the habit of unquestioning obedience, the art of the slave ("Freemasonry floats in the air"). They have stolen the tools of Satan, but lost manhood is the price of possession. They have sold their liberties for a pottage. They are coerced by self-interest, and the phantoms of adversity and unpopularity, hobgoblins, by which the lodge holds sway over all who speak its secret language. Their acquisition necessitates perpetual tribute and becomes an "old man of the mountain" until the grave. They are constrained to pass the signs and interdicts of the order; are its menials and slaves; make its enemies their enemies and its friends their friends. They are jackals to the lion. Moreover, like the rightful users, they make their signs their oaths and can neither believe nor be believed without their constant application. "They speak Masonically"; they swear by the gods of Freemasonry! Verily, great is Baal, who has abolished every sanction and subverted every power for his own; established rule by the strongest for rule by justice; controls prosperity and popularity and fixes destiny. Let the reader observe and judge. Some examples and applications of affirmatives and negatives are given in "My Experiences with Secret Societies by a Traveler," advertised in the Cynosure. *

ILLUMINATION AND CIRCUMAMBULATION.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Many of the rites and ceremonies of ancient heathenism and sun-worship practiced in Freemasonry are performed in other secret lodges. Especially the rite of "Illumination," and also of "Circumambulation." We must notice these briefly.

Daniel Sickels, Secretary General of the Supreme Council of the Northern Jurisdiction of the Masons of the United States, says: "The Rite of Illumination is a very ancient ceremony, and constituted an important feature in all the mysteries of the early ages. In the Egyptian, Cabirian, Sidonian, Eleusinian, Scandinavian and Druidical rituals it held a prominent place, and in them all represented the same ideas. It marked the termination of the mystic pilgrimage through gloom and night, and was emblematical of that moral and intellectual light which pours its divine radiance on the mind after it has conquered prejudice, and passion, and ignorance, with which it has so long been struggling."—Sick-

els's Ahiman Rezon, or Freemasons' Guide, page 64

Grand High Priest Mackey truly says: "The circumambulation among the pagan nations was referred to the great doctrine of Sabaism, or sun-worship. Freemasonry alone has preserved the primitive meaning, which was a symbolic allusion to the sun as the source of physical light, and the most wonderful work of the Grand Architect of the Universe. The reason assigned for the ceremony in the modern lectures of Webb and Cross is absolutely beneath criticism. The lodge represents the world; the three principal officers represent the sun in his three principal positions—at rising, at meridian, and at setting. The circumambulation, therefore, alludes to the apparent course of the solar orb through these points around the world."—Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, page 24.

"In the rite of circumambulation we find another ceremony borrowed from the ancient Freemasonry that was practiced in the mysteries. In ancient Greece, when the priests were engaged in the rite of sacrifice, they and the people always walked three times round the altar while singing a sacred hymn. In making this procession great care was taken to move in imitation of the course of the sun. For this purpose they commenced at the east, and passing on by the way of the south to the west, and thence by the north, they arrived at the east again. By this means, as it will be observed, the right hand was always nearest the altar."—Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, page 32.

Along with all these self-evident proofs that Freemasonry is pure, unadulterated sun-worship, is another that settles the matter once and forever. It is the second section of the Master Mason's degree.

HIRAM ABIFF.

"One thing, at least, is incapable of refutation; and that is, that we are indebted to the Tyrian Masons for the introduction of the symbol of Hiram Abiff. The idea of the symbol, although modified by the Jewish Masons, is not Jewish in its inception. It was evidently borrowed from the pagan mysteries, where Bacchus, Adonis, Proserpine, and a host of other apotheosized beings play the same role that Hiram does in the Masonic mysteries."—Mackey's Symbolism of Freemasonry, page 20

"The legend of the third degree has been considered of so much importance that it has been preserved in the symbolism of every Masonic rite. No matter what modifications or alterations the general system may have undergone—no matter how much the ingenuity or the imagination of the founders of rites may have perverted or corrupted other symbols, abolishing the old and substituting new ones—the legend of the Temple Builder has ever been left untouched, to present itself in all the integrity of its ancient mythical form. The idea of the legend was undoubtedly borrowed from the Ancient Mysteries, where the lesson was the same as that now conveyed in the third degree of Masonry."—Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, page 99.

"The ceremonial of the Degree of Master Mason is unquestionably the most important, impressive and instructive portion of the Ritual of Ancient Freemasonry." "That portion of the Rite which is connected with the legend of the Tyrian Artist is well worthy the deep and earnest study of thoughtful men." "Against the notion that it is the representation of a scene that actually occurred in the Temple, it may well be urged that, outside of Masonic tradition, there is no proof that an event, such as is related in connection with the Temple Builder, ever transpired; and, besides, the ceremony is older by more than a thousand years than the age of Solomon. There are characters impressed upon it which cannot be mistaken. It is thoroughly Egyptian, and is closely allied to the supreme rite of the Isianic mysteries."—Sickels's Ahiman Rezon or Freemasons' Guide, page 195.

And so it is. A half-million of Masonic sun-worshipers in the United States—benighted Egyptian idolatry—civilized heathenism. Many of these sun-worshipers are found in the Lord's house, between the pulpit and the altar, "with their faces toward the east, and they worship the sun toward the east." And the end is not yet.

FIGHT FOR YOUR COUNTRY.

Over one of the gateways in the great quadrangle of Trinity College, Cambridge, there is a figure of the warlike monarch, Edward III., with the inscription "Fight for your country." This was doubtless intended as a stimulus to those amongst the students who might be looking forward to a military career as their possible, or probable, destiny in life. But happily it is a precept which may also be interpreted in a higher sense than that originally contemplated by those who placed it there. It may justly point to every form of patriotic citizenship by which a man can serve his native land and the world at large, and especially to those noble actions and endeavors by which the religious, social, and philanthropic interests of mankind are best promoted. To the youths who propose to devote themselves to the ministry of the Gospel, to science, the healing art, law, and magistracy, or commerce and manufacture, to all of these, the motto, "Fight for your country," or in other words, "Combat its enemies of impiety, ignorance, disorder, and poverty," is more truly applicable than to the military aspirant; for in such modes of national service consists the truest patriotism.

There is scarcely a word in any language, the true sense of which is more systematically misrepresented and misunderstood, than the term patriotism. It is often made synonymous with silly braggadocio, political foolhardiness, and selfish disregard of the rights of other men or other nations. Not unseldom it is made to cover an unreasoning vanity. The peace of Europe is being continually imperiled because large and influential classes amongst the peoples of France, Germany and Russia cherish such an extreme sensitiveness as to their military prestige, that they are willing to sacrifice all the most important interests of their respective countries, and to incur the most tremendous risks of ruin and bloodshed, rather than endure a slight in regard to their prowess as warriors.—Sel.

MIND WHAT YOU PROMISE.

There are many associations, secular, political, and even religious, where a condition of admittance is an oath or pledge of obedience, sometimes to unknown commands. Many a man has done acts which he hated and abhorred, simply because he had bound himself with an oath or obligation to obey men of whom he knew little or nothing, and do things of which he had no previous knowledge.

Speaking of certain murders and outrages perpetrated by assassins at the bidding of a certain secret society, the Toledo Blade justly says: "No man has the right to place himself where he has no moral control of his own actions. Yet this is what he does when he joins a secret society and binds himself to blindly obey all orders from headquarters without hesitation or thought of whether they are right or wrong. Indeed, he dare not question the mandates of these persons whom he does not know. He must simply do as he is bidden, even though it makes him a partner in the most atrocious crimes, when he has no intention of commiting a moral wrong. The lessons these disclosures teach is to become a member of no societies whose purposes are not openly declared; to take no oaths to obey persons whose very names are unknown."

Christian men have one Master, Christ; and any association which demands that a man promise to obey the unknown orders of erring men is essentially anti-Christian. Such a promise is null and void, because it enters the province of conscience, and interferes with the authority of God. The man who bows the knee, and promises to obey any man's commandments, whether he be king, emperor, pope or bishop, takes a position which Scripture does not justify, and for which he may yet be called to render up a sad account.

"Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard;" was the bold reply of Peter and John when a whole Sanhedrim forbade them to speak in the name of Jesus.

There are unworthy and vain talkers whose mouths must be stopped. There are babes that must be nurtured, and untrained Christians who are to be nourished up in words of faith and sound doctrine. There are men that sin who must be rebuked, and there are those who trespass against their brethren and refuse to hear the church, who are to be set aside as heathen men and publicans. There are men who walk disorderly, whom Christians are to note and withdraw themselves from. There are elders whom the Holy Ghost makes overseers or bishops, like those at Ephesus and Philippi (Acts 20; Phil. 1: 7), who are to watch over and guard the flock who are under their care; and to those elders in the various churches the followers of Christ were to be subject, as they were all to be subject one to another.

But while this order and discipline is proper and scriptural, and divinely ordained, yet when a man is chosen and called to the service of God he has no right to bind himself to subjection or obedience to men. "Ye are bought with a price; be ye not servants of men."

All claims to authority of this kind are mere usurpation. No such authority is derived from the apostles, for the apostles never had it. They did once undertake to stop a man who was casting out devils, thinking that if they had authority to cast out devils, they had authority to control other folks who cast out devils; but the Lord soon taught them their mistake. And not long after these mighty monopolists, who proposed to take the entire charge of casting out devils, found themselves baffled and humiliated before a single demoniac boy, and were forced to inquire, "Why could not we cast him out?" Just as many ecclesiastics of our own day, after persecuting and rejecting the faithful servants of God, stand baffled and powerless in the presence of a world that lieth in the wicked one, and after vainly undertaking to rule other people, find in the end that they can neither rule the devil, nor even themselves.

The apostles succeeded better after learning to mind their own business. Even the great Apostle to the Gentiles expressly disclaimed having dominion over the faith of the Corinthian church (2 Cor. 1: 24); and if he did not possess it, surely none of his pretended successors have ever attained to such authority.

"We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts 5: 29), was the apostle's bold reply to the men who sought to withstand the work of God. And the word is as true now as it was then, for the curse and calamity of the church for ages has been submission to man rather than God. Such authority, once assumed and admitted, has no limits, until the great Anti-Christ sits in the temple of God, and makes laws as if he were the "one Lawgiver who is able to save and to destroy." Division, distraction, persecution and apostasy all spring from this baleful root, and power granted to good men with the best of intentions, is used by bad men for the worst of purposes.

The Holy Spirit is in the church. Christ is present with two or three. No convocation or conclave can have greater authority than his presence confers. The church in the house of Aquila or Onesimus is as authoritative in its legitimate acts as it would be if all the crowned heeds and mitred ecclesiastics of the universe were present to lend it the sanction of their presence and their authority. Where Christ is, there is headquarters; and Christ comes and dwells with the individual soul. And when the Holy Spirit fills the heart, illuminates the mind, enlightens the understanding and attends the Word which is given us for our guidance and instruction, we are in subjection to a higher than human power.

We are to obey God. No man has a right to claim authority over a servant of the Most High. His Master is the King of the universe. What others have no right to claim, we have no right to concede or promise. Who has a right to judge "another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth." We are bought with blood, and bound by every gracious tie. Let us never yield to man the allegiance which is due to God alone.—The Christian, Boston.

GRAND ARMY FRAUDS.

[From the Birmingham Free Press.]

Reports are current that government officials here have discovered a conspiracy among certain members of the Grand Army to rob the government by false pension claims. An investigation of certain Grand Army posts discovered a widespread conspiracy. A prominent member of the G. A. R. was interviewed by a reporter of the New York Times. He said:

"Some of the worst scums of the earth managed to get in some posts and their element grows strong, while respectable members who do not care to associate with them stay away from meetings. This feeling has led to the state of affairs in a certain lodge in this city. The bad element controlled it and were linked together to work the pension 'racket' for all it was worth, stopping at nothing to accomplish their purpose. Furthermore, they even furnished money to defend Darling, Coleman and Stephens, arrested for presenting fraudulent claims, on the ground that they were being persecuted, and by this claim good men were compelled to assist in carrying out the scheme. The public was appealed to in the name of the 'old veteran,' but nothing was mentioned about a defense fund, and honest men's money was given, but not for the purpose for which it was used."

Another highly-respected old soldier said:

"I am heartily glad that this thing will be investigated. It is rotten to the core, or at least it appears to be, and the men that are into it do not show anything else. I have had suspicions for a long time, but the tracks were so thoroughly covered that I could not see the crookedness. I understand that the government has sufficient evidence to make the wholesale arrests, and that many of the persons implicated are being continually shadowed, and will be arrested after the Patterson case is concluded."

This case presents a phase of lodge history very common throughout the country. Evil-minded men, crooked men, rascals, in fact, "scums," get into the lodges from Masonry down to the G. A. R. Honest, decent men get disgusted with such affiliations and quit attending the meetings, but keep up their membership and pay their dues. The "scums" are in their glory then. They can run the lodge to suit themselves; they have the character and good standing of these stay-at-home members to back them up, and they also have their dues to help them keep in running order. The result is quite frequently just as the G. A. R. men quoted say it has been in certain G. A. R. posts. "Good men were thus compelled to assist to carry out their schemes."

We do not blame the decent men for getting disgusted and staying at home, but they should renounce their evil companionship.

[From the Geneva, Ill., Patrol.]

When the Patrol a few months ago said what, from personal knowledge of Kane county Republican politics, was known to be true, some of the enemies of temperance in the G. A. R. seized the opportunity to attempt a boycott of this paper. The result was dreadful. Since then numerous things have come to light, which reaffirm the average foresight of the Patrol in discerning the secret spring of things political. For instance, Congressman Hopkins said when the legislature was selecting a Republican successor to Logan, "The G. A. R. influence is paramount in Illinois." And now comes Gen. W. T. Sherman, and publicly, on Decoration Day, administers this reproof to the Grand Republican Secret Training Club:

"And now I ask my comrades of the Grand Army which made these civic services possible, as one of themselves, not claiming any privileges by reason of exalted ranks and honors far above my deserts, if it is not better that we should devote Decoration Day to the cemeteries which contain our honored dead, and the dedication of permanent monuments in their honor for the teaching of patriotism to future generations, instead of swelling street parades and pageants for the glorification of the 'belligerent non-combatants,' who make use of us for their own purposes?"

And the Patrol replies, "Yes, General; you are very right—but you should have seen it earlier. And you should administer the same rebuke to the Sons of Veterans, and the 'grand-daughters of the one-hundred-day men,' and the 'infant deserters'—when these latter named organizations are formed."

LETTER FROM THE CONGO.

ARLINGTON MISSION, STANLEY POOL, Africa,
April 22, 1888.

Last Sabbath all our company were happy because of mail arrival, but I was sad as I returned from Kinchessa, having neither letter nor paper. I make the best of it of course. My time began here March 28, and unless we make other arrangements will terminate in June the same date. I am much more pleased with my company and surroundings now than heretofore. Religiously I cannot complain. We have family worship regularly and thanks returned three times a day, which is as it used to be at home. We take turns in conducting family worship, so you see I am again surrounded with religious privileges. My work here has been mostly at the forge, reclaiming tools which passed through the great fire at Leopoldville, when the Mission was totally destroyed and £7,000, or $35,000, were lost. The steam launch of the expedition is finished and has gone up the river in charge of Mr. Ed. Glave, who is contributor to the London Illustrated News, and a former servant of Stanley's.

I am here reminded of a visit last Tuesday, Apr. 17, from Mr. Ward, who is another sketcher and correspondent of London papers. He had come in a canoe from the mouth of Arruwerni river (Stanley's Camp) to the Equator Station, intending to continue for 400 miles farther west to Leopoldville, and thence to the coast to telegraph, "No news from Stanley." At the Equator he fell in with the State steamer (H. M. Stanley) and so changed from his canoe and arrived here by the Stanley on Sabbath, one week ago. He tells us that they have suffered greatly for food, and sixty of their camp have been buried and many have deserted. We fear bad news as he was reticent and would not trust anyone with dispatches, but goes in person to St. Paul de Loando which necessitates over 400 miles on foot and 300 by water, the round trip—as he returns this way immediately. He is a pleasant appearing man of about 24 years of age. His stay was short, but I watched him closely, being conscious that, though roughly dressed, he was of some importance, and when the name was given me I decided at once what Ward it was, and found out through Bro. Grenfell I was right. You think strange of my being so particular, but anything that relieves the monotony of life is of intense interest to us.

I have been to Kimpoka Mission. Dr. Harrison comes monthly to Arlington and Leopoldville for Kimpoka mail. The State does not carry mail farther than Leopoldville. He comes in a canoe one day, does his business the next, and returns the third day. Mr. Brown suggested that I might take the Bangallas and go with the Dr. and bring back a Hippo for chop. I agreed and so the matter rested until finally Mr. Brown concluded to accompany us, which was good news to me. March 29, before day, Brown and a boy came with a lantern and awoke me for early tea and a start at about 6:30 or 7 A. M., with two days' food, and blankets, pots and whatnot. We started on our twenty-five-miles' canoe journey, against the current all the way. For hours we moved up stream, and as there was a little spirit of competition between Dr. Harrison's canoe, in which I took passage, which was paddled by natives from Kimpoka, and the Bangallas of Arlington, who paddled the canoe in which Mr. Brown was, we lost sight of each other for hours. But at about 11 A. M. our hunger made itself felt, and seeing Brown had the chop, I began to look eagerly for some signal, and soon, from the north bank of the river, I descried a signal and our canoe crossed over and soon we had camped on Boma Island, and were regaled with mutton-broth, kwango and a dish of tea.

Now we start again, but ere long the Hippos prove a source of temptation, so we begin to drop lead among them from our Snyder and Martini rifles. Dr. Harrison punctured the skull of one, and it was decided that as his men were afraid to go to look for it the Bangallas should paddle the Dr. in search of his game. Mr. Brown, with the luggage, was shifted into our canoe and we made slowly up the river while the Bangallas moved cautiously down in search of the Hippo. We looked around occasionally and soon the cry was raised by one of our company. "The canoe is capsized! They are all in the water!" Our canoe immediately headed down stream and we were all bound for the rescue, but in a few moments, and before we reached them, all had regained the canoe and began bailing in good earnest. Our loss was not severe. Joseph Gunn, a Mission boy of 18 years, had been pitched head-first into the Pool, and had let go his Snyder rifle. One of our Bangallas had lost his loin-cloth, which was all the covering he had, and Dr. Harrison had been rolled about in the bottom of the canoe, which being half full of water resulted in his being soaked thoroughly.

Now we moved on again, expecting fully to reach Kimpoka before dark, but when three hours from the goal we discovered in the northeast a cloud of a very dark gray color, and rising ominously as it moved like a thing of life toward us. It was flanked on either side with inky black clouds, and now the wind began to blow slightly. A storm was about to break in fury on us and our only choice was an island. The paddles brought both canoes to shallow water. But none to soon, for now the tornado was loose and Stanley Pool was seething and boiling as though suddenly filled with the lava from a thousand volcanoes. The wind drove the rain with terrible force so that our waterproof and umbrella were but little protection. Our men were overmatched, so taking two paddles and driving them deep in the sand of the shoal on which they had drawn our canoes, one on either side, they lashed them so as to prevent the canoes from drifting and here we sat until the worst of the storm was over. But night was fast approaching, and we must not venture out on the Pool in the darkness; so, like Paul, the great apostle, on the Isle of Melita, we gathered sticks and made a fire to warm ourselves. The mats of the Bangallas were so arranged as to protect us from rain, and soon a cup of tea was ready which was taken with a relish. We spread our blankets on the white sand of this barren island and soon forgot all our perils, as we soundly slept for a few hours. At 3 A. M, Saturday, the last day of March, we all seemed of one mind and so hurriedly packed up and paddled for Kimpoka. The silvery light of the moon was reflected in the Pool, and was so seemingly intensified that the coming on of daylight was so gradual as to be almost imperceptible, and we passed from moon-light into gray dawn almost unconsciously. About 7 A. M., as we sighted our landing place, the sun shone beautifully, and nature, though wild in appearance, seemed lovely to us after such a dismal time as we endured through the storm of the previous night. We soon forced our way through the tangled mass of vegetation which overhung the path from the river to the Mission-house; and now I meet for the first time Bro. Elkins and wife of Bishop Taylor's Mission.

[The concluding part of this letter from Rev. E. Mathews will appear next week.—ED.]

The Green Mountain Christian Union is an organization of undenominational churches scattered over New England. Their creed is very simple. Each church is independent. They exalt the Bible and the doctrine of holiness; favor divine healing; love the coming of the Lord, and disapprove of secret societies, pride, formality, and vain ornaments. They publish the Prayer Union Quarterly and the Independent Christian. Their test of fellowship is humble piety and sound morality rather than intellectual assent to a creed. They consider it wrong to take any sectarian nickname, preferring to be known as churches of Jesus Christ. At the same time they exhibit nothing but love and good will towards their fellow disciples who differ from them in this respect. Associations similar to this exist in Kentucky and California. Many excellent people deplore the sad effects of the numerous divisions among Christians, and yet see no way to escape the evil. If our Lord's last prayer for the oneness of his people meant visible union of his real disciples, he can and will bring it to pass. It is not advisable to put off all the good things promised in the Bible until the next world. "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." —Christian Witness.

REFORM NEWS.

AT THE LOUISIANA CAPITAL.

BATON ROUGE, La., June 18, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came here on the morning of the 13th, and found lodging with sister Frances B. Gallion. She is opposed to lodgery and is also out-and-out for temperance. I called on Rev. Geo. Bird, pastor of Shiloh Baptist church, who reads the Cynosure, but as he is a Mason he gives little time to the paper. Rev. Hannibal Williams, pastor of Mount Zion Baptist church, has renounced lodgery and don't allow the orders to come into his church in uniform. I called on Rev. Robert Brooks, pastor of Macedonia Baptist church. He also has left the lodge. His chief objection is they are too expensive and are breaking asunder the Baptist churches. Rev. R. F. Hurley, the A. M. E. pastor, declined to be seen, as he was unwell. Mr. Hurley is a High Mason, and is the author of the resolution before the conference of the A. M. E. churches in New Orleans in February, when I was distributing tracts, warning the people against receiving bogus literature in the streets.

There are eleven churches here in all, and the lodges are legion. I visited the State Penitentiary, and met Judge T. J. Ford, of the famous Ford vs. Murphy case of New Orleans. He was very busy at his writing desk, but very cordially received me in his office and asked to be remembered to his friends in New Orleans. I think all persons should try and shun these walls.

There is much business going on here just now. Pipe is being laid to furnish water through the city. I have pretty well walked all over the city and tried to get an exact account of the lodges, but find it impossible.

Since Elder H. Williams has left the lodge and preaches separation, the secretists have been trying to injure his influence by circulating reports that he received money from the Democrats to defeat the Republican party. Of course the devil was a liar from the beginning. Bro. Williams is not a politician. I find in private conversation that many are sick of the lodge, but they are afraid to come out. Bro. Jordan was here some time ago and the lodge felt the effects of his visit.

I preached at Mount Zion Baptist church, Rev. H. Williams, pastor, on Sabbath, to a large congregation; and the better part of them seemed enthusiastic. However, the lodges were well represented, as Bro. Williams had announced that I would preach a sermon on the religion of Masonry. I was advised not to preach or distribute tracts against lodgery, but the Lord used me as it was best. Both men and women came up and bade me God-speed. Many sisters and brothers said they would give up their lodges, but a few said they would join more; this of course was lodge boasting.

Shiloh Baptist church gave an excursion from here to Vicksburg to-day by lodge dictatorship, and they made a complete failure financially. We trust our people will see the foolishness of these excursions. I am informed that a young brother said while I was preaching that I had to leave this town. The lodge always makes great boastings in secret to assassinate a man in the dark.

It will be well for the next N. C. A. annual convention to be held in Baton Rouge. There are about 12,000 inhabitants, and this is a lodge stronghold Mount Zion Baptist church would be kindly tendered for a convention. It is large and plenty of room and well fitted. I would suggest Baton Rouge as the next place for the annual convention. Many persons called on me to-day; some friends and some lodgeites. Among them was the P. G. F. of Amos Lodge and G. U. O. of O. F. of New Orleans. I met several brethren this evening and we had a debate on lodgery. I proved to them from Mackey's Ritualist that Masonry rejects Jesus Christ. A good work has been inaugurated here. Friends can do good by sending tracts for distribution to Rev. Sam. Williams, (Box 96) and Mrs. Frances B. Gallion, No 100, St. Joseph street, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

I truly appreciate Bro. Hinman's suggestion for the establishing a permanent agency in New Orleans. I wrote to Bro. Stoddard on that matter some time ago. The secret brotherhoods gave a ball here a few weeks ago and a preacher was doorkeeper. The Jakes and Brotherhood at Lobdells have so paralyzed the churches that they seldom have church services over there; but the lodges have their parades and seranades on Sundays. The Good Samaritans anticipate giving a grand free supper to-night to show honor to their Grand Worthy Chief.

ROSEDALE, LA., JUNE 21.—I left Baton Rouge Tuesday. While crossing the river on the transfer a gentleman came up to me and grasped my hand and introduced himself to me as Rev. Randall Fields, pastor of a Baptist church a few miles from Baton Rouge. He said, "I congratulate you on the wonderful sermon you preached Sunday night. I tell you a good many were angered, but your sermon was felt throughout the city. These secret orders came near separating me from my wife. A preacher induced her to join and also worked hard to get me, but I could not find it in the Bible. God certainly sent you here and he will surely bless your work." I distributed tracts both on the transfer boat and on the train. I arrived here at about 3:30 P. M. There is one white and one colored M. E. church in Rosedale and two Baptist churches about two miles each from the village. This is an old Southern town with about 100 inhabitants. The people are mostly poor farmers, but lodgery has strong hold here on these poor people, especially among the colored Methodists. I called on Rev. Robert Dennis, pastor of the Baptist church two miles below Rosedale, from whom I had invitation to come out here. I found him seemingly filled with glee. He said that he always thought secret societies wrong, but not having educational advantages he thought it wrong to try and suppress intelligence, but he is sure now it is wrong, for a few of his members have separated from the church and built a hall and resort to the lodge hall every Sabbath and hold services therein. You can see from a glance that secrecy is ruining our churches. The speculating Negroes of Baton Rouge have organized a new secret lodge under the title of "The Knights of Crusade," and many poor creatures are being hoodwinked therein. It will be well to publish the ritual of the S. S. of C. and other minor lodges. It will do much good among the Negroes. The Universal Brotherhood is the favorite lodge here, as they have their own hall and promise $500 after death (but nothing while living).

I preached last night at Grosstete Baptist church, Rev. Robert Dennis, pastor. We had a large and quiet audience, the majority of which heartily endorsed all that I said against the lodge. Some of them were seceders and they were particularly loud in their amens. This church has been almost paralyzed ever since lodgery came into these parts, but it is getting somewhat united now. I called on Rev. Mr. Rogers, the M. E. pastor, but he was out of town. I learned, however, that he is deeply mixed in lodgery. I also called on Rev. Felix Jones, Baptist pastor, and he was not at home, but his wife was perfectly delighted with the tracts I gave her, and "Freemasonry Illustrated." She said she would know Bro. Jones's lodge secrets now. She never had joined the lodge. She thinks Bro. Jones is very sick of his lodge. I have distributed many tracts in these parts.

I go from here to Plaquemine. Thence to New Orleans, so as to attend the Baptist State Convention at Shreveport, the second Tuesday in July.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

WE SHALL HEAR FROM NORTHWESTERN OHIO.

COLUMBUS, O., June 28.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This will inform the friends in this State that I am again in the field at work. Feeling the need of a little rest from constant travel and speaking, I concluded to accept the opportunity to attend the N. C. A. annual meeting and Commencement at Wheaton College.

To-morrow I go north for a short trip to Leonardsburg and Ashley. Next week I shall, D. V., start on a more extended trip to the northwestern portion of our State.

Enroute for Chicago I met Mr. W. Head of New Haven, Ohio. He has on his farm a small lake where many resort during the hot weather. Meetings have been held there by the W. C. T. U. and other societies. Mr. Head has read President Finney on Masonry and expressed his approbation of our work, and will arrange meetings as soon as I can attend to them.

I wrote some time since of the Odd fellows' endeavor to use the ministry of this city as an advertising agency. Another secret society calling themselves the Mystic Chain, established in the portion of our city known as "Fly-town," are following their example. The first we heard of them they marched in a body to the United Brethren church, evidently expecting the pastor to speak words of encouragement. He had been requested to take for his subject, "The good Samaritan." He, however, had not prepared on that line, but told the "brethren" if they would come again he would try and accommodate them. During the past week one of their number called on Rev. Hiatt, presented him with a paper containing a sermon given by some Methodist preacher in their favor, and requested that he preach in their interest. He, of course, refused to do so. The delegate asked if he had any objection to their attending his church; being assured that he had not, some half dozen of them filed in last Sabbath with their gewgaws on. His theme for the morning was the Pharisee. We trust they may profit by what they heard.

These are times when every reformer should be awake to the privileges and duties of the hour. Momentous questions are at stake, on the settlements of which the perpetuity of our government rests. Shall we not accomplish much during the summer months? W. B. STODDARD.

FROM A REFORMER'S NOTE-BOOK.

GENEVA COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

In addition to the clear skies and pure air of Waukesha, Wis., there is undoubtedly healing virtue in its renowned mineral waters. Increasing thousands are testifying to this, who have been here and tried it. John A. McKee, of Allegheny, a wealthy business man, with whom I lodged in that city recently, said he came here in 1878 badly broken down in health. He had spent most of his summer in Colorado without improvement, when a few weeks spent at Waukesha gave him a larger fund of health than he had enjoyed for years. Cynosure friends coming here should call on John F. Icke, one of the successful business men, who always keeps the Cynosure within easy reach, and there is little in its pages escapes his notice.

I assisted Bro. Isaiah Faris last Sabbath in their communion service, preaching on Friday, Saturday, Sabbath and Monday. These Covenanters organized their congregation in 1848, and are still holding steadily on; some of those composing the organization then are still the leading workers. This congregation has never yielded in its opposition to all secret societies; its pastor is a strong friend of the reform. Bro. J. B. Galloway is pastor of the U. P. Church close by—so close that his ringing tones can almost be heard, when the windows are up, and he is preaching on the evils of secretism.

The National Republican platform just adopted by that party surprises us by its failure to recognize the great, vital, burning issue of Prohibition. It makes no reference to any moral standard other than the will of the people. It declares the citizen to be the sovereign, and the officials to be their servants, instead of God the sovereign and the magistrate his servant. It opposes our Christian civilization by advocating the repeal of the tax on tobacco. It panders to the selfishness of the people by its hostility to Chinese labor and immigration, though no class of immigrants are as harmless and industrious. It declares in favor of home-rule for Ireland, which would be handing over the government of the one and a fourth million Protestants of that country to the tender mercies of its five million Roman Catholics. It declares rightly in regard to our own territories, that "whenever the condition of population, material resources, public intelligence and morality are such as to insure a State local government therein, the people of such territories should be permitted as a right inherent in them to form for themselves constitutions and State governments, and be admitted into the Union." But every political student knows that neither the intellectual nor moral condition of Ireland are such as to warrant self-government. While there are some good principles in the Republican platform, yet its main features are a pandering to the low and immoral classes, and an attempt to eliminate great moral issues from our politics. We feel it to be the duty of every good citizen to help to lay the old Republican party away in the grave. Like the old Whig party, it has proved itself incompetent to meet the issues of the present day, and is seeking to live merely by hoeing grass over the graves of its dead heroes of former times.

I had the privilege of attending the commencement exercises of Geneva College, at Beaver Falls, Pa., May 24th, where Dr. H. H. George, President of the National Christian Association, graduated twenty-five fine looking young men and women; among them was a son and daughter of Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, who was present and led in the opening prayer. This makes five of his children who have graduated at this college. The college is noted for its thorough instruction, and the prominence given to reform ideas. I never heard at any college so many radical reform ideas in the orations. The students' minds seem to be saturated with them. Prof. W. J. Coleman fills the chair of Political Science vacated by Prof. McAllister, and promises to become as noted in this line of instruction as his predecessor. No college in the land is more pronounced in its opposition to secret societies than Geneva. M. A. GAULT.

REFORMERS, BE OF GOOD CHEER.

MARYVILLE, Mo.

TO THE TRUE AMERICANS:—I have a few words of comfort. You may as well prepare to be made sad, when you come to learn how very many of our American, so-called, Christians, who claim to be on the Lord's side, when the voting day comes will vote on the devil's side. This I have seen before. This same class of Americans pray well, but vote like the devil. I have lived as one who has been present and witnesseth, or saw with my own eyes the result of such abominations.

I well remember the time when John C. Fremont and Fred. Douglass, in their joint movement to wipe out what was then called the curse of the American people, were scorned and reproached far more by the great political bodies in their time than the Prohibition element in this our day is by the Republicans or Democrats. Were there any two men last week in that large Republican Convention at Chicago (all things considered) more honored than Fremont and Douglass? What opened the eyes of these praying men? It was deep sorrow, caused by separation, starvation and death. The cruel war opened the eyes of their understanding. They now vote and pray against that which caused all their sufferings and woe. Now Douglass and Fremont are all sound.

Just here, beloved brethren, is where the good cheer comes in. These men who now vote for the the devil, in order to turn them to practice what they preach, must part with fathers, brothers, sons, —yes, wives, sisters, daughters. These must be starved, ruined, and slain by the demon, Strong Drink. Then, after they are dead, these strange professors will begin to call to the front the men who, like Fremont and Douglass, in their time for freedom stood firm. So these true men, true to the Constitution of the United States and God's Word —now, even now, true—will be called in due time and introduced as Douglass was. The chairman said: "Gentlemen of the convention, I have the honor to present to you a man who needs no introduction, our old friend, Mr. Douglass."

Glory be to the God of nations! We shall need no introduction in conventions nor elsewhere; but will be known and read of all men, as true American citizens who want "a more perfect union," who are bound to provide for the common defense, and are determined to promote the general welfare; having established the principles of justice. We cannot help but secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and dear children.

God has pronounced a woe on all classes connected with the strong drink business. The voter, drinker and dealer will alike tremble when they find how the devil has deceived them. Prov. 20:1. But, reformers, fear not. Be patient; our time to be introduced will soon come, bless God. We will need no introduction. Let us remember, "he can work by few as well as by many." See Gideon's three hundred.

What we want and must have is this: a conviction as to what God demands of us. No party feeling for one moment must be cherished. We must be unselfish and true to God. All posted men know that the old parties are prostrate and helpless beneath the cruel heel of the worst of despots, the gigantic foe of all classes. God's people are escaping from the unquenchable fire which ever burns at his feet. I see no difference as to the two great parties. I see as many from the Democrat side as the Republican coming to themselves, and saying, As for me I will serve God; or will vote to have the devil's main business in the world made illegal. Some don't want God in the Constitution or anything said about politics in a revival meeting. All such men in my revivals I invite forward for prayers. For if they knew God as I know him, they would want him everywhere and by all means in our American Constitution. And if they know, as I know, how the devil reigns in the political world, they would whip him there. Yours until our general introduction. Amen. R. SMITH.

RIGHTEOUS POLITICS.

DEKALB, Iowa.

We hope there will be a ticket in the field worthy the votes of American patriots. It was desirable that prohibition advance under our banners, as the plank is "American party oak," consequently the powers of darkness would sink it. But if the righteous principles of the American party keep temperance divorced from the lodge, the nation will be exalted above the saloon as much as it has been above slavery. The principles which have been promulgated by the American party have taken deep root in honest American hearts. It is the right kind of political seed sown in the best ground of the nation. The crop will come to maturity; it is of God's planting. It seems that Prohibition is the advance step to be taken in the harvest along the line of reform. We can (reluctantly) give up party name, but God would disown us if we abandoned our principles.

The plans to defeat Prohibition are laid in the dark, though many lodgemen are better than the principle of secretism, who openly avow for Prohibition and vote that ticket and offend their brother saloon-keeper who belongs to the lodge. The saloon-keeper, to be successful, must have the cover of darkness. Prohibition, to be successful, needs not the cover of the lodge. A tree cannot bear good fruit in the shade. Let us honor that "righteousness that exalteth a nation," above the saloon and the lodge. CYRUS SMITH.

A REPUBLICAN ON THE G. A. R. PENSION BUSINESS.

[A Letter to the New York Tribune.]

DENVER, Col.

I am a Republican and have been a constant reader of the Tribune for more than twenty-five years; but I cannot approve of its position on the subject of pensions. I am willing that every soldier who fought for the Union and was disabled by wounds received in battle or disease actually contracted in his country's service should receive a pension. But I am not willing to see thousands and tens of thousands of able-bodied men, who were never wounded and whose health (unless injured by dissipation) is on the average quite as good as an equal number of their neighbors of the same age who did not go into the army, drawing pensions before they reach the age at which the Revolutionary soldiers were pensioned.

Now this is the condition of many who are on the pension list. This list swallowed up eighty millions of dollars in 1887, while fifteen or twenty millions would, I believe, have been sufficient to pension every one justly entitled to receive it. And that is a larger sum than any other government ever paid in pensions in a single year.

The "G. A. R." (which reminds me of a certain voracious predatory fish) seems to exist for the purpose of preying upon the treasury of the United States. They profess to teach patriotism. But it is not necessary to organize a secret society for that purpose. We should see much more of the teaching and practice of patriotism and much less rascality if all secret, Christ-rejecting societies were prohibited by law.

The G. A. R. propose to give their vote to the political party, who will in return give them control of the treasury; and their appetite increases by indulgence. If half of their demands are granted, eight hundred millions will soon be too little to satisfy them for a single year.

Our Revolutionary soldiers endured severe hardships. They suffered much from want of food and clothing nearly all the time for seven years. When the army moved there were no railroad trains for them to ride on. When it was necessary to construct entrenchments they were not usually supplied with "contrabands" to do the work. And, counting the depreciation of the currency, they received less than one-fifth as much pay per man as the soldiers of the late war. These men, whose courage and sufferings, under the blessing of God, gave us a national existence, received only very small pensions for the wounded and disabled, while no others were pensioned until they became very old men. Their patriotism was not inspired by bounties. Consequently there were no "bounty jumpers" in their ranks.

Our army in the late war contained many of the best and noblest men in the land. It also contained some of the laziest and vilest, who were diseased with a chronic aversion to honest industry. These enlisted for bounties and the money that was paid for "substitutes," expecting to enjoy a life of idleness and feast upon abundant rations. Some idea of the number of this worthless class may be formed from the fact that five hundred thousand men deserted.

The Union prisoners suffered terribly in Southern prison pens. The Revolutionary prisoners also were brutally treated in British prisons and prison ships. At times, for a brief period, a part of the Union army would be on limited rations. But they received much better rations and clothing than any other government ever furnished to an army. Their pay was more than five times the amount per man that any European government ever gave to its army. Now, in view of these facts, is it fair, is it just, is it honest, to pension all these men in the prime of life, or only a little past it, when the Revolutionary soldiers had to wait for a pension till disabled by old age?

In the pension bill for the Revolutionary soldier there was no clause providing a pension for gout or any other disease that "might" have been caused by military service twenty-three years before; but had not shown itself in all that time. If he drew a pension for a disability, he was obliged to prove that the disability was actually contracted in the service. There was no "might have been" about it. In his case there was no premium placed upon perjury.

The self-appointed leaders of the Republican party seem to have come to the conclusion that by emptying the treasury into the mouth of the G. A. R. in return for its vote they can elect the next President and regain the control of the government. They can make this bargain, but they cannot deliver the goods. Many thousand Republicans, in fact, a majority of them, view with profound disgust and alarm the national Congress devoting half its time to introducing and passing bills for granting and increasing pensions. And they are determined that any party that cannot elect a President without placing this nation under the heel of the G. A. R. shall never elect another. They are not pleased to see an influential paper, of honorable antecedents, prostitute itself by pushing forward the pension swindle and using its influence in favor of licensing drunkard factories under pretense of restraining and limiting the liquor traffic. Respectfully,

J. P. SMITH.

I have read the letter from W. J. Gladwin of India and feel disposed to pledge $20 towards the support of an assistant in colporteur work, provided there may be raised a sufficient sum to support such person, and provided also that such person shall be found well qualified for the work. NEW YORK IS NOT FOROOTTEN.

The "Memorial" received. I like it much. You may send a package for distribution at Syracuse on the 26th inst. I'll do my best for Christ and Reform. I think I can do more for the Master there at our State Convention than at Chicago. I feel as though I could hardly spare the money and time to attend both, much as I would like to be at Commencement at Wheaton, and the Annual Meeting of the N. C. A.—F. W. CAPWELL, Dale, N. Y.

EXPOSITIONS FOR THE SOUTH.

I like the idea of getting out a book containing the secret work of the colored orders. The Tabernacles, Friendships, Immaculates, Seven Stars of Consolidation, and G. U. O. of O. F. are the most popular. Let us have them by all means. Tuesday was the Odd-fellows grand day here, and for the first time in ten years it was a signal failure. I will try and write you more when I am stronger. I am only able to be out one day, and in the next. I hope to get North in a few weeks.—R. N. COUNTEE, Memphis.

WILL FISK AND BROOKS STAND THE TEST?

I see no notice yet of the revival of our good old American party. Are we going to have a separate ticket, or fall in with the Prohibition party and all its secret entanglements? Do their nominees, Fisk and Brooks, fill the bill, or meet the Bible qualifications found in Exodus 18: 21? If so, let us vote for them. If not, excuse me from doing so.—J. MCKELVEY, Blair, W. Va.

THE BOSTON REVELATION.

If the record of punishment for preaching and reading without permits on Boston Common was made of proceedings in a pagan or Roman Catholic country, we might regard it as a matter of course; but that it can be, nay is, a fact in our own land and in the city of Boston, is a revelation of devilish success which ought to alarm every American who is still free from the bondage of popery, or of lodgery, or of saloonery. These powers rule in Boston, each of them alone sufficiently dangerous, but when in alliance, have dared to act the part of persecutors of preachers of the Gospel; and the first principles of our civil liberties are thus violated. One of the strangest things of all is the fact that amid the strife of mere party politics, the leaders have almost ignored the case, and the press on both sides has left its readers in gross ignorance of the overwhelming importance of its merits.—T. H.

COMING OUT IN ALABAMA.

I am very much pleased with the result of the efforts to make the society people think. Two men have disconnected themselves from their societies, and another prominent Mason told me that he had made up his mind to leave the lodge. There are some interesting facts connected with this man's relations to the society, which I will give to the readers of your paper when he disconnects himself. There is no doubt that my talk stopped a large number of young men from going in the lodges. —W. R. PETTIFORD, Birmingham, Ala.

LITERATURE.

MEMOIRS OF MRS. AUGUSTA TULLIS KELLEY. Her Experience, Labors as Evangelist and Missionary to Africa, with extracts from her writings. By Walter W. Kelley. Pp. 272. Price $1. Published by the author, Attica, Ind.

Four years ago Rev. W. W. Kelley, a faithful Free Methodist pastor in Illinois, Harry Agnew and Robert Shemeld and his wife from St. Paul, came together in Chicago to arrange for a missionary journey to the new regions opened to civilization about the great central lakes of Africa at the head-waters of the Congo and the Nile. They expected to make their home in that region and be buried there when their earthly work was done. All had been identified with the work of the National Christian Association, and their visits to the Cynosure office were much enjoyed. Here they met Bro. H. H. Hinman, whose experience as missionary in Western Africa enabled him to give them much good advice. Bro. Kelley took with him to Africa a young wife, whose devotion to Christian work had for several years urged her into public revival efforts for the salvation of men. Before the party of five reached Africa political changes in the interior compelled a change in their plans, and they separated, Bro. Shemeld and wife going to Estcourt, among the Zulus, the rest opening a mission near Inhambane, farther to the north. There were many gratifying evidences of the blessing of God upon their work, but the African fever, which prostrated them all for a time, seemed to become settled upon Bro. Kelley, and after long struggling against the disease, he was reluctantly obliged to return to this country. This volume is largely a story of this brief missionary work, and much of it is told in the letters of Mrs. Kelley. In the same way is given the record of her earlier life, and through all human weaknesses and defects is seen a blessed, child-like faith and a singular devotion of purpose and of life to the Redeemer's work. A few months after their return God took her to himself in a moment, without a pang or a warning. Her experience in missionary work, her trials by sickness, disappointments, serenity under trial, the triumphs of her faith, and early death, remind us much of the case of Harriet Newell, whose brief history has been the means of sending hundreds into the missionary work. May such be the blessed result of the life of this young woman, in whose record, as given in this volume, every reader will be profited and blessed.

The current number of Our Day opens with a "Symposium on Inspiration." The Boston Monday Lectureship, according to their yearly custom, sent out the question, "In what sense, and why, do you believe the Bible to be the Word of God?" to a number of leading theological professors and eminent ministers, asking for a brief answer. The replies of Dr. John Hall of New York, Bishop Doane, Professors Fisher of Yale, Dwinell of Oakland, Wright of Oberlin, Boardman and Curtiss of Chicago, and others. The late Matthew Arnold published in the Nineteenth Century for April some criticisms on "Civilization in the United States." Some replies from eminent Americans follow its reprint in Our Day. Miss Willard writes briefly of the Indianapolis convention which nominated Fisk and Brooks. Mr. Cook's Monday Lecture "Fulfilled Predictions as Evidence of Inspiration" with its prelude on "American Electoral Reform" forms the important part of the number. This number closes the first half-yearly volume and gives undoubted evidence that Our Day is to be a permanent as well as a valuable addition to our magazine literature. Published at 28 Beacon Street, Boston; $2 a year.

The opening article of the July Scribner's Magazine is the second of the Railway Series, entitled "Feats of Railway Engineering," by John Bogart, State Engineer of New York, who describes with force and picturesqueness many of the great achievements which have marked the development of this and other countries, such as the Oroya railway in Peru, built among almost impenetrable mountains: the St. Gothard spiral tunnels; and the St. Louis, Lachine, Niagara, Bismarck, Forth, and Britannia bridges, with a clear account of the method of laying bridge foundations by work in a pneumatic caisson. "Life and Travel in Modern Greece" is an entertaining account of a trip through a country which is not very familiar to American travelers, by Thomas D. Seymour, Professor of Greek at Yale College. His account is crowded with information that is not ordinarily accessible, and, moreover, gives vivid pictures of the customs and habits of the people. Professor Charles A. Young, the eminent astronomer, describes a journey to Russia, to observe the solar eclipse of 1887, which, though it ended in "disappointment and a rain-storm," was full of interest as it resulted in visits to many famous observatories and distinguished astronomers. Robert Louis Stevenson, in his paper on "Popular Authors," pays tribute to some of those writers who have hosts of admirers but no recognition among literary men.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW I CURED MY INSOMNIA.

Sleeplessness is among the most distressing symptoms of nervous prostration, if indeed it is not the very worst; and it is most certainly one primary cause of the disease itself.

I was one day lamenting my sleeplessness to an old friend. "If only I could sleep!" that was my cry.

"Well," said he, "I'll tell you my secret. I used to be nearly insane from want of sleep; but now I go to bed serenely conscious of a good night coming. As soon as I find myself restless or inclined to be wakeful, I get resolutely out of bed, remove my night-clothes, let the air freely upon my body, and—then—'go for' myself with a flesh brush."

His wife, who stood by, laughingly declared that I looked so much impressed that she would present me with a pair of gloves if I would promise to try the remedy. "Indeed I will!" I exclaimed, delighted; and armed with my new possession I can now declare myself absolute conqueror in the conflict; insomnia has yielded to scientific application of this very simple remedy.

When I undress for the night, after removing my clothes I stand close beside my bed, having my night-dress quite handy, and everything in perfect readiness to step into it, and taking my flesh-glove in my right hand, I begin rubbing my left arm energetically up and down, just twenty five times; then I remove the glove to the other hand, and manipulate the right arm. I then bestow the same number of rubs on the chest, then the back of the neck, as far as I can reach, then still more energetically over the stomach, bowels and kidneys. After this the lower limbs. Having accomplished this very rapidly, I put on my night-dress, sit on the edge of the bed, and "go for" my feet. These I rub both over and under until my arms ache, not limiting myself to twenty-five rubs. Then, feeling sure of victory, I blow out my light, dispose myself comfortably, and go off to sleep for my eight or even nine hours!

Think of it! This I have accomplished in three short weeks! At first when I was still restless, I twice rose and renewed the friction to my feet That at once restored the balance of circulation and brought about the desired result. It has not once failed me; and the reason is sufficiently obvious. It is a natural remedy, far superior to any anodyne or sleeping-potion ever invented.

For what occasions insomnia? People will answer, "A variety of things—nervousness, indigestion, excitability, overfatigue;" and this, in its way, is true; but, apart from all these causes, which are relative, there is but one actual cause for sleeplessness, and that cause is the one to reach and overcome. It is imperfect or impaired circulation, which may be brought about by many different agencies—disordered stomach, irritated brain, disease of any kind, anxiety or sorrow—but each of these, in its degree, occasions the trouble, because it interferes with the equal circulation of the blood and the action of the skin. The use of the flesh-brush has its value in this. It promotes and restores circulation.

Every victim of insomnia knows that sponging the body all over at night will sometimes bring about sleep; but I never yet heard of any one who had tried the method I have indicated. It is, I assure you, well worthy of trial. Begin deliberately and slowly. You will be gratified by the result.

In the case of invalids and weakly persons, it would be very easy for the attendant to give a gentle application of the flesh glove or a brush until the patient has become accustomed to it. For myself, I use it energetically, twice daily—after my cold bath in the morning, and the very last thing at night. After three years' illness from nervous prostration, and lifelong insomnia, I am now perfectly well, eat well, walk ten or fifteen miles every day, and sleep my eight or nine hours, free from dreams or restlessness; while brain work, by which I make my income, is better than ever before.—Demorest's Monthly Magazine.

THE BURDENS OF WOMANHOOD.

Thousands of women are silently suffering untold misery, simply because they shrink from consulting a physician in those numerous complaints arising from functional irregularities and disorders. Many a modest girl and woman prefers to bear her heavy burden in silence rather than go to the family physician for advice. All sufferers from this class of disorders can, however, find prompt and sure relief in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a specific in such cases, and has brightened the lives of countless women by restoring them to perfect health.

No medicine is more conscientiously prepared, more powerful, or more highly concentrated, than Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Its standard of excellence is the result of careful study. This preparation is acknowledged by the medical profession to be the best blood purifier.

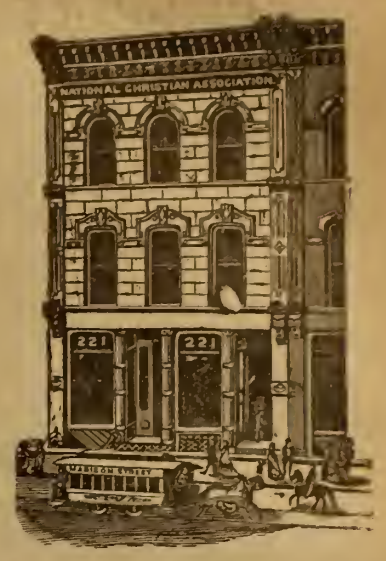
BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

Judge Pliny Merrick (a seceded Mason):—If ever a Chapter or a lodge shall establish laws in conflict with those of the state the Masonic requisition is obedience to the lodge and conflict with the state; and if a member hesitates at this humiliating obedience, his heart must be "torn from his bosom," his "vitals plucked from his body," and Masonic vengeance, not satisfied with this bloody immolation, denies a resting place to the motionless remains, but they are to be "burnt to ashes and scattered to the winds."

Samuel C. Pomeroy, in an address, 1883:—"There may be a broad distinction between the good and the bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have oath bound obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I have no means of judging the good from the bad. So I turn away from them all to the great Teacher who said, "In secret have I said nothing."



Judge Daniel H. Whitney, (renouncing Mason): While professed ministers of the Gospel and members of churches are permitted to associate themselves with these organizations, the task to apply a remedy will be a hopeless one; and just so long will the declaration made to me not long since by a high Mason and a worthy man prove true, that "a Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers—deacons and whoremasters—church members and gamblers—decent men and loafers—drunkards and rowdies, that the All Seeing-Eye ever looked down upon."

Hon. Samuel Dexter, in an open letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

Hon. Cadwallader C. Colden, Mayor of New York and M. C.:—It is true that I have been a Mason a great number of years, and that I have held very high Masonic offices and honors. It is equally true that I have for a long time ceased to have any connection with the institution because I have believed, and do now believe, it is productive of much more evil than good. I have long entertained my present opinion, that a man who would eschew all evil should not be a Freemason.

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction I heartily approved the law, lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen, for abolishing all such oaths and obligations."

Gen. Henry Sewall, a companion of Washington:—I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this "perfect rule of faith and practice," during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its charity appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion deism because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity unsustainable; its titles fulsome; its rites barbarous and absurd; its oaths extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken, and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious.

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved, to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of —— dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 5, 1888.

THE MINISTERS' FUND, which we have not lately reported, has grown meanwhile, and is coming near to the amount asked for last winter. So long as there can be no more satisfactory work done for the reform than by this means the Fund will be continued. Let it be remembered, whenever you think of the South.

OUR NEW ENGLAND LETTER, we hope, through an arrangement kindly made by Miss Flagg, will be henceforth an attractive feature of the Cynosure. How many of our readers have friends who would be profited beyond measure by reading this paper?

EPIDEMIC DISEASES are attributed by some scientists to swarms of invisible insects. In 1833, while the cholera was raging in Canada, armies of caterpillars, or army worms, stripped whole forests bare of their verdure. The same year birds of the air fell down dead; frogs died in the water, and flowering shrubs died in the gardens. The plague seemed to be in the air, earth and water. At the same time rosebugs appeared in great numbers, devouring both the leaves and flowers of that beautiful plant; and the animal pests have their arrivals and departures. And though Science has applied her microscopes, and Philosophy and Reason their scales, their sources yet remain undiscovered, and their laws equally so. Human scrutiny has given us no clue by which we may predict the return of the cholera; and though some few shields and defences have been discovered (as that men in tanneries, where much oil is used in dressing the leather, are less exposed to epidemic diseases because oil is destructive of insect life), still it remains true, as it was three thousand years ago, that "the pestilence walketh in darkness."

MARY E. ALLEN, M. D., writes us from Philadelphia an able letter, reproving the Cynosure for advertising PATENT MEDICINES in one column, while we condemn them in another. She says: "The patent medicine is one of the greatest evils in this country. Besides the harm they do to the pocket, when they contain mere harmless substances of no medical value, or worse, powerful drugs administered by persons ignorant of their nature, they are often, by opium, etc., sources of intemperance. Dr. Allen thinks that clergymen and religious and reform papers furnish quack medicines most of their victims, and she insists that the Cynosure is specially inconsistent to condemn secret societies and yet advertise secret nostrums. We consider Dr. Aller's letter "righteous smiting." Psa 141: 5. But in medicines as in morals:

> "Oft so mixed the difference is too nice
> Where ends the virtue and begins the vice"

The discoverers of good medicines, like the writers of good books and inventors of useful machines, have a right to profit by their work and wits. While quacks and empirics, seeking to make fortunes out of popular ignorance and ill health, are impostors, and should be punished.

> "This light and darkness in our chaos joined,
> What shall divide? The God within the mind."

Our rule is to advertise only medicines which have been fully proved to be of genuine excellence. And the ingredients of these ought to be published, their labels only being patented for a limited time.

DEHORNING CATTLE.—Two writers in the Prairie Farmer give opposite opinions of sawing off the horns of cattle. A Nebraska farmer says, "I had two cows that in fighting knocked off the shells of their horns, which served as a torture for weeks." "I had a colt that had its intestines torn out by a cow, but lived all night till I ended its misery the next day. I am satisfied that colt suffered more than my entire herd did when dehorned." "I consider dehorning a work of mercy." Another writer says, in the same number, "A natural poll, when vicious, is the most dangerous of the bovine race; they butt a person down and then trample him to death." A recent meeting of the Royal Veterinary Association (England) unanimously resolved against the practice of dehorning.

The writer was reared upon a large stock-farm; and we children used to "get up the cows" as soon as we could run. No child was injured by the horns of cattle or the hoofs of horses; and our farmers would as soon have cut off one as the other. But the horns of vicious cattle should come off and the head with them.

REPUBLICANISM AND WHISKY.

The Chicago Tribune started out as a reform paper, and while Horace White controlled it, was so. It absorbed and took the list of the old Western Citizen (Abolition organ) and Chicago voted Abolition while the country went pro-slavery. For a few years past the Tribune has gone strong for licensing liquor, and against Prohibition. Of course, the liquor people have regarded it as their pillar of fire. In the late push for candidates the Tribune went strong for Gresham, and seems to prove that the other six candidates, except Allison, were sustained by railroad rings and attorneys, not even excepting Harrison, the nominee; and if one-half its facts are true, the late Chicago Convention was a deplorable mass of political chicanery, scheming, and everything else but patriotism.

And now, behold, this Republican organ, June 26, proves to its own satisfaction that the Prohibition and Republican platforms are "Free Whisky" platforms; and then condemns the one and supports the other. The offence of the Prohibition party is prohibition, but the Tribune's indictment is "Free Whisky."

The case stands thus: The tax on whisky and tobacco now give large support to the United States government, and adds to the immense surplus, which all parties wish to reduce. The Prohibition party platform goes "for the immediate abolition of the internal revenue system," protesting against supporting our government by tax on liquor. This would leave whisky free, if there were no States with anti-liquor laws and constabulary to enforce them. But it happens there are, so that the Prohibition platform is not "Free Whisky". Its triumph would "oil the wheels of state," and by its consistent moral force it would at once put every liquor seller into the criminal courts. This is the Tribune's "free whisky" produced by the success of the Prohibition platform!

But, says the Tribune, "The Prohibitionists would have free whisky preliminary to their constitutional amendment, which, even if the opposition were slight, would take a long time to bring about."

This is about as rational as charging a sheriff with setting "free" a condemned culprit, because he took off his fetters to march him to the gallows. The success of the Prohibition party will be the death-knell of the liquor traffic.

With the Republican party the case is different. It licenses liquor, and the Tribune endorses it. And every such license is a solemn official declaration that the liquor traffic is a good and lawful practice in the holder of that license, and the whole community backs it! And when you have declared the whisky traffic lawful in one man, no one will believe you sincere in condemning it in another. And the puzzle is what the Tribune's article, "Two Whisky Planks," means: unless its editor wishes to show that his party is as bad as he is, and that Prohibition is no better. The concession of the Tribune that the Republican party contains a "free whisky plank", however, ought to silence those Republicans who claim that theirs is a temperance party. It will open the eyes of multitudes and swell the ranks of Prohibition, as Whigs went over to the Republican party in 1856, when they ceased to believe Webster's declaration, "The Whig party is the true Liberty party." And as soon as the Prohibition party ceases to trust in men secretly forsworn to befriend Masons who are distillers, brewers and saloon-keepers, their triumph is nigh, even at the doors. And next election will show, as did that four years ago, that no reliance can be placed on secret lodges on election day to leave their old parties and vote for Prohibition.

NO LODGERY IN POLITICS.

A Wheaton Anti-secrecy League was formed by Superintendent Phillips on Monday week at the W. C. T. U. rooms in Wheaton, Ill. Though in a busy afternoon, the meeting was well attended, and speeches were made by Rev. L. G. Jordan of Texas, Prof. H. A. Fischer and other gentlemen present. Prof. Fischer was appointed superintendent of the local league. Agents H. H. Hinman, W. B. Stoddard and C. F. Hawley were present and took a warm interest in this send-off of a very important movement.

The United States of Palestine under Jeroboam and the weak son of Solomon had allowed the popular cattle worship of Egypt, together with other forms of idolatry, to displace the religion of the true God, as the lodge worships and clumsy imitations are now driving Christianity out of the United States. God's temple was forsaken and filled with rubbish and filth. The oath meant nothing and society was dishevelled and run down. Nobody knew what god to worship, what oath to swear, or what to do for time or eternity. One young king overthrew the false altars, restored the true religion and renovated, by God's help, the entire nation. Will the readers of this article turn to 2 Chron. 34th and read the reign of this young king, who drove out the little devils' Passovers, such as the Masons are now holding with their "Holy Lamb," and kept a national Passover to Christ, to which he alone gave thirty-three thousand bullocks besides lesser animals, and his princes and nobles gave accordingly; and millions are now in heaven as a consequence of that reform. The nation was kept up. The Messiah came and is moving toward the conquest of the world! This League movement is designed to reproduce the reign of Josiah. Gen. Fisk is opposed to the lodge and John A. Brooks has quit it. This exempts us from the labor and expense of the present federal campaign. But Gen. Fisk and John A. Brooks do not know, our churches do not know, what the lodges are and what they are doing. Not one minister in a thousand knows what a Masonic Passover and the Knight Templar "cup of devils" (1 Cor. 10:21) are —or even that there are any! Now, this American Anti-secrecy League is to show them.

THE POPE'S ATTACK ON THE IRISH.

The Papal rescript produced an Irish tempest on both sides of the water, as violent as a whirlwind and brief as a squall, but it has left an important lesson.

President Fitzgerald of the Irish League in Nebraska, sent a dispatch to the Dublin Journal declaring that "Irish-Americans resent, as unwarrantable, any Roman interference in the political affairs of Ireland."

Six thousand Irish assembled in Phœnix Park, Dublin, the Lord Mayor presiding—no priests present—and endorsed the manifesto of the forty Irish members of the English Parliament denouncing the Pope's rescript. Dillon said: "The Irish will neither submit nor bow to Rome." O'Brien said: "It was heart-breaking to think that such a rescript should be thrown in the teeth of the Irish people." Mr. Healy twitted the Pope with practicing both the "Boycott" and "the Plan of Campaign" against the Sardinians and Victor Emmanuel.

The bishops who defended the Pope and his rescript were denounced by Dillon and other speakers, and the five or six thousand Irish who assembled in the Chicago Armory applauded to the echo the most pointed denunciations of the Pope's rescript. The result was the Pope ordered his bishops to literally explain his rescript away, assuring the Irish people that he never intended to intermeddle in their struggle with the English Government, but only to give them ghostly and "spiritual" advice. This, of course, is a transparent dodge. But it proves, as Edmund Burke said in his day, that "Despotism is compelled to truckle and huckster" to maintain itself, when the masses are aroused. But it loses none of its terrible nature by being compelled to bend. A power claiming infallibility, to be consistent, must claim absolute unreasoning submission. This is the claim of popery, enforced when it has the power. And, where power is lacking, it is sought by craft and conceded by superstition.

The writer conversed with a professor in Santa Clara College, Cal, who had been there from the laying of the corner-stone, and given it a life of toil without a salary. When asked, "What would you do if your superior priest should command you to leave these beautiful halls and grounds, and devote the rest of your days to a squalid tribe of Digger Indians?" he replied: "I should instantly obey." Professor Claudio Jannet, of the Catholic University of Paris, writes us: "I believe that God has entrusted the guidance of the faith and conscience of the human race to one man, and qualified him by his spirit for that office." Of course, to refuse obedience to that power, conveyed down to us through the Pope's subalterns, is sin.

But for this terrific "faith," we might hope something from a rebuff like that just given to the Pope by the Irish people. But so long as men manufacture religions, devils will inhabit them, as Christ dwells in his Zion. And outside of popery, there are churches called Christian which have lately permitted Knight Templars to enter and perform their sorcery called "Easter," in which Christ is used as a mere tool of religious incantation. To belong to a "Commandery" and become a "Sir Knight," one needs not profess to be a Christian or believe in the atonement of Christ. This secret order, professing no reform, veiling their proceedings by secrecy in contempt of Christ who forbade it by example and precept; keeping a devil's passover in mockery of Christ's, and, in mockery of his communion, drinking wine from a human skull; and having gone through his worship in darkness they come into Christ's churches in the day time, on the Sabbath, and find preachers who welcome them "in full uniform" and with drawn swords, as soldiers and disciples of "the Prince of Peace."

In Elgin, Ill., Rector I. Stewart Smith, of "the Church of the Redeemer," received the Bethel Commandery, praised the Templar order as the work of a monk; and their insane "oath" as "allegiance to Christ," and he assured the people that "if a man is a Mason and lives up to the obligations of the order he will be a good Christian;" though the Commandery before him furnished proof that Knight Templars, as such, do not profess regeneration or celebrate the death of Christ. Is there not virtue, piety and patriotism enough in the city of Elgin to put Knight Templary to its proofs, to summon witnesses who have taken and renounced its vile oaths, to tell them whether these things are so? In no other way can we and our children escape the sure destruction, which history shows has followed religions invented by men, administered by priests and inhabited by devils. See the pagan nations.

HOW STAND YOUR CANDIDATES?

NOTES OF THE LEAGUE.

One object of the American Anti-secrecy League is to question the candidates and inform the voters for whose support they ask what may be their lodge relations, if there be any. National and State candidates of every party are being thus questioned, and their replies will be of interest to every voter, no matter what his convictions may be respecting the lodge.

We print below from the answers received from some of the national candidates already heard from, concerning whose standing on this question our readers naturally have some anxiety.

The candidate of the Prohibition party for President, as we know from his own lips and his private correspondence, is not connected with any secret order. In his letter to the League he says:

CLINTON B. FISK.

"General Fisk....desires me to say that you may set him down among those who are so busy that they have no time for anything but 'open to all work'. He has relations to no secret organization and has no partiality for any class unless it be to the lowliest of the human race." M. F. PARK, Sec'y.

The nominee for Vice President is not so clear in his position. He says enough, however, to clear himself of present active relations with secretism. He writes:

JOHN A. BROOKS.

"Years ago I was a Mason, but have demitted, and am not now an affiliated Mason. Though not now a member, I have no prejudice to secret societies."

"I was a Mason," but am "not now a member," shows that he takes, so far, a common sense and not a Masonic view of the case, and does not cringe to the lodge lash, "Once a Mason always a Mason." His answer is not so frank and clear cut as St. John's: "I have not been in a lodge for about sixteen years; I have paid no dues, and am in no manner connected with the order, and never shall be again." The lodge can get no comfort from such a statement. We trust that when Dr. Brooks shall have examined the lodge question more carefully, we shall hear from him an emphatic disapproval.

The candidate of the Equal Rights party writes a long letter, which is half an evasion of the question of the League, and half a defense of the orders. From the following extract learn the whole:

BELVA A. LOCKWOOD.

"I was born into a secret society known as 'the family," and although I took no oath to serve them, nature and morality constantly hold me to this allegiance. About twenty years ago, for the purpose of rescuing young men from haunts of vice, and the imminent dangers of the saloon, I joined Minnehaha lodge of Good Templars, and have maintained that membership, at least nominally, ever since."

The Union Labor party nominated for Vice President the editor of the Anti-Monopolist of Council Grove, Kansas, who says:

W. H. T. WAKEFIELD.

"I have never belonged to any secret societies, except Good Templars for a short time when I was quite young, and the Grange for a short period. However, I have no objection to them as a matter of principle....I have little taste for them myself, and am always too busy to give them the time required.

It is a satisfaction that Mr. Wakefield, who is engaged in a needed and thankless reform, has little taste for the secret orders. He could not be a consistent anti-monopolist and show them any favor, for no monopoly is so needless and despotic as the lodge.

Replies from other candidates will appear hereafter. We can promise the readers of the Cynosure much gratification from them.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley returned to his Iowa work last Friday evening. His presence was much enjoyed at the N. C. A. annual meeting. His family remains at Wheaton.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman went to Pontiac, Ill., on his mission for the Southern work. He writes that Bro. C. W. Sterry promises $50 in case a district agency is opened in the South.

—The Cynosure had the pleasure of forwarding to Bro. Countee of Memphis on Monday $10 from M. L. Worcester of Kingston, Ill., and $3 from Mrs. S. H. Nutting of Wheaton.

—The Missionary Visitor, a live little monthly issued by Bro. Hicks, Baptist pastor at Toulon, Ill., publishes a portrait of Prof. Woodsmall and an interesting review of his life and work.

—A postal card from Secretary Stoddard tells of an increase in the interest and numbers attending the meetings in the N. C. A. building at Washington. The train on which he expected to leave Chicago ran into a freight train killing the engineer and shaking up the passengers badly. He was providentially delayed here until a later train.

—Rev. W. W. Ames, long of Menomonie, Wis., attended commencement at Wheaton, and listened with gratification and a father's pride to the graduation address of his son. He was not present at the N. C. A. annual meeting through a misunderstanding. He called on us Monday and announces his engagement with a church at Berlin, Wis.

—Four Wheaton students have been engaged for their summer vacation to travel in Illinois and Indiana as colporteurs and canvassers.. They are J. W. Fifield, L. H. Park, F. L. Johnston and Enos W. Shaw. The two first named are engaged by the Executive Committee of the Illinois State Association. They have been out a week, and send back interesting reports. The others go to Indiana where little has been done for years to arouse an interest against the lodge. Let the prayers of Christian people follow these young brethren.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

James Freeman Clarke—Margaret Fuller—A Conservative Town—Boston Common and the City Government—Graduating Day at Wellesley.

The death of James Freeman Clarke has removed the most noted light of the Unitarian pulpit in New England since Channing. He was a man of large and practical sympathies, interpenetrated through and through with scholarly tastes and a profound culture. He made mistakes, notably in the last Presidential contest, when instead of giving his influence to the man who represented a pure party and righteous principles, he cast it all on the side of Cleveland, who surely could not be said, politically or personally, to represent either one. But to err is human; and a great preacher, especially when he ventures into the arena of politics, may show himself not less but more human than other men.

He was a poet, though not a prolific versifier; and in anti-slavery times he stood where Whittier, Longfellow, Lowell, and all the poets of New England stood—on the side of the slave; apropos to which comes in a story which he tells himself, in "Anti-slavery Days," of a talk in 1830 between his grand-father, James Freeman, and Josiah Quincy. The latter was convinced that John Quincy Adams had made a mistake in going to Congress, arguing that a man who had been President had acquired an influence which he ought to reserve for use on some great occasion, and not have it frittered away by debates in Congress. Whatever influence a President may possess while in the White House he generally becomes a hopeless nonentity as soon as he retires to the shades of private life; a key to which singular fact may perhaps be found in Mr. Freeman's answer, who heard his old friend through and then quietly remarked: "I always thought the best way to keep one's influence was to use it." The executive chair is too much regarded in the light of a goal, which once reached, leaves no more worlds to conquer. But John Quincy Adams was one of the very few ex-Presidents who would not allow their abilities to rust out. And this is really the only talisman to insure the continuence of power over other men's minds. When I see a minister afraid to oppose this or that evil for "fear of losing his influence," I long to tell him to wrap it up in pink cotton. The fact is, that a man or woman devoted to the cause of God and humanity never stops to think whether they are losing or gaining influence.

Many of Dr. Clarke's published thoughts have the clear ring of silver which has been tried in a reform crucible, as for instance the following: "He who believes is strong. He who doubts is weak. Strong convictions precede great actions. The man strongly possessed of an idea is the master of all who are uncertain and wavering." He was the friend of Margaret Fuller, the Madame de Stael of New England, whose life seems an exotic in its passionate reaching out after truth and beauty; and like an exotic, has left only its fragrance behind it. I have been lately reading her Life and Letters, and among other fresh and profound thoughts I came across this: "No institution can be good which does not tend to improve the individual." An admirable touch-stone by which to test the lodge that many a sorrowful wife and mother will not be slow to apply.

Margaret Fuller had the good or ill fortune to be almost a lone star, where now whole constellations of women, learned, eloquent, witty and deep thinking, can gather at a Temperance or Woman Suffrage Convention and excite no surprise. Miss Tobey, our indefatigable State Superintendent, has scored another victory in the conservative little mountain town of Peru. The village church, built on the highest point, and over eighty years old, might have been recommended before her coming as a good place for the next Methodist Conference to hold its sessions, in as no woman had ever spoken from its pulpit. The minister might well say that who ever could move the inertia of Peru was a mighty person; but move it she did, and to such good effect as to organize there a flourishing union of 18 members. Slowly yet surely the barriers of predjudice are everywhere giving way, and while Europe is stirred up to its farthest boundaries over the "I and my army" proclamation of the new German Emperor, bloodless battles are being fought by a far more potent army than his; one which marches with the dove of peace on its banners, but whose steady ever onward progress will revolutionize the world socially and politically by the time another century dawns.

Boston's Irish Catholic government has given that city a very unsavory reputation throughout the country, and if Christian patriots refuse to be roused to an adequate sense of danger, the outrage to liberty committed in the imprisoning of Wm. F. Davis, is only a foretaste of what is in store for us. His trial proved that our courts of law are manipulated and controlled by Jesuits, Masons and rum-sellers, and when justice is poisoned at the fountain head the outlook is ominous. "If these things are done in a green tree," when our nation has hardly passed the first century of its existence, "what shall be done in the dry?" One of the reasons given for prohibiting preaching on the Common was that the crowd would be likely to trample on the grass and otherwise disfigure it. Yet base ball is allowed on the Common, to the annoyance, if not the serious danger of women and children who may be walking across it, and the way in which the grounds are kept, or rather not kept, are made the subject of much complaint in the daily papers.

Wellesley College held its graduating exercises on the 19th, with "the silver-tongued orator of the South," Hon. W. C. P. Breckenbridge, as the speaker of the occasion. He of course made a fine address, full of helpful thoughts. This age, he said, was pre-eminently heroic. Men were daily facing death for love of God and man, and he who did not enter the search for truth inspired by this motive-power of love to humanity was out of sympathy with their spirit. This acknowledgment of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man he defined as politics in the truest and best sense of the word. As woman has always been first in all philanthropic work, such a definition allows her to enter the dreadful realm of politics, and yet remain in a sphere which even the most conservative are ready to acknowledge as peculiarly her's.

Miss Helen Shafer, the new president, fills her responsible position, not only most worthily but most gracefully. She has a fine face, attractive and intellectual, and winning manners. There were 75 graduates in all, counting those who have taken special and post-graduate courses, so that Wellesley this year sends out a larger quota of students than ever before to bless the world with the sweet influences of a cultured Christian womanhood, to whom every field of education, philanthropy and reform lies open. God give them the courage and the faith to grasp to the full their grand opportunity.

THE HOME.

THE SUMMER SABBATH.

How sweet the summer Sabbath,
When all is calm and bright,
And in the gentle quiet
We see the Lord our Light!

Brighter than noonday radiance
He shines within the soul;
The broken heart beholds Him,
And once again is whole.

What rest comes to the weary,
What comfort to the sad!
Forgetting all his troubles,
The Christian soul is glad.

Light beams from God in heaven,
The shadows flee away,
Peace to the heart is given
Upon this perfect day.

Oh, what must be the Sabbath
In that fair summer land
Where Jesus leads his people,
A holy, happy band!

Beside the living fountains
And in the pastures green,
Where never flits a shadow
Across the tranquil scene!

Roll on, O Time, thy chariot,
Let days and nights succeed,
We will not mind the darkness,
The toil we will not heed.

The blessed consummation,
The Sabbath without end,
For all the tribulation
Will more than make amend.

THE SEVENTEEN YEAR LOCUSTS.

The following from the pen of Mr. Roswell Dow was first published in the Sycamore paper in 1871, seventeen years ago, and we reproduce it because it will be read with equal interest at this time, as it will be again when the Cicada comes in 1905. We propose to print it again then:

Our woods are now ringing with the music of these insects and curiosity is alive to know something of their natural history. The true locusts are voracious and destructive insects, with ample powers of flight to enable them to migrate from one part of the country to another for a more fresh repast in their course of devastation. The Bible tells of their ravages. Our grasshoppers belong to the same order of insects that the true locusts do.

The superstitious dread with which many people regard the appearance of the seventeen year Cicada—the true name—is caused mostly by our giving them the name of locust,which belongs to an entirely distinct order of insects.

The writer of this well recollects the appearance of the Cicada in 1854, and recollects also of then talking with those who saw them here in 1837 and learning the habits of the insect from them. True to the predictions, the same insect is here again in 1871. Their home for the seventeen years has been in the ground where they feed on the roots of plants and trees. Ten years ago they were about fifteen inches below the surface and were then a whitish grub about one inch in length. Every year since they have been found a little nearer the surface and of a darker color. They now crawl from the ground and up some shrub, tree, or fence; the skin of the back splits open, which is the opening of their wing cases, and it is now the perfect insect with four perfect wings. It is entirely without masticatory or eating organs, and of course can eat nothing for the little while that it stays with us above the ground. The female Cicada selects the end twig of a tree, makes a slit lengthwise in the bark,in which she deposits a row of eggs and her life work is ended. The larvæ from those eggs, when hatched, fall to the ground, where they bury themselves for their day of seventeen years, and the people of 1888—look at those 8s—will be curious, as we are, to know from whence they came and whither they go. The withering of the twig in which the eggs are laid is the only disaster that attends their appearance.

The frame work of their wings has a resemblance to the letter W, which the superstitious used to think stood for war, and regarded their appearance as a prediction of war. The prediction has generally been true, just as we always have some kind of weather after the moon changes.

The Cicada do not all appear in every part of the country the same year. In one section east of the Alleghenies in Pennsylvania they appeared in 1834, 1851 and 1868. In another section west of Laurel Hill they appeared in 1849 and 1866, while in the region between they have never been seen. Their period of open-air existence is about forty-two days. Reports about the sting of locusts killing people are always rife during Cicada season, but scientific men have often followed up those reports and always found them without any reliable authority. A fatal effect from the sting of any large insect at such times would naturally be charged to the misnamed locusts, for it is the misnaming of this insect in the United States that causes the fear of them. Thus there's something in a name. The male Cicada is the only musician with them, the female being perfectly silent,much unlike human folks. Their noise is not made in the throat but by a little violin which they carry on their backs under their wings. It consists of two whitish membranes, ridged like a shell stretched over a cavity,one on each side of the body. This music is their love song by which the male calls its mate. As I write the woods are alive with one continuous sound of this world of Cicada love, as gaily their troubadours strike their guitars, singing,

Up from the dark ground
Hither I come;
Lady love, lady love,
Welcome me home.

AVOID FOOLISH QUESTIONS.

Titus 3: 9.

Our days are few, and are far better spent in doing good than in disputing over matters which are at best of minor importance. The old schoolmen did a world of mischief by their incessant discussion of subjects of no practical importance; and our churches suffer much from petty wars over abstruse points and unimportant questions. After everything has been said that can be said, neither party is any the wiser, and, therefore, the discussion no more promotes knowledge than love, and it is foolish to sow in so barren a field.

Questions upon points wherein Scripture is silent, upon mysteries which belong to God alone, upon prophecies of doubtful interpretation, and upon mere modes of observing ceremonials, are all foolish, and wise men avoid them. Our business is neither to ask nor answer foolish questions, but to avoid them altogether. And if we observe the apostle's precept (Titus 3: 18), to be "careful to maintain good works," we shall find ourselves far too much occupied with profitable business to take much interest in unworthy contentions and needless strivings.

There are, however, some questions which are the reverse of foolish, which we must not avoid, but fairly and honestly meet; such as these:

"Do I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ? Am I renewed in the spirit of my mind? Am I walking after the flesh or after the Spirit? Am I growing in grace? Does my conversation adorn the doctrine of God my Saviour? Am I looking for the coming of the Lord, and watching as a servant does for his master? What more can I do for Jesus? Such inquiries as these urgently demand our attention; and if we have been at all given to caviling, let us now turn our critical abilities to a service so much more profitable. Let us be peacemakers, and endeavor to lead others, both by our prayer and example, to "avoid foolish questions." "Study those things which make for peace."—C. H. Spurgeon.

CHRISTIANITY AND BEAUTY.

When Hiram Munger was once giving a somewhat unfaithful Christian a pretty thorough scoring, among other things he said:

"You are ugly, and cross and homely!"

"But I'm not to blame for being homely,"pleaded the victim.

"Yes you are;" said he, "you look well enough when you've got the grace of God in your heart."

Solomon said, "A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine." And we know that that beautifying and illuminating wisdom has "the fear of the Lord" as its "beginning."

On the contrary sin, anger, vice and ignorance,rob the face of its beauty,and cover the fairest countenance with ugliness and shame. Many a man wears the record of his sins upon his forehead.

Speaking of the Gospel among Indian tribes, Miss Carpenter declares that the effects of Christianity were visible not only in the habits of some of the Indian tribes, but in their very faces.

A writer in the Times makes some remarks on some photographs of the races of India,published by the government:

"A few plates at the end of the volume are devoted to Malays, Burmese, and Karens. Of the last there is one group, a family of Karens,who have become converts of Christianity, who in their intelligent faces, neat dress,and generally orderly appearance, present a marked contrast to those of their kinsfolk who are still either Buddhists or Pagans. Were it not that photographs are necessarily faithful, the change would seem almost too great to be entirely credited."

There is nothing incredible in this to those who believe that man was made in the image of his Maker, and defaced by sin and transgression, and who know what it is to be created anew in Christ Jesus.

The countenance of the converted man or woman is a faithful index of the divine power that works within. And while fops and flirts are busied with their paints, and jewels, and tricks of adornment, true Christians,whose hearts are filled with the peace of God, have no need of these outward attractions; they look well enough without them; and their best adorning is that"ornament of a meek and quiet spirit,which is in the sight of God of great price."—Armory.

GOD EXALTS THE HUMBLE.

The conversion of the Iberians, a race bordering on the Caucasus, presents a notable illustration of this missionary agency, and brings to light a humble but successful laborer. Bufinus heard the story of the cross from the lips of an Iberian chieftain, and Moses of Chorene preserves the name of Nunia as that of the Christian female who was the instrument in the work. She had been carried off as a captive and had been made a slave. Her devotional life attracted attention and won respect from those around her; and so it happened that when, after the custom of the tribe, a sick child had been conveyed from house to house, in hope that some one might prescribe a cure, it was brought at length to the Christian woman; who said she knew of no remedy, but that Christ, her God, could help, even where human help was unavailing. She prayed for the child and it recovered. The queen fell sick; the fame of the cure reached her ears and she sent for the Christian slave. Not wishing to be considered a worker of miracles Nunia declined the call. The queen was conveyed to her. The captive prayed and the queen recovered. On hearing the circumstances, the king was about to send a present; but his wife informed him that the Christian woman despised all earthly goods, and that what she looked forward to as her reward was that the people would join her in worshiping the true God. It made little impression on him at the time, but afterwards, in an hour of peril, he recalled the story, and addressed a vow to the God of the Christians, to the effect that if he delivered him he would devote himself to his service. The vow he kept, placing himself under Nunia's teaching; afterwards, in conjunction with his queen, instructing his own subjects, and finally obtaining teachers for the full establishment of Christianity in his land.—From Heroes of the Mission Field.

WAGES AND VICE.

The Morning Star reprints from the Sabbath Recorder a two column article to prove that thousands of industrious women are driven to vice and crime because they cannot live honestly on the wages paid for work. The article, of course, applies only to large cities. The remedies suggested are education for women, moral teaching for men, higher wages and less finery. These suggestions are all good, but too superficial and entirely inadequate. So long as women irresistibly choose the gaity, whirl and excitement of the city to the monotony of country life; so long as they love the mill, the shop and the store, and hate to cook, sweep, and wash dishes, just so long women's wages will be low in the city and men in the country will have to do housework, or abandon their farms and follow the women into the cities and villages, which now is the general tendency all over New England. It is nearly impossible to secure women's help for housework in the country. In case of sickness or death the difficulty of securing capable help is very painful. It is not a question of hard work and low wages, but of dislike to the kind of life. Girls prefer the city, with its fun and a dollar or two a week and starve themselves in the corner of a crowded housetop, rather than endure the monotony of being a queen in a quiet country home, with three or four dollars a week and as good board as they are able to prepare with unlimited resources. No man or woman in America need starve or steal or sin if willing to work. But if two-thirds of the women insist on living in the city at needlework and clerking, and the same proportion of the men will do nothing unless run a street car or make shoes, there will be wailing among the women and strikes among the men. The grand old Bible says to men, "Till the ground;" and to women, "Guide the house." Obedience to God would fill the land with peace and plenty.—Christian Witness.

A CHAPTER ON ACCIDENTS.

Very early in life the duty of acting instead of screaming in cases of pressing emergency should be instilled into the minds of the young. Presence of mind in cases requiring instant attention is a virtue rarely cultivated, notwithstanding all that has been said and written on its importance.

A few years ago, in a school I attended, a young girl fainted and fell to the floor. In a moment the teacher had raised her to a sitting posture, and the frightened children crowded around her wringing their hands and crying. In the midst of the confusion a young miss of a dozen years came to the rescue by stretching the unconscious girl flat on her back. In a quiet, firm voice she said, "Mary has only fainted, and you must stand back and give her air." Instantly the circle that had formed about her widened, the windows were thrown open, and the young commander, in a quick, calm manner, proceeded to remove all the compression about the chest of her patient. Applying ammonia to the nostrils of the prostrate girl, she waited patiently for signs of returning animation, and soon we had the satisfaction of knowing Mary was quite herself again.

"Who taught you to act so promptly, Sarah?" inquired the teacher when her alarm had subsided.

"Long ago my little brother fell from the landing at the top of the stairs to the hall below, striking his head upon the banister in the descent. Thinking him dead, the nurse picked him up and began tossing him about. Mother took him from her arms and laid him upon the floor, setting the door wide open to give him air. Soon he began to breathe regularly, and then mother told us that when people fainted or were knocked senseless by blows about the head, they should be laid upon their backs with their heads a little lower than their bodies."

As fainting is caused by the failure of the heart to supply the brain with blood, no one need be at a loss to understand the advantage gained by the prostrate position; yet in spite of this fact people still continue to pile pillows under the heads of their fainting friends, while the child who has received a blow on the head is jolted about roughly, or carried in an upright posture, as if blood could run up hill more easily than down.

A little girl of eight, who had been trained what to do in case of fire, was so unfortunate as to drop a match on her cotton apron. Almost immediately the blaze flashed up in her face. Without a cry or pause she threw herself face downward on the carpet, clapped her hands over her mouth and nose, closed her eyes, and rolled over and over on the thick, woolen rug. Hearing the unusual noise the father hurried upstairs in time to put out the smoldering fire. The child's apron was in ashes, the front of her dress badly scorched, but beyond a few slight burns on her hands the brave girl was uninjured.

When questioned about her conduct, she said, "Mamma has told me over and over to lie down on the blaze and stop my mouth, so as not to swallow the smoke, should I catch fire. I knew I would be burned up if I started to run."

Last winter a party of school boys were skating on the Muskingum river. The ice was supposed to be perfectly safe, until its treachery was revealed by the sudden disappearance of one of the lads. Fortunately he grasped the edge of the solid ice and managed to keep himself from being drawn underneath by the current, which at that place was unusually swift. His comrades became panic-stricken, and ran hither and thither, unable to render him the least assistance. Luckily a farmer's lad passing by witnessed the accident, and hurried to the rescue by dragging a couple of hoop poles in reach of the drowning boy.

"Grasp each of them firmly, and crawl out if you can," he said coolly, as he crawled along cautiously in the direction of the thin ice.

The freezing boy obeyed, and with the help of the new-comer soon reached the shore.

"How did you happen to think of the hoop-poles, Frank?" asked one of the frightened boys, when the danger was over. "I never think of anything in the right time."

"You must learn to think, and to act, too," said Frank, impatiently. "What good would the poles have done after Charlie had been drawn beneath the ice?"

A few weeks ago this same Frank saved the life of a man who chanced in some way to sever an artery. Tying his handkerchief tightly between the wound and the heart, he procured a stout stick, and, placing it under the bandage, twisted it firmly until the arterial flow was checked. His capability consists, not in knowing more than other boys of his age, but in keeping his wits about him and acting promptly as sudden danger demands.—Christian at Work.

SPOILED FRUIT.

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—Gal. 5:22,23.

The little fox "selfishness" will spoil the fruit "love."

The little fox "discontent" will spoil the fruit "joy."

The little fox "anxious thought" will spoil the fruit "peace."

The little fox "impatience" will spoil the fruit "long-suffering."

The little fox "a bitter word" will spoil the fruit "gentleness."

The little fox "indolence" will spoil the fruit "goodness."

The little fox "doubt" will spoil the fruit "faith."

The little fox "pride" will spoil the fruit "meekness."

The little fox "love of pleasure" will spoil the fruit "temperance."—Sel.

THE BRIGHT SIDE.

There is many a rest in the road of life
If we would only stop to take it,
And many a tone from the better land
If the querulous heart would wake it.
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted.
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through,
When the ominous clouds are rifted.
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the one before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the road of life
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown,
Or the miser's hoarded treasure.
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayers to heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a cheerful heart,
And hands that are swift and willing,
Than to snap the delicate, slender threads
Of our curious lives asunder,
And then blame heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit and grieve and wonder.

TEMPERANCE.

RUM ON THE CONGO.

I can rarely visit Washington, but whenever I do so, I feel more and more convinced that it is the most fascinating city on this continent. The old rambling, shambling and shabby town, through whose streets the pigs used to promenade forty years ago, has given place to a city worthy of being the capital of the richest nation on the globe. No factory coal smoke blackens its bright houses, and no heavy carts of commerce crush to pieces its beautifully smooth streets. Nearly half of its population are connected with governmental institutions, political, scientific, or literary; a large fraction of the other half go there for sight-seeing or social enjoyment.

My chief errand to Washington was to present a memorial from the National Temperance Society to the "Committee on Foreign Affairs" of the United States Senate, in behalf of rum-cursed Africa. When the Berlin Conference shaped the future of the vast "Free State of the Congo" three years ago, they prohibited the slave trade. But they left a worse scourge unchecked. The Hon. Mr. Kasson, who represented the United States, Sir Edward Malet, who represented Great Britain, with Count de Launay, of Italy, and Count Van der Straten of Belgium strove hard to have a clause prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to the native tribes. The German and Dutch commissioners fought it out, and Germany has sent seven millions of gallons of "fire water" into that doomed region in a single year! Holland has sent over one million! And out of the port of Boston, between June, 1885, and June, 1886, there was shipped 733,000 gallons of death-dealing New England rum into the Congo country! The Negroes are becoming crazed not only with the drink but for it. Many of them refuse to take in exchange for palm oil, ivory, and other products, any manufactured fabrics, and clamor for strong drink! Two results follow: the natives are being bestialized with alcohol, and all hope of opening a valuable market for our goods is being destroyed. The chief "Christian" powers of the world are becoming the colossal grog-sellers to poor, imbruted Africa, and are destroying one hundred times as many as Christian missions are saving. A powerful influence is being brought to bear on the English Government to prohibit the liquor-traffic in Africa by British subjects. The memorial I took to Washington besought our Government to adopt effective measures to suppress this destructive traffic by American citizens.

The Senate Committee is composed of such distinguished statesmen as Senators John Sherman, George F. Edmunds, William M. Evarts, Mr. Morgan of Alabama, Mr. Frye of Maine, and Mr. Saulsbury of Delaware. I found them assembled in their elegant committee-room, and the tall, courtly senator from Ohio gave me a cordial welcome to his committee. They listened with deep attention to the startling facts in regard to this atrocious outrage of civilization upon defenseless barbarism, and to our appeal that America should take the initiative in suppressing this diabolical traffic. Mr. W. T. Hornaday of the Smithsonian Institution, the author of the powerful pamphlet "Free Rum on the Congo," accompanied me, and made a very effective appeal to the committee. Congress seldom moves—especially on a moral question—any faster than it is pushed. A vigorous push should be made by every constituency upon its representative, by petition and by correspondence. No time is to be lost. One year now in the history of Africa is worth a century in its degraded past. If Christendom is going to supplant Paganism with whisky barrels, then Africa had better been left in heathenish seclusion. At any rate, let our Republic wash its hands of any further participation in this wholesale crime against a whole race of immortal beings.—Theodore L. Cuyler in New York Evangelist.

WHO BURNED COLUMBIA?

"The drunkards of both armies had a hand in it," writes Col. D. W. Wood, the attorney for the martyred Haddock, in a letter to the Voice.

"I was among the first to enter that Mecca of Secession. I was on the State House grounds, and saw the first flag of Confederate fame brought down and the Stars and Stripes put in its place. The Confederate soldiers set fire to the cotton bales that barricaded the streets, as breast-works against Federal assaults. Many Confederate soldiers were found drunk. The liquor stores had been raided, and many were too full for utterance or duty. The Yankees, many of them, possessed a desire for Southern liquors, and broke ranks by the hundreds to visit the saloons. The drunken soldiers possessed no regard for property, and loved to set buildings on fire. Whisky was the cause of Columbia being burned."

THE REMEDY FOR DRUNKENNESS NOT PUNISHMENT.

"I doubt very much if a confirmed drunkard was ever reformed by punishment," says Dr. L. W. Baker, superintendent of the Family Home for Nervous Invalids at Baldwinsville, Mass., in an article on the medico-legal treatment of drunkards. The doctor cites the following facts in proof:

At the International Prison Congress in 1871 it was stated that not one in a thousand persons committed to jail for inebriety ever recovered. Before a committee of the House of Lords in England men of the largest experience testified that they had never heard of a case of reformation of inebriates from punishment by fines and imprisonment. This testimony is confirmed by prison authorities all over the country. In the vast majority of cases the first sentence is speedily followed by others. In 1879 Massachusetts punished by fine and imprisonment over 17,000 inebriates, more than 16,000 of whom had been in prison before. Of the 56,000 inebriates coming under legal notice in New York in 1852, less than 1,000 were punished for the first time. All others had been sentenced before for the same cause. One man has been sentenced to Deer Island, near Boston, seventy-five times for drunkenness, and many cases have been known of men who have been sent to jails and workhouses from twenty to two hundred times for the same reason.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON [illegible]d Quarter.—July 15.

SUBJECT.—God's Presence Promised.—Ex. 33: 12-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matt. 28: 20.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Moses' First Petition. Vs. 12–17. Moses had the humility of a truly great leader. He felt his own weakness and insufficiency for the herculean task set before him. Here was a vast, untrained, undisciplined horde;—rebellious, childish, cowardly of heart, slavish of spirit, ready at the slightest difficulty or danger to turn back to Egypt. And he was to lead them to the promised land, with no longer the pillar of cloud and fire to go before them, no longer that immediate guiding presence of Jehovah under which the Red Sea had been crossed, and water given them from the rock, and manna rained down in the desert. No wonder his heart sank within him. No wonder at the earnestness of his supplication, "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence." We see here what true love of country is. Put beside this grand figure of Moses pleading for his rebellious countrymen, refusing to take even the greatest dignity and honor himself if built on their ruin, the miserable demagogism which has flattering words and honeyed speeches in plenty for the dear people, but cares nothing for them except to rise by their votes to places of emolument and power. We are now approaching another Presidential election, and we shall in all probability hear again the old party cry, "Of two evils choose the least." Prohibitionists will be told if they vote for the man of irreproachable record and unstained private life, that they are giving their votes to the rum party and setting back the cause of Prohibition. Granted that this is so, granted that they will at last gain their object by sacrificing their principles, will God's presence go with them? and if not should we not pray with Moses, "Carry us not up hence"? Better put back the cause of Prohibition a thousand years than to take the terrible risk of going forward without our divine Leader. Anti-secret Prohibitionists are beset by another problem. Shall they give their votes for those who have an affiliation with secret orders? Such nominees may be honest men, irreproachable in public and private life, but this fact makes the danger of voting for them in one sense all the greater, for the lodge can use them unconsciously to themselves for its own purpose. Jehovah admits no rival. He cannot consistently give the support of his Presence to a party in whose councils the spirit of the lodge is always pulling invisible wires, and whose leaders bow in secret to the standard of another god. Patriotism may not be religion, but it is a very near neighbor to it. The greatest patriots have been, almost without exception, men of intense religious fervor, and on Christian voters keeping these twin flames alive on our altars and our hearthstones depends the future of America.

2. Moses' Second Petition. Vs. 8-23. Moses' first prayer had been graciously granted. Now with holy boldness he pleads to look with his mortal eyes on God. As he leads the people on their long wilderness journey to the promised land, with what courage would it inspire him to have photographed on his mind's eye such a vision of that glorious Presence going before them! So far as was possible even this request is granted. No scene in Scripture puts the gracious condescension of God in a stronger light:—"I will make all my goodness pass before thee." It is the goodness of the Lord, it is his character, his attributes which constitute his true glory. But what was to Moses a miraculous manifestation may be to us who live in the light of the Gospel day a common experience. Only to see this vision we must take our stand on the Rock. Outside of Christ, divorced from a living faith in him, no revelation is to be trusted. Men are duped by spiritual mediums because their feet are on the shifting sands of unbelief. For the same reason they seek salvation in the lodge. Its religion suits. They do not know what it is to feel a "firm foundation" beneath them. But the humblest believer who can sing, "Rock of ages cleft for me," can witness a more glorious vision than Moses saw, even the goodness of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION OF KENTUCKY.

The reader will ask, why another organization? We answer, that while the religious denominations, and the missionary societies that represent them, seek to convert men to Christ, they make a distinction between denominational and Christian fellowship by appending doctrines, polities and characteristics not essential to Christian life and character. Such a distinction is manifestly unwarranted by the Word of God,is contrary to the command of the Apostle, "that there be no schism in the body" (2 Cor. 12: 25) and the prayer of our Saviour "that they all may be one" (John 17: 21) Such denominational divisions beget weakness and tempt men for the sake of numbers to receive to their fellowship persons living in un-Christlike practices, such as connection with the Secret Lodge System, the use, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks and the spirit and practice of caste in the household of Faith. Because so many Christians have been "carnal and walk as men," they have separated those whom God hath joined together, and divided the Body wherein "there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all and in all."

There are in Kentucky and other States, churches that now are, and for years have been, separate from these denominational organizations and un-Christlike practices. They there need aid in pastoral support and in their efforts to extend the Gospel. They propose no separation from the whole family of Christ, nor even an association with each other as a distinctive body. They find no warrant for a separate association of churches in the Word of God, and believe that such separate associations tend only to a forbidden schism in the Body of our Lord.

The Christian Missionary Association, which asks your aid, is made up not of churches, as such, but of individuals who have been regularly incorporated by the Legislature of Kentucky. This Association at their regular meetings will hear reports, audit accounts, vote appropriations, appoint missionaries, and an executive board to aid in its objects, who also may send out laborers and who shall supervise the work of evangelization.

This Association seeks the unification of all believers in Christ, and their united opposition to all known iniquity. We aim to conserve the material and moral resources of the church by bringing together, as far as practicable, all Christians in any given locality, on the basis of a common unity in Christ. Whilst we shall give aid to those seeking the suppression of the use and traffic in intoxicating drinks and in opposing all secret orders, we shall especially seek to send out and assist those evangelists who shall preach Christ in all the fullness of his character, baptizing all thus converted into his name, and organizing them into undenominational churches whose only head is the Lord Jesus Christ. The present Executive Board is located at Berea, Madison county, Kentucky, and will receive and disburse all funds as directed by the donors.

J. G. FEE, Pres.,
H. H. HINMAN,
ALFRED TITUS, Rec. Sec'y.,
JAMES VAN WINKLE, Cor. Sec'y.,
S. G. HANSON, Treas.

—President C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College began a five-days' Gospel meeting at Huntley,Ill.,on Tuesday last.

—The Baptist churches in some cases independently of the missionary societies are supporting native missionaries in Armenia. The churches of central Illinois lately sent an Armenian to Yozgat where Bro. Gregorian is laboring.

—The late Reformed Presbyterian Synod meeting in Allegheny City, Pa, discussed at length the appointment of deaconesses, and finally voted 93 to 24, "That in our judgment the ordination of a woman as deacon is in harmony with the New Testament and the constitution of the Apostolic church. '

—There is an established agency at Bogota, the capital of Colombia, South America,for the burning of Bibles and Protestant books!

—In connection with the withdrawal of Mr. Spurgeon from the English Baptist Union,on account of their fellowship of Universalist teachings, here is a startling fact. There are in England 2,764 Baptist churches and 1,860 pastors, of whom 370 were educated at Mr. Spurgeon's college. Those 370 reported a net increase in their churches last year of 3,856 members. The other churches reported a net decrease of 2,080 members. It was only the means of the Spurgeon men therefore that there was a net gain of 1,770. It was lately reported that Mr. Spurgeon had returned to the Union. This is a mistake. Another man named Spurgeon (but not Charles) joined the Union.

—The late General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church modified the Discipline so that pastors can remain five years in a charge, and the time of presiding elders is lengthened to six years. It has provided for the establishment of an order of "Deaconesses," designing to bring into use, in organized form, a large amount of latent female talent in the church.

—The principle of self-support in Bishop Taylor's missionary work was clearly endorsed by providing for the appointment of a standing committee in the Methodist Missionary Board on "Self-supporting Missions," advisory in character, simply co-operating with the Bishop,and leaving him free to operate, as heretofore, through his Building and Transit Fund Society. Bishop Taylor will spend the summer in visiting churches and camp-meetings, presenting the claims of his cause and raising re-enforcements. A large amount of money is needed.

—Major Whittle's meetings in Winona, Minn., have been very successful. There have been over 300 converts, and among them were several of the most prominent men of the city.

—Rev. B. Fay Mills went from Chelsea, Mass., to Gloversville, N. Y., to hold meetings. The mission at Chelsea has left abiding results in that place. Over 700 persons have united with the various churches who were brought to decision at Mr. Mill's services.

—Mr. Charles Herald is conducting services in Bethesda Chapel, N. Y. The mission is connected with the Central Congregational church, of which Dr. Behrends is pastor. The attendance is of an encouraging character, and much good is being done.

—In 1879 the Red River Presbytery was organized in the wilderness of the Northwest, with six ministers and ten churches. In the same territory are now four presbyteries and one synod, with forty-seven ministers and ninety-eight churches.

—The Baptist Year Book, just issued, records a membership of 2 917,315 in the 31,891 churches. During the year 158,373 were added to the membership, and 608 new churches were established.

—The leading Hebrew congregation of New York have now added a Sunday service to their long-time Sunday school; they sit in pews, ladies and gentlemen together, instead of the women being compelled to climb up stairs into the "court of the women;" the gentlemen remove their hats instead of donning them as heretofore. A synagogue in Chicago and another in Philadelphia also now have Sunday services.

— Of the 17,743 Fijians inhabiting the Fiji Islands, more than nine-tenths attend church with fair regularity.

—The last report of the various Protestant Missions in Japan is a significant index of the growth of Christianity in that land. The total membership of the 221 organized churches is 19,828.

—Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson recently declared that for eighteen years his ministry was almost barren of results, and in explanation says: "God said to me, 'If you will give up the idol of literary applause and give yourself to rescuing the perishing, I will give you souls.' I said, 'I will do it.' Within eighteen months God gave me more souls than in the eighteen years before."

—The Missionary Training School of Mrs. W. B. Osborn is now being conducted in West Philadelphia. It is eligibly situated at 41st and Ogden Sts., with ample and beautiful grounds. It is contiguous to the Pennsylvania University and Woman's Medical College, where specially favorable terms are made with students desiring a medical course. Already Mrs. O. has sent three missionaries to India, two to Africa in Bishop Taylor's work, and two to China. The Chinese and Japanese languages are to be taught by native teachers.

—The record of the missionary life of the late Rev. R. G. Wilder, of the Presbyterian Board and editor of the Missionary Review, is astonishing. In thirty years he has preached in 3,000 cities, scattered over 3,000,000 pages of tracts, gathered into his schools 3,300 pupils, 300 of whom were girls. Besides all this he was one of the Committee on the translation of the Scriptures. He wrote and published commentaries on three Gospels and edited and translated many books.

FREE CYNOSURES.

The suggestion to Southern members of the Cynosure family to send the paper after reading it to some one who had not seen it, is bearing fruit. Keep your paper circulating. Send 25 cents for two months' subscription for your neighbor.

THE N. C. A FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to Missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which your contributions are solicited. Hundreds of thousands of pages have been distributed by means of this fund

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches.

Donations to all these funds are needed.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from June 25 to June 30 inclusive:

Poison the fountain, and the stream is impure; poison the blood, and its taint is carried through the entire system—those innumerable veins and arteries carry disease and death instead of life and vitality. As a result, you have Headache, Scrofula, Dyspepsia, Kidney Disease, Liver Complaint and General Debility. An inactive Liver means poisoned blood; Constipation means poisoned blood; Kidney disorder means poisoned blood. The great antidote for impure blood is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Acting directly upon the affected organs, restores them to their normal condition. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

FARM NOTES.

FIGHTING POULTRY VERMIN IN SUMMER.

Frequently the most difficult work of the poultry man is that of ridding the premises of vermin. Most persons do not become aware of the presence of vermin until the little red mites are seen in myriads. These can easily be destroyed by using proper methods. The great scourge of poultry is not the mites, but the large body-louse that hides at the base of the feathers, on the head and neck. As they are only found there on the fowls, an examination of the quarters does not reveal them, when they may be busily at work on the birds. When the hens seem to droop without apparent cause, the chances are that a close examination on their heads and necks will reveal swarms of these lice. Little chicks, especially those that feather very rapidly, such as Dorkings, Games, and Leghorns, will soon succumb to the large lice, and often the cause will be ascribed to something else.

To prevent lice on fowls, the best thing is the dust-bath, which must consist of fine dry clay or coal ashes. If the quarters are kept clean, the hens will prevent the attacks of lice by dusting, but when once the lice put in an appearance, the poultryman is compelled to take active measures, as the lice must be fought until not a single one remains Kerosene must not be used on the bodies of the hens, as it will sometimes kill them. For the large body lice, first grease the heads, necks and vents with a mixture made by adding a teaspoonful of crude petroleum to every gill of lard. Use it warm, so it will spread well. Then dust the hens well with Californian or Persian Insect Powder. Repeat this every third day, and dust every portion of the body, but do not grease the body—only the head, neck and vent.—American Agriculturist for August.

ABUSES OF LIVE POULTRY.

During the summer weeks, live poultry uffer even unto death from overcrowding and insufficient supply of water. In winter these much-suffering creatures die from exposure to intense cold. These being the extreme seasons of the year, persons not familiar with the horrors of cooped-up life would be reasonable in supposing that at least slight loss would be experienced during spring and autumn. That is the inference. Such is not the fact. The heavy losses entailed by suffering from improper modes of transit are heavy all the year round, and are increased under the influences of extreme heat and extreme cold. In the month of October, for example, the sides of the great freight carrying railways leading into New York are strewn with the mortal remains of poultry that have succumbed to harsh treatment. Ducks die most readily when subjected to the combined hardships of want of water and want of air; next to these, chickens suffer most; then turkeys and fowls and geese in the order named. To remedy this evil is the question. Shippers evidently make so much profit from their investments that they can afford the depletion of numbers, but can the consumers afford to pay such prices as will cover the deficit caused by inhumanity and sheer carelessness? We think not.—American Agriculturist for December.

DISEASE OF POULTRY.

The frequent diseases of poultry are all due to mismanagement. Now starved and then crammed with food; housed in noisome, damp, filthy sheds, or not housed at all: confined in coops for a month on the same spot, swarming with lice, deprived of water or drinking the drainage of manure piles; fed with insufficiently nutritious food, and when consequently troubled with the various ailments known as chicken cholera, dosed with alum, copperas, camphor, castor oil, oakbark tea, sulphur, cayenne pepper, patent pills, pain killer, condition powders, soot, ashes, soft soap, and other "physic," they lie down in despair and die, they are talked of opprobriously and the farmer kicks the survivors around the barnyard or wrings their necks when they are seeking nests in the haymow or in the mangers. Alas, how many good gifts of nature are spurned by the impatient farmer, and the prolific useful hen which pays more profit on its cost and keep than any other property, is the worst abused of all A good hen, well kept, will make an income of at least $2 and possibly $5 per annum, and this is often more than a farmer makes from an investment of $1,000 in shares in silver and gold mines.—N. Y. Times.

Ask For Ayer's

Sarsaparilla, and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood-purifier.

With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The fore-runner of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combiued.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far excel those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. 'There is nothing so good for the youthful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00 Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Cleveland and Secretaries Bayard and Vilas attended the commencement exercises of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville Tuesday, the President conferring the degrees and awarding the diplomas. At the banquet he responded to the toast, "The President of the United States."

General Sheridan was Saturday removed from his house in Washington to the Government steamer that is to convey him to the Massachusetts coast. The steamer sailed in the afternoon.

The report of Chairman Belmont, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, on the bill to provide for a World's Exposition at the national capital in 1892, has just been issued from the government printing office. The committee notes the desire of various nations of the American continent to suitably commemorate the coming four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, and thinks the United States should take the initiative in this matter.

COUNTRY.

A wreck occurred on the Pennsylvania and Schuylkill Valley railroad at Cable City, June 26, by which six laborers were killed and four fatally injured.

While firing at rats with a shot-gun, at his home near Marly, Tenn., Thursday evening, Wendell Whitcomb accidentally shot his two young daughters, killing one instantly, and fatally wounding the other.

After a raid on a moonshiners' camp near Black Springs, Ark., Wednesday, in which three distilleries were destroyed, Internal Revenue Collector Fry and posse were ambushed by armed moonshiners, and a battle followed, in which Deputy United States Marshal Trammel was killed.

The scaffolding of a ten-story building at New York collapsed Thursday, three bricklayers being killed by the fall.

Four boys, all under 12 years, robbed the house of Mrs. Nelson at Ishpeming, Mich., Wednesday night, securing $70 in money, besides other plunder. They were caught Thursday, but the money had disappeared.

Harvard University Wednesday conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws upon Charles S. Fairchild, Secretary of the Treasury, and the degree of Master of Arts upon Edward Burgess, designer of the yachts Volunteer, Puritan and Mayflower. Yale conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon President Patton, of Princeton; the degree of Doctor of Laws upon United States Judge Stanley Matthews and the Hon. William C. Whitney, Secretary of the Navy, and the degree of Master of Arts upon Samuel L Clemens (Mark Twain), of Hartford.

The Republican State Convention of Vermont, in session Wednesday, at Montpelier, nominated a State ticket, with the Hon. W. P. Dillingham at its head for Governor, and adopted a platform which indorses that passed by the Chicago convention, and also opposes the issuance of railway passes to State officers.

The Prohibition State Convention of Michigan concluded its session at Detroit Wednesday after nominating the Hon. A. B. Cheney, of Sparta, for Governor.

The Prohibition State Convention at Syracuse, New York, adopted on Wednesday its platform, and decided upon an aggressive campaign. They nominated a State ticket, selected electors for the National ticket, and adjourned. W. Martin Jones, of Rochester, heads the ticket for Governor.

Ten thousand acres of growing corn in Central Illinois, near Tuscola, were flooded by the heavy rain of Wednesday, and part of that city was submerged, fifteen families being compelled to move.

A small steam yacht containing a pleasure party of eight, was struck by a steamer a mile north of Newburg, N. Y., Wednesday evening, and two prominent society ladies were drowned. Three of the others were delirious when rescued, but will recover.

An explosion of dynamite occurred at the New Park, Wellsville, N. Y., Wednesday, instantly killing two men and severely injuring a third. The men were engaged in destroying old trees and stumps with dynamite cartridges, one exploding prematurely. A picnic was in progress in the park at the time, and it is miraculous that none were injured.

FOREIGN.

The town of Sundsvall, on the gulf of Bothnia, the center of the timber trade of Sweden, has been almost destroyed by fire. The town of Umea, on the gulf of Bothnia, has also been partly burned. The damage at Sundsvall and Umea will reach $5,000,000. Immense tracts of forest land have been burned over. A drought has prevailed for a long time, rendering the woods very dry. This condition and the prevalence of windstorms made the flames spread with great rapidity.

While service was being held in a church at Brezezie, Galicia, the building was struck by lightning and almost entirely destroyed. Three persons were killed and one hundred injured.

Telegraphic communication, which was interrupted for several days by the floods, was restored on the 26th ult. and the particulars of the terrible disaster on the line of the Mexican Central railway, particularly at Leon and Silao, were obtained. During the past ten days the table lands between the city of Mexico and Zacatecas have been visited by unprecedented rains. Every mountain rivulet along the Central railway for over two hundred miles was converted into a destructive torrent, and the valleys present the appearance of lakes. Many cities and towns have been inundated, and Leon and Silao have been partially destroyed.

A dispatch from El Paso, Tex., says information has been received there from the flooded district in Mexico that fifteen hundred lives were lost by the inundation, and that one thousand bodies have been recovered. Leon is a city of 100,000 inhabitants, and a large part of it is in ruins. The Mexican collector of customs at Paso Del Norte received an official dispatch stating that one hundred miles of the Mexican Central railroad is impassable, and that it will be ten days before mails can get through and twenty days before freight can be moved.

Nine government officials at Seoul, Corea, have been beheaded in the streets by the populace. Foreigners have taken refuge at the consulates. The outbreak is attributed to Chinese instigation.

At the elections in Mexico, Monday, Diaz electors were generally chosen, and members of Congress were elected who are favorable to the present administration.

The Berlin correspondent of the Standard telegraphs: "Emperor William, with an imposing suite, will embark on the imperial yacht Hohenzollern on July 13 or 14 and proceed direct to St. Petersburg, where he will remain for several days. During his stay, magnificent fetes will be given in his honor. The arrangements for King Humbert's visit to Berlin will be agreed upon at a meeting between Premier Crispi and Prince Bismarck.

No less than thirty-one open air meetings were held Saturday in London and throughout England to protest against the rigid manner in which the coercion laws of Ireland are being enforced.

The property destroyed by the recent fires in Sweden, was valued at 45,000,000 kroner. Twelve thousand persons were rendered homeless by the flames. King Oscar is visiting the districts, and is engaged in relieving the wants of the sufferers.

OF
WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

In Congress last week the House was yet hammering away on the tariff bill, and the Senate was wrestling with the appropriations. While the River and Harbor bill was under consideration Senator Hoar, who has several times of late shown symptoms of dotage, made a vehement attack upon the popular criticisms of the miserable bargaining, log-rolling and cheating for which these appropriations have been in the past notorious. He held it was a vile slander on the representatives of the American people to say that these river and harbor bills, to any considerable extent, to any appreciable extent, to any extent amounting to five per cent, contained provisions that were not thoroughly defensible, that were not demanded by the interests of international or inter-State commerce. Senator Vest of Missouri, who spoke for the Committee on Commerce, who had revised the bills, replied, "We have honestly tried to do our duty; but we have put appropriations in this bill contrary to our own judgment—certainly against my judgment—because we have been overwhelmed by personal solicitation."

A new and astonishing turn has been taken in the war on the Burlington railway by the engineers and firemen who left its employ in a body last February. The officers of the road have been obliged to protect their new men, more or less, during all this time. Only last week an engineer was shot in his cab, and severely wounded. The strikers keep up their pretense of organization and receive aid from their lodges. Long idleness is the devil's opportunity. Beside numerous personal assaults, they have at five different times used explosives with the intent to wreck trains. Detectives reported a more desperate plot to use dynamite, which was nipped before it could be executed. Last Friday three ex-employes of the road were arrested on a train and in their possession was found a quantity of dynamite with fuse and fulminating caps such as the anarchist Lingg used upon himself. Correspondence was also found which implicates Hoge, the local leader of the strike, and others. Five men are under arrest; and if the company can make good its charges, the gallows will be their due. If their claim is true, that the road managers and detectives are putting up a job on them, and they are innocent as babes, it will be one of the most extraordinary chapters in the history of conspiracies.

The national meetings of the Christian Endeavor societies and of the Music Teachers' Association in Chicago last week, were gatherings of great interest and importance. In the latter there was an earnest discussion of the church music question which deserves mention at greater length than we can afford. The musicians, though they are not evangelists, have some ideas about church music from which evangelists might profit. The great revival meetings are often obnoxious to a mercenary charge, as a new hymn book is introduced, hawked about during meeting, and advertised warmly from the stand. We do not speak of this practice to condemn it, but only to say that if it be a good one, it is very liable to be evil spoken of: and the character both of hymns and tunes is quite uniformly of the made-to-order kind, which suffers much in comparison with the books used in most of our churches. An interesting incident of the musical gathering was a singing test between two classes from the Chicago public schools one using the English Tonic Sol-fa method, the other the ordinary staff notation. The former succeeded in the test very fairly, singing five tunes composed for the test by Dr. George F. Root; the second class failed to get past the first number.

The Christian Endeavor Societies met in Battery D, which was for three days thronged with thousands of earnest young people and their pastors, discussing the various features of church work for the younger and less experienced Christians. The sight was doubly inspiring, whether we regard the youthful and intelligent appearance of the vast crowd, or the great purpose for which their organization is formed. The first society of this name was formed in February, 1881, in the Williston Congregational church, Portland, Me., by Rev. F. E. Clark. A revival had brought many young people into his church, and in studying how to engage their energies in the work of the church he hit upon this plan of organization. The fascination of the club gives the basis for the organization, which has its own officers and committees, which may be a prayer-meeting, a social, a relief, a music, a missionary, a temperance committee; and this list is often enlarged, for the scope of the organization takes in the unconverted young people of the congregation as "associate" members. Of the active members a pledge of Christian activity is required. The organization has been very popular, and numbers over 300,000 scattered among several denominatious. It has proved also, in spite of some imperfections to which all human organizations are liable, a most nsefnl adjunct to the work of the churches. Successful pastors in individual churches have for many years organized a similar work for the young Christians of their flocks, and they may be able to devise in the future some less cumbrous and expensive means of carrying it on among all the churches.

The Chicago Convention of this great organization numbered over 4,000 delegates from twenty-three States and 700 societies. The business was mainly addresses—talk. But there is much work for Christ to follow. No less than forty-three speakers were down on the three-days' program. With this versatility of talent, Christian work for young people was discussed in all its kaleidoscopic forms, and the intent and eager spirits were inspired with a new zeal and their minds enriched by a multitude of new experiences. It must be regretted that the consecration meetings were not more prominent and more intelligently conducted. They were seasons of blessing, but might have been doubled in spiritual power. The consecration is but half the work, if the sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit does not come by faith to seal the work, and baptize the soul with a holy power and grace for Christian service. In this respect the meeting came far short of its privileges. But there was a great and precious work done by Dr. Brooks of St. Louis in his sermon on the Scriptures as the sword of the Spirit for the Christian warrior; by Dr. Mitchell of New York on the aid which should be given to the church by the Endeavor Society as a missionary force, and by Dr. Little of this city on the Conditions of Spiritual Power, in which he urged personal self-examination and consecration as well as the purifying of the church of Christ.

DEAD FLIES.

BY REV. R. N. COUNTEE.

"Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savor; so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honor."—Ecclesiastes 10: 1.

There are a few people, at least, in the world that have a little reputation for wisdom and honor. They were not always so reputed, for they were once very simple; and, indeed, they were once fools. Some of them were a long time finding it out, and many of them a longer time before believing it. It is a hard thing for any man to believe he is a fool. I have seen some who were only fit for the lunatic asylum, and yet they believed themselves sensible, or at least pretended to be so.

I have done some foolish things in my life, things that have marked me as a simpleton in the eyes of many; and I have no idea that I am the only man in the world that has played the fool. Men and women are always doing foolish things, and hate to be called by the right name when they do foolishly. But I have asserted that some men and women have a reputation for wisdom and honor. These are two precious jewels. Who would not be wise and honorable? There are many things for which man may have a reputation, but a man can be reputed for no grander thing than wisdom. Solomon said, "In all thy getting get wisdom; for wisdom is the principal thing." Wisdom as spoken of in the text above has only one signification or interpretation: it is not to be looked at in a literal but in a spiritual sense. The wisdom that God gives to man through Jesus Christ is the wisdom of salvation. "Makes wise unto salvation," the Apostle says. Wise unto the saving of the soul, unto the joys of eternal life.

There are some of my readers who have this wisdom. You were once the children of folly, but now you are wise unto God: wise unto eternal life. Men have regarded you as being a Christian, and God has honored you by causing your name to be written in the Lamb's Book of Life. From a wise man I expect wise actions; and from an honorable man I expect honorable things. God expects us to do wisely, to act honorably and consistently. But I tell you the judgment day will no doubt reveal the fact that the inconsistent, foolish lives of professors of religion have done more to damn the world than infidelity has ever done. If God's people would only stand up, and the church live for God, heaven would rejoice and hell would groan. But here we have the church frolicking with the world, attending her picnics and balls, her circuses and her theaters, and every species of worldliness is practiced by God's people. Oh, my friends, what is your testimony? You are living epistles who are seen and read of men; what is your testimony? You said to the world the other day, there is not joy enough in religion for me. Some of you cannot stand sound doctrine. You want to be left alone with your picnic and circus and theater-going, hypocritical profession. But you say, God does not say I shall not attend a picnic, or a circus, or theater. Surely you do not want God to tell you everything. "Be not conformed to this world." "Love not the world;" etc.

Nearly two-thirds of the Christian world have joined the General Admiration Society, and they are living to have the glory of men and the praise of this world. This whole world is an enemy to God, and what becomes of your reputed wisdom and honor? You still love the world, and hence you seek the applause of this world, because, says Jesus, "the love of the Father is not in you."

A dead fly is of no importance whatever, so at least we argue; yet one dead fly ruins gallons of oil, jars of preserves, and sometimes a whole dinner. God designs to show us what little things can injure our reputation for wisdom and honor.

Who can estimate the harm the half-saved professors of religion are doing, not only to themselves, but to the whole cause of Christ? I say half-saved. They claim to be wholly saved, but their conduct and their companions show they are only half-saved. You need not try to make me believe that any man or woman is wholly saved who goes to a gambling or a dance hall for pleasure or enjoyment. You need not tell me that any man or woman is wholly saved who would go to a whisky or beer mill or saloon and stay all night. One Achan brought weakness and defeat to all Israel. And as dead branches injure a vine and dead flies cause the ointment to stink, so these dead professors are an injury to the cause of God and his Christ.

God has called us to sanctification. Separate yourselves. "Ye are the light of the world." You do not need any more light than such as Christ gives. If you love God and the love of God is shed abroad in your heart, you will keep his commandments.

"Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers." Ye are a separated people. Are you saved, my friends, wholly saved? Are you saved from the lodge and its infamy and sin? Are you saved from the secret lodge and its crime-breeding record? Oh, to be saved, saved, wholly saved! Your association with the world, your lodge record, marks you as a dead fly in the church of God. Your reputation is ruined and your wisdom has become foolishness.

CHOOSE YE WHICH PARTY YE WILL SERVE.

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

And now again the two great political parties of the country have vied with each other in their unprincipled and base subserviency to "the world, the flesh and the devil-(ish)" liquor power! What, therefore, remains for professedly Christian men, professedly good men, honest men, lovers of their country and its cherished institutions, to do, but as "saith the Lord" to "come out from among them and be ye separate!"

After all these years of waiting and hoping and appealing and praying, and after the blood of the millions slain by the accursed liquor business has been so long crying to them from the ground, and the bitter anguish and scalding tears of the crushed and broken-hearted wives, mothers and sisters is borne to them from every part of the country; and after all the testimony that has come to them of the indescribable miseries and ghastly murders caused directly by the grogshops, these parties appear with deaf ears and dumb mouths. They can spend hours and days in blowing off political party stuff and yet never a word or an allusion to the most important and vital of all the issues before the country.

Even the party of boasted "moral ideas" and which claims to have "done so much for temperance," has not a syllable, not even a hint, as to what they will do or what ought to be done with the great crime and misery-breeding liquor traffic! Nor has it any acknowledgment of the All-wise Creator and Lawgiver of the nations in its platform. And it is just as dumb on the claims of woman to her rights, as it is on the claims of the homes of the people for protection against the hellish saloons.

I beg of considerate, conscientious, home-loving, temperance and patriotic people to contrast the clean, out-spoken, uncompromising, God-honoring convention at Indianapolis with the political, partisan, liquor-and-tobacco-stifled conventions at St. Louis and Chicago, and then decide as good citizens and Christian men and women which you can approve and work and pray and vote for! To vote for either the St. Louis or Chicago tickets is to vote directly for the legalized continuance of the liquor traffic with all its horrid consequences.

If the liquor mongers did not know this they would not stay in the old parties another day. They have "got 'em" and they know it. To vote, therefore, with either the old parties is to vote with and for the liquor men and their iniquitous license scheme and its wicked sanction and support of the liquor crime and curse. "He that is not for me is against me," says Christ. This admits of no neutrals, no indifference.

But there are "other important interests" to be looked after, says the politician. Yes; and we want sober, temperance statesmen to look after these "other important interests," and they will be quite as safe in the hands of good temperance men as in the hands of such men as now too often disgrace the halls of legislation.

A word about the little resolution which produced such an explosion at the close of the Chicago Convention. It was evidently not designed to be considered as a plank, or any part of the platform, but was an afterthought of Mr. Boutelle to serve as a soothing anodyne to prevent the Ellen Foster and Albert Griffin style of temperance people from mugwumping from the G. O. license party. But it was "too late," and too light, as well as "too thin!" It was an insult to the waiting and expectant temperance sentiment of the country, a most contemptible trifling with a great question in which momentous moral as well as material interests are involved.

"If the Lord be God, serve him." The nation or party that will not serve him shall perish. Baal is not God. So don't throw away your votes on Baal!

CHRISTIANITY AND INFIDELITY CONTRASTED.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

The Christian religion seeks to save men from sin and to make them, now and forever, pure and happy. For this purpose it demands their faith, worship, and obedience. Infidelity seeks to obtain the mastery over the minds of the people; but it is incapable of making men wiser, happier, or better. Between these two there must necessarily be open and relentless warfare. We believe that there is a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that the wishes of unbelief are true. We affirm that there are many good and valid reasons for preferring Christianity to infidelity. In order to bring out these reasons fully and clearly, let us, for a moment, contrast the two. Such an inquiry into the merits of the question will doubtless enable us to see the infinite superiority of the Christian's faith, and the credulity of unbelievers in rejecting the Gospel, and choosing the harder side.

I. Christianity is a positive institution, with clearly defined laws and principles; infidelity is only the incarnation of negative ideas, and, in fact, so vague and anomalous that we can scarcely tell what it is. The religion of Christ is founded upon certain, well-authenticated facts. Its doctrines and claims are set forth in a book known as the Bible. It contains truth to be believed, enjoins acts of worship to be performed, lays down rules of life to be practiced, and presents many precious promises to be enjoyed. It is sustained by a variety and weight of evidence that ought to be sufficient to convince any rational mind of its inspiration and credulity. Infidelity is not founded upon any great historical facts. It has no authoritative statute-book corresponding to the Christian's Bible. It has no evidences by which to recommend or enforce its reception in the world. It is an abnormal condition of mind and heart, a mental or moral imbecility. It is related to Christianity as darkness is to light. Darkness is only the absence of light. Blindness is only the loss of sight. Unbelief is but the repudiation of evidence. In view of these facts, it would seem that no one in his sober senses could find any difficulty in deciding as to which is preferable.

II. Christianity affirms the supremacy of revelation, and at the same time recognizes the value of reason as the means by the use of which we are to satisfy ourselves as to the truth of revelation, and also gain a correct understanding of its meaning. Infidelity exalts human reason above the wisdom of God, assuming it to be the only and sufficient rule of life, and bowing to the senses as the sole interpreter of truth. We receive the precepts of the Gospel upon authority, because they are the words of one who cannot be mistaken and would not mislead. The truth of the Bible we accept as reliable, instead of human imagination, guess work, and philosophizing. Reason is the assent of our minds to certain conclusions which we consider warranted by facts; but in this we are often mistaken. There is nothing more unreliable and delusive than what men are pleased to call reason. It once taught that the earth was flat, and that the sun moved around it; it also denied the possibility of telegraphs, railroads, steamboats, electric lights, the circulation of the blood, the laws of gravitation, and many other facts and principles in nature now known to be true. Thus it appears that, after all, human reason unaided by divine revelation is a very unsafe guide to follow.

III. The Christian theory of the origin of man is dignifying to human character, consistent with reason, and sustained by evidence; the infidel theory is humiliating in itself, unphilosophical, and repugnant to the dictates of reason and common sense.

The Bible tells us that man was first brought into existence by the creative power of the Almighty; that he was made in the image of God, and only a little lower than the angels; and that when he fell from his holy and happy state he was reinstated through Christ. Hence we sing:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

On the other hand, infidelity teaches that man derived his existence from the lower orders of life; and that by the process of evolution he came through a long line of ancestral clams, mollusks, apes, monkeys, etc, until he finally developed into that more dignified and exalted type of being known as man; so that he might very appropriately sing:

"All hail the mighty monkey,
All hail the ancient clam,
From which, through evolution,
I came to be a man."

I would much rather believe that I was created by the Almighty, than to think myself a descendant of the ape or monkey. I say it is less incredible that God created man in the first place, than that he made some inferior animal with the power of developing its progeny into human beings.

IV. Christianity teaches a pure, wholesome, and benevolent system of ethics; infidelity teaches a loose, intangible, and licentious code of morals. The Christian system of morality, as taught in the Bible, clearly defines the nature of right and wrong, and distinctly sets forth the consequences of each. It comprises a pure code of laws, prescribing our duties in life. Instead of this, infidels offer what they are pleased to call "natural morality," which has nothing by which to enforce virtuous conduct, and is incapable of generating a noble impulse.

V. Christianity refines, elevates, and civilizes communities and nations; infidelity always tends to the injury and disintegration of society. Wherever the religion of the Bible prevails, age is reverenced, infancy protected, manhood respected, womanhood honored, and human life duly regarded. But where irreligion and unbelief gain the ascendancy, anarchy and misrule, degradation and misery, corruption and darkness inevitably follow. Christianity produces a state of society in which men can can live in peace, comfort, decency, security, and respectability, fulfilling the proper objects of their being in the world. Infidelity subverts the fundamental principles upon which social order and efficient government are based. By taking away the idea of responsibility to God, and removing the restraints of religion, it leaves men without any effectual preservative from vice. "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." All history is a commentary upon this inspired statement.

VI. Christianity imparts principles which comfort and support men in adversity; infidelity can have recourse to no such principles. To the afflicted the Gospel offers the consolation that such misfortunes are "light afflictions, which endure but for a moment, and work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." To those who are wronged or oppressed it gives the assurance that there will be a time when oppression shall cease, and when the right shall be vindicated. To the bereaved it holds out the promise of a hereafter, and a reunion with loved ones who have gone on before. In every trying hour, and in every painful ordeal through which we are called to pass, it cheers us with the reflection that all is open to the eye of One without whose knowledge not even a sparrow can fall to the ground, and by whom even the very hairs of our heads are numbered. Infidelity has no ideas corresponding to these. It affords no consolation in adversity, no refuge in time of trouble, and no animating prospect for the future. It seeks to rob the sufferer of his comfort, the Christian of his hope, the sinner of his restraint, society of its governing power, and humanity of its faith in the Savionr and Redeemer.

Christianity is a religion that convicts men of sin, brings them to repentance, renovates their moral natures, and impels them to lives of holiness and obedience. It exerts its beneficent moral power upon the individual, upon the family, upon socicty, upon the state, and upon the world. It is "a religion whose eyes look love, whose feet make music, whose hands give blessings, whose presence brings sunshine wherever it goes. It has fostered learning, developed civilization, and promoted charity and benevolence.

Infidelity has never made men better. It has added nothing to the sum of human happiness. It has never cheered an aching heart. It has never smoothed a dying pillow. It has no heaven to propose, and reveals no immortality. It has never elevated communities and nations. It has never built and sustained colleges and universities. It has never made any of the great discoveries in science and nature. It has never originated any of the great inventions of modern times. It has never liberated a nation from tyranny or slavery. It has never given any people a written constitution, a pure code of laws, and a republican form of government It is a barren field, a dreary waste, a Sahara of burning siroccos, as destitute of moral beauty and grand achievements as a desert is of sparkling fountains, beautiful foliage, or fragrant flowers.

Weatherford, Texas.

THE PARABLE OF JOTHAM.

In the ninth chapter of Judges may be found the parable of the trees, pronounced to be not only the most beautiful, but the most ancient now extant. It is several hundred years older than the fables of Æsop, so justly admired in modern times. The reading of this parable awakened the following reflections:

First. The folly of electing unprincipled men to office. Little regard is paid to a man's moral principles, provided he be a party "stalwart," or an "available" candidate. We have patriotic humbugs and political sneak-thieves in such abundance that it is a mere accident when a good man is elected to an important post. Indeed, some of our best men would refuse to have their reputations battered to pieces for the highest offices in the gift of the nation. Politics are sometimes compared to a stagnant pool, which engenders nothing but the lowest order of reptiles.

Secondly. The increasing corruption of our rulers. A new party rides into power upon the shoulders of a noble sentiment—the universal brotherhood of man. In less than a score of years a sad falling-off is developed. "To the victors belong the spoils." Ah, yes, the spoils ruin everything. The indemnification which Germany received from France is said to have caused a marked deterioration in the character of the nation. Thus also it is with the party. The noble sentiment is nearly forgotten, all new reforms are discarded, and crowds of office-seekers, like lazy house-dogs, rush in to seize the carcass.

Thirdly. The venality of our courts. We know little about courts, for we try to keep clear of the minions of the law. Litigation is an expensive luxury. Still, the proceedings of courts are often publicly discussed and severely condemned. In our county, a few years ago, a malicious fellow killed a deputy sheriff while levying on his property. To a plain man, there could be but one verdict—guilty of murder in the first degree. Yet sagacious lawyers so skillfully manipulated "the insanity dodge" that, after a few years, and a cost of more than $6,000 to the State, he was at last sentenced to imprisonment for life, to be pardoned in due time by some soft-headed governor. Is it not high time that the ridiculous farce of trying to prove every murderer to be insane be ruled out of court? God holds such men to be responsible; who dares affirm to the contrary?

The practice of law has degenerated from the administration of justice to the "art of picking fat geese." In lawsuits, as in war, coins are the strongest arguments. Whenever a lawyer goes beyond the point of seeing that his client has a fair trial, or a judge declines to instruct an ignorant jury, except in the language of mysticism, they become partakers of the guilt of the criminal. In Luther's catechism the question arises, "how do we make ourselves partakers of other men's sins?" Answer: When we command, advise or approve of evil, and do not prevent or reprove it, or make it manifest that it may be punished. Instead of choosing the most intelligent and moral citizens for jurors, the ignorant and indifferent are the favorites in all criminal trials. Men who never read newspapers are eagerly sought after. Then the laws are not executed according to the plain letter, but after some precedent furnished by a judge away off somewhere. In view of the miserable abortions of justice, how almost universal must be the corruption of our courts in the State and nation. It is the old story of Abimeiech and the Shechemites, and if there be no speedy reformation, a strange fire will proceed from some insignificant bramble, to consume both rulers and people.—Recollections of a Pastor.

AN OLD QUESTION ANSWERED.

[From the Christian Witness, organ of the National Holiness Association.]

A good brother minister from Michigan propounds the following question:

"DEAR BROTHER:—Will you please inform me if, in the mind of your National Association, a man can hold to secret orders and maintain 'perfect love,' 'purity of heart,' 'holiness?' such orders meaning, Masonry, Odd-fellowship, etc., etc. If the Association does not express itself, would you be willing to say what your thought in the matter is, by a 'yes,' or 'no?' Fraternally."

Our answer to the foregoing was as follows. We are perfectly willing that all our readers should know our views on the subject, as well as the brother addressed:

DEAR BROTHER:—In answer to your inquiries of March 8th, permit me to say:

1. Our Association, as an Association, has never expressed itself on the subject to which you refer.

2. I do not know what a man can do in such matters and maintain "perfect love," etc. It would depend largely upon his views of the character of such associations.

3. Personally, I keep out of all such associations, and advise others to do the same. Truly yours,

W. McD.

We may add to the foregoing this further statement: We have known some good men—men who gave every evidence of being good—who retained their piety while associated with these orders. We have known other men who seem to be good, but who are greatly damaged in their piety and usefulness, by what seemed to be their devotement to the interest of these orders. We have, therefore, come to this conclusion, viz., that the natural tendency of these associations is detrimental to piety; and if any succeed, while in these associations, in maintaining their piety, they do it in spite of such influence.

[Remarks on the above by the Banner of Holiness.]

If the answer of Bro. McDonald to the brother's question proves to be satisfactory to him as it is to its author, and is certain to be to members of secret societies, it will be proved to be a most successful answer, to say the least of it. But, like most attempts to satisfy various and disagreeing parties, it will prove a flat failure.

1. Masonry and Odd-fellowship are carnal institutions, making various pretentions as to essentially changing the character and life of men, on principles not only not of the Gospel of Christ, but that are contrary thereto, and the endorsements of their principles or pretentions are inconsistent with the profession of faith in Christ and devotion to him and his work.

2. In these orders professed Christians are brought into fellowship with the wicked, and cannot in the nature of the case retain "fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ," while thus in fellowship with carnal and wicked men, many of whom are haters of the Lord whom they as Christians profess to love, obey and adore.

3. Professed Christians in the orders are parties to pretenses as to charity, benevolence and good works, that are false and utterly unworthy of endorsement, while they are equally parties to the injury done to the countless number of the poor and needy, robbed of what would be given to them but for the support given to the orders under the false pretense that they are charitable institutions. The needy and helpless without are denied what should be given them, that the select within may be well cared for; not as objects of charity, but as claimants on their own funds. And professors of Christ's religion claim to be in these orders with eyes wide open and hearts pure!

4. That selfish, unsaved men should use these orders for various advantages, financial, social, political, and criminal, is what all must expect who have any knowledge of sinful human nature. Hence it is that secret societies are all and always dangerous, even when as such they purpose no evil. How any Christian can consent to sustain an order not necessary for any good cause, and furnishing unlimited opportunities for men to plot, plan and carry out projects of selfishness, sin and crime, we must leave to brother McDonald to explain.

5. "We have known good men," "men who seem to be good," etc. "Good men!" What sort of good men? Why their orders represent the goodness of unsaved men! They are towers of Babel erected by carnal grace; that natural goodishness which men prize so highly, and which is Satan's counterfeit of, and substitute for, the goodness that is of and from God, and which testifies that the works of the world are evil.

Masonic saints are such by the first birth, and are in repute as needing no second birth. Those "good men," that are constantly referred to as proof that the orders must be good, are as blind as those who, from without, believe in the orders because such good men are in them.

Spiritually-minded men can no more continue in these communions than can the Holy Spirit himself. What some call perfect love is likely to keep one in such loving company; but the Christ love, made perfect, will dethrone human goodishness, and open eyes to see the utter gracelessness of these pretentious orders. And as men enter blind-fold, "in darkness and in chains," so when they are brought out of nature's darkness into Christ's marvelous light, they will make haste to go out with open eyes from these temples of darkness, testifying that their works are evil.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

THE OPENING OF THE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Fourth of July, 1888, will long be remembered as the opening of the Centennial Exposition of the Ohio Valley and the Northwest. At midnight it was ushered in by a general illumination of the houses, ringing of bells, blowing of engine whistles, tooting of horns, shooting fire-crackers, booming of cannon, etc. The preliminary exercises were held in Music Hall at 11 A. M. The May festival chorus, accompanied with the Cincinnati orchestra, furnished the music.

Governor Foraker made the address of welcome. He paid a glowing tribute to "our distinguished visitors," and then bid the whole world welcome. The Exposition is located in Ohio, and somehow everything that's good gets there, but it is not for Ohio, nor the States of the Northwest Territory, but for the whole nation. Rev. Thayer, of the Unitarian church, offered the opening prayer, without even mentioning the name that is above every name—Christ Jesus.

Governor Thayer, of Nebraska, spoke on behalf of his State, and said that they did not belong to the Northwest Territory, but to that of Louisiana ceded to the United States by Napoleon I. of France. Napoleon knew the value of the territory and parted with it reluctantly. His object was to create here a rival to England, in the hope that thereby his ambitious schemes on the continent might the more easily obtain. But they were now joined to the Northwest and are part with them of one great nation.

Governor Gray, of Indiana, came next. His State was the smallest territorially, but in any other respect the peer of all. She gave more proportionally for education than any State in the Union excepting Texas. Indiana sent 250,000 soldiers to maintain the unity of this nation and maintain the inalienable rights of our fellow citizens. At the first Centennial we are a nation of 60,000,000. At the second Centennial we will be 300,000,000.

Lieut. Gov. Bryan, of Kentucky, followed. He was the most eloquent speaker of the day. He was cheered to the echo as he spoke of "the entire union from the Lakes to the Gulf, from ocean to ocean, a union of men, a union of hearts, and that none can sever the links of that union forever.

Gov. Beaver of Pennsylvania, spoke last. He just came from the reunion of the blue and the gray on the battlefield of Gettysburg, where the great argument was made with the sword on behalf of human rights, and settled forever.

At 12 M., in the midst of these exercises, Mrs. James K. Polk, in Nashville, Tenn., gave the signal by telegraph to start the machinery, and President Allison's daughter, a little girl twelve years old, touched the button on the stage which started the wheels in motion. Archbishop Elder pronounced the benediction.

In the afternoon more than half a million people witnessed the magnificent street parade. It represented everything: distinguished civil and military officers, infantry, artillery, cavalry, Catholic Knights, Knights of Pythias, bicycles, a primitive cart, primitive school house, ancient fort, Indian wigwam, fire department, police department, agricultnral, manufacturing and mechanical industries. For whom was all this? It was in the name and for the honor of "We, the people." They discovered this country, developed its resources, set up this free government and made it what it is. "We, the people" is the golden image, set up in this land, and all who will not fall down and worship it are the same hour thrown into the burning fiery furnace of public contempt, scorn and ridicule. NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

St. John's Day at Natick—Gov. Ames's eulogy of the lodge —An old New Hampshire Clergyman and Masonry—A novel preaching service—Death of a famous centenarian —Why our native birds have come back.

St. John's Day was grandly celebrated by the Freemasons at Natick; Gov. Ames, Lieutenant Governor Brackett and other distinguished members of the order being present. Sixty years ago a law was passed which, unless it has been repealed—a point on which I have been unable to obtain satisfactory information—still stands as a dead letter in the statutes of Massachusetts, prohibiting Masonic oaths as extra-jndicial and dangerous to the commonwealth; and what shall we say to the spectacle of a governor of this very State pronouncing a fulsome eulogy on the lodge in such words as these:

"The Mason who lives up to his profession is a good citizen, and there cannot be too many men of that kind. This State has ever done all that she could to promote that feeling of fraternity which underlies Masonry, and we see to-day some of the results of her policy. Within her borders are tens of thousands of men and thousands of women who find aid and encouragement in societies that with closed doors to the outside world do their formal work, but that far and wide scatter with liberality their benefactions. I see no reason why the encouragement now given to these societies should not be continued and increased if need be."

These are sentiments quite worthy of a chief magistrate who refuses to exercise his judicial power and release the imprisoned evangelist, Mr. Davis, though he must be aware that to stand between an unrighteous law, or one unrighteously administered, is among the chief prerogatives of the governorship. The exercises were held in the Congregational church, the orator of the day being Right Excellent Companion Alfred F. Chapman, editor of the Liberal Freemason, and Past General Grand High Priest of the United States of America. His speech was, like most Masonic orations, a string of mere platitudes from which the veriest tyro in lodge lore could not have learned much that was new, though a thoughtful Christian, brought up to consider the religion which Christ established as the grandest bond of union between man and man, ought to have been somewhat amazed to find out that "this broadest of all institutions draws together men of every race, and makes of them brethren in the highest sense," —the distinguished speaker quite ignoring Mackey's Lexicon which informs us that "the candidate should be twenty-one years old or more, free-born and no bond-man, of able body, and of limbs whole, as a man ought to be," as also the well-known fact that all colored lodges are considered clandestine and altogether out of the pale of this universal brotherhood.

Of course, George Washington proved the usual cheap and convenient subject for Masonic glorying, and the craft would have gladly seized on the name of Natick's famous son, Henry Wilson, had not the stubborn fact that he never bowed his manhood to the bondage of the cable-tow stood in the way. However, Lieutenant Governor Brackett alluded to him as "one who loved the principles of Masonry with such unswerving fidelity that he was a worthy brother only without the forms;" thus getting round the difficulty with an ingeniousness worthy of the craft whose zeal in pressing great names into its service is only equalled by its equally persistent rejection of the "One Name under heaven, given among men, whereby we may be saved."

I once heard of a good old clergyman in the Granite State, who though not a Mason himself, attended a Masonic celebration, and, being called upon to make the prayer, electrified the worthy brethren by offering up the following brief, but very comprehensive petition: "O Lord, we do not know what this thing is; but if it be from thee we pray thee to bless it, and if it be not from thee to curse it. Amen." It strikes me, however, that nobody, whether in lay or clerical ranks, could truthfully tell the Almighty that he "did not know what the thing was," after listening for a whole day to exercises so plainly stamped throughout with the Christless character of the order as were these.

Quite a novel service was lately held at the Monument Square Methodist church, Charlestown,—a sermon in Chinese, delivered by a Chinese preacher, Rev. Sea Sek Ong, who, among other things calculated to rouse Christian enthusiasm, said that 36,000,000 souls in his native country were now open to missionary effort. Unrestricted Chinese emigration may be an evil, and so is unrestricted emigration from any country; but he must be a dull student of Divine Providence who fails to see in this meeting of the Occident and the Orient on her shores, America's opportunity to lead the world in home as well as foreign evangelization. There is no earthly reason why a great city, with an efficient Board of Health, backed by an ample police force, should allow Chinatowns to exist, or, indeed, permit a foreign population to huddle exclusively into any one locality, creating a foreign quarter, where all unnameable filthiness and vice may breed and fester undisturbed. The great Lawgiver of Israel laid the axe at the root of the tree when he enacted that there should be one law, alike for the Jew and for the stranger.

A long and useful life has recently come to a close in the death of Mr. Seth Davis, a centenarian of Newton and the oldest teacher living in the State. He was in many respects a remarkable character. He was the author of an arithmetic quite popular in its day, while as an instructor he was far in advance of his age. He first introduced the study of geography into the common schools, and first started the idea of drawing maps, also of making large maps on cloth; while the custom of declamations and dialogues was another new departure, of which it is rather amusing to modern ears to relate that it was bitterly opposed in town meeting in 1813, and it was finally there decided that to have the pupils "speak pieces" was demoralizing in its effect and could not be tolerated. His honorable record does not end here. He was a radical reformer when reform was a new and unpopular thing. In 1814 he gave up the use of liquor though the temperance movement had not then been started, and ministers and laymen alike used it without thought of harm; and in 1818 he ceased to give it to his help, while paying them increased wages to make up for the privation. In 1826 he formed an organization for the suppression of intemperance, consisting of twenty-seven members; the first of its kind, probably, in New England. That he was not a lodgeman goes without saying. It is a remarkable fact, but one very accordant with natural law, that to be deeply interested in one reform always opens the mind for the admission of others, and so far from being men of one idea, true prohibitionists have more ideas to the square inch than their opponents, with all their effete dandling of dead issues, can muster to the square mile. I think it was Peter the Great who said: "Scratch a Russian and you will find a Tartar." Scratch any old warhorse who trained in the Abolition ranks forty years ago, and you will find an uncompromising foe to the secret lodge. Reforms hang together and reformers ought to.

For many years I have not heard such concerts of bird-singing as greet my ears this present season. Old favorites not seen before for a long time have come back with their bright plumage and song that from long absence has grown almost unfamiliar; but why this rennaissance of our native birds? people ask. One answer, hardly satisfactory, is that the English sparrow, their persistent enemy, got killed off in the late blizzards; but a more common sense view sees a striking coincidence between this fresh advent of bird life, and the disappearance of birds' bodies and wings from hats and bonnets. For two years a vigorous war has been waged against this barbarous and tasteless fashion which it is to be hoped is now dead beyond the possibility of any future resurrection. But apropos to the remarks made above, white ribbon women have led the van in the fight, and the bonnets at a W. C. T. U. gathering have been generally noticeable from their lack of such disfiguring adornments. Is not here encouragement to believe that all moral questions, great and small, whether political or merely social, shall come at last to be tried before the Motherhood of the nation? God hasten the day.

—Swarthmore College, near Philadelphia, under the direction of the Society of Friends, is reckoned one of the best educational institutions in the land. The President of the institution at the late commencement announced "that the professorship endowment had been unexpectedly successful; not only had the subscription set on foot some months ago been responded to very fully, assuring through the gifts of 250 persons the endowment of the chair of mathematics and astronomy, but three generous citizens had come forward, each with the offer of $40,000, to endow a separate professorship.

—A few days since five young men from Oxford University arrived on the "Brittannic," and two from Cambridge, three from the University of Edinburgh, and one from the University of Utrecht, to take part in the college Students' Summer School and Encampment for Bible Study, at Northfield, Mass., now being conducted by Mr. Moody for two weeks, beginning with July 1st.

REFORM NEWS.

THE WORK IN WASHINGTON.

July 5, 1888.

DEAR READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:—I have a few more thoughts which I wish to give you in regard to the work among the children which I am carrying on in the line of an industrial school here at the N. C. A. building. I wish to show you that this is and can be closely allied to the work of the N. C. A.

My purpose was to teach in the school the evils of secret societies as well as those of the liquor traffic, but finding the children as a rule almost entirely ignorant as to the Bible and its truths, and as my rules and precepts were to be drawn from that source, I felt that for awhile I must drop all else and teach them what the Word of God is; what it will do for us; and what it commands us to do. In story form I am telling them the main facts of the Old Testament, teaching them the Lord's prayer, and the Ten Commandments, which they have nearly mastered, also have learned the Twenty-third Psalm. They are quick to learn, either good or bad, and when I realize their surroundings and teachings at home and on the streets, I take fresh courage and press on. My hands are tied for want of means to enlarge the work, but as I firmly believe this is the Lord's work, I am simply trusting him for that, as well as all other blessings. This branch of work by vote of the Board is to be self-sustaining; this surely does not mean that one person should perform the labor and furnish the means to carry on the work. Were that possible I would not so desire it, for I do not want all the blessing; I want to share it with you. The largest attendance at day-school has been 18, smallest 12. The Sabbath-school, largest 25, smallest 9. Both day and Sabbath-school could readily be enlarged, but with what is the increased want to be met? All can pray, and we read that "The prayers of the righteous availeth much."

Washington is subsiding into quiet after the Fourth. Our time was spent at home, except attending the noon meeting at the Central Union Mission, a stroll afterward on the Mall, and a trip on the Gospel wagon to one of the neglected districts. There is no lack of work to be done. Pray that we may be equal to the work given us to do. Yours in Christian work, ANNA E. STODDARD.

RECOLLECTIONS OF BROWNLEE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In my former letters I did not mention the fact that while canvassing the North Page United Presbyterian church in Southwestern Iowa, I became acquainted with Mr. Brownlee, a relative of the Brownlee who was murdered at Little York, Ill. At College Springs I met another one of the Brownlee family, a nephew of the man who was murdered. The Brownlee who was murdered was a Freemason. He had unfortunately contracted the drink habit, and when under the influence of strong drink, he would talk freely of Masonry in the presence of those who were not members of the craft. He was Masonically notified that the penalty of the first degree would be inflicted upon him, if he repeated the offense. Mr. Brownlee was a loyal Mason, but when he again came under the influence of liquor, he was as talkative as ever. When he became sober he remembered what he had said, and feared the execution of the threat that had been made. He appealed to his brother (father of the Brownlee I met at College Springs) to protect him from the vengeance of the lodge. But the brother, who was a temperance man, thought that the lodge only meant to scare him out of the drink habit, and so did not take measures to protect him, as he would otherwise have done.

And so, unprotected, the poor man met his fate, as Morgan and others had done before. And still the blood-curdling oaths of Freemasonry are administered behind the tiled doors of the lodge. Men go on imprecating upon themselves horrible death penalties if they do not do that, the nature of which is unknown to them at the time. Are not our lives committed to us as a sacred trust, to be surrendered only at the call of the Divine Giver? What right then has a man to consent to have his throat cut, or his heart torn out, or his body cut in twain, or the top of his skull knocked off, if he does not conceal what an enlightened conscience may require him to reveal; or do what an enlightened conscience may forbid his doing? Has a man a right to kill himself? If not, can he authorize another to do what he has no right to do himself? How, then, can the bloody perpetrators of Masonic murders hope to escape Divine vengeance, on the ground that their victims imprecated these penalties upon themselves?

What a horrible thing for the church to tolerate her members in taking the oaths of Masonry! And how fearfully blinded by Satan, the god of the lodge, must that minister be, who can unblushingly stand in the pulpit and preach the Gospel of Him who in secret said nothing, and who commanded, saying, "Swear not at all," while in his heart he adheres to the covenants of Masonry!

I left Southwestern Iowa for my home at Wheaton, Ill., in time to be present at the Wheaton College Commencement, and to attend the annual meeting of the N. C. A. in Chicago. The excellent character of the commencement exercises and the doings of the annual meeting are already before your readers.

After a short visit with my family, I returned to Iowa, to prosecute my work as agent of the Iowa Association.

Last Sabbath, July 1st, I preached morning and evening in the Adair United Presbyterian church, five miles north of the village of Adair. Monday morning I returned to Adair, and while taking my dinner at the hotel, I was speaking of the unchristian character of the secret lodge system. A gentleman of the place said that he had long been a member of the church; that he was also an Odd-fellow. He thought that if a man lived up to the obligations of Odd-fellowship he was a good Christian. He spoke very highly of the benevolence of the order. Any man who was an Odd-fellow was his brother. As he went on exalting Odd-fellowship, I said, Would you indorse the statement made by the orator, who, on the occasion of the public installation of the officers of the New Sharon Lodge of Odd-fellows, said, "All the angels of God cannot keep you out of heaven if you live up to Odd-fellowship?"

One of the Odd-fellows who was present thought that language was a little strong; that if he had said the devil could not keep them out of heaven if they were good Odd-fellows, it would have been better.

"Well," said I, "do you believe that a man who lives up to Odd-fellowship will go to heaven when he dies?"

"I do," he replied.

"Were you obligated, as an Odd-fellow, to repent of your sins?" I asked.

"No," he replied.

"Were you obligated to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?" I asked.

"We can't be infidels and be Odd-fellows," was his reply.

"You mean you cannot be atheists," said I.

"Yes," he replied; "we are required to profess a belief in God."

"Are you required to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?" I asked.

"No," he said.

"You say you have long been a member of the church?" I continued.

"Yes," he responded.

"Then you believe the Bible?"

He assured me that he did.

"If you were not obligated as an Odd-fellow to repent of your sins and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, then a person may live up to the obligations of Odd-fellowship who does not repent towards God, and who does not believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?"

"Why, yes," he said; "we do not require that of them."

"But," said I, "Christ declares that those who do not repent shall perish; that those who do not believe in him shall be damned. What, then, will become of those who go about to establish their own righteousness, as Odd-fellows, instead of seeking the righteousness which is of God, through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ? And what a dreadful thing it is to work with Satan, to lead our young men to hope that they can climb up to heaven by Odd-fellowship, or Freemasonry, when the explicit teaching of the Bible is, that there is no way to God and heaven but the one way, which is Christ. What a burning shame that so many of the churches should tolerate their members in joining in the rival worships of the lodge, where Christ is ignored and men are stimulated to cherish false hopes of heaven."

Who will cry aloud and spare not, until the church awakes to a sense of her responsibility, and unitedly testifies against the false worships of the lodge?

C. F. HAWLEY.

INCIDENTS OF THE LOUISIANA WORK.

PLAQUEMINE, La., June 28, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came here from Rosedale on the 21st and began my work by distributing anti-secrecy tracts. I met Mr. Wm. Ellis, a young Baptist local preacher. He said, "If dese here preachers would stop gwine around preaching against secret societies the churches would become more united, for secret orders unites churches. If you jist preach the crucifixion of Christ, dat's er nuff."

Of course Mr. Ellis is trying to build a new church at Seymourville by lodge help. My arrival here seemed to have perplexed the lodge; hence Mr. Lowry, a Methodist local preacher, sent word to me that if I were caught on the streets of Plaquemine distributing anti-lodge tracts I must expect to abide by whatever may come upon me.

I reported the matter to Bro. E. H. Dickerson, Justice of the Peace, clerk of Macedonia Baptist church, and also an Odd-fellow. He denounced such actions and said it was my privilege to distribute tracts and take either side of the lodge question I deemed best. These poor, ignorant lodgeites charge the bulldozing whites with suppression and yet do the very same thing among themselves.

The pastor of Pilgrim Rest Baptist church had made appointment for me to preach for his people on the night of my arrival, but not being assured of the appointment I did not meet the crowded house that patiently awaited until after 9 P. M. I regretted it when I heard of their disappointment, but I met St. Matthew Baptist church Friday night and heard an excellent anti-lodge sermon preached by Rev. J. F. Cox, the pastor of the African Methodist Episcopal church of this place. I was really surprised when Elder Cox began to speak of the pretended secrets and pass-words, and tell them there is no other Divine institution but the church, with which all Christians should be content.

I distributed tracts after services to the congregation. This set the secretists to grumbling and threatening. Most of the preachers and church-going people were on an excursion to New Orleans Sabbath, hence there was poor attendance in the churches on the Lord's day. I trust the preachers and dear Christians will wake up to see the evil in giving their patronage to Sunday excursions.

I went down to Dorseyville and preached to a large congregation at St. John church, Rev. B. Dorsey, pastor. Notwithstanding Bro. Dorsey's opposition to lodgery, the Knights of Labor have succeeded in planting a lodge and builded a large lodge hall in the center of the town. Bro. Dorsey has been and is yet opposing the lodge from his pulpit. I distributed a great many tracts in Dorseyville, which I think will have their effect. Bro. Dempsey Greavers told me that he had become disgusted and had left the K. of L. There is a lady here whose husband died last year and the Odd-fellows give her $5 00 per month. This a kind of seductive bait, and it is surely catching lodge fish. Another poor lady in Dorseyville, whose husband died and left her three little children, all under seven years of age; and the Odd-fellows have only given her $10.00, and her future prospects seem very uncertain.

Since my article of June 7th appeared in the Cynosure, the lodge men have been somewhat opposing Bro. Williams. His school has closed now and the lodgeites think they can in some way cause him to suffer. But the God of all peace is able to sustain him and all that obey his bidding. Most of the anti-lodge men in these parts have been so deeply interested in other work for several months past that the lodge has grown strong. Even Bro. J. A. Porter, though opposed to secrecy, has allowed the Knights of Labor to silence his voice by joining their lodge. Strange to say, even the strong will not dare oppose lodgery as long as they are adherents to it. The copies of Cynosure sent here seems to be awakening the drowsy sleepers. Please continue to send them regularly. Anti-lodge tracts sent to Rev. B. Dorsey, Dorseyville, and L. C. Washington, Bayou Goula, La., will be distributed freely. I go from here to Donaldsonville and Belle Rose. Friends can write me and send old copies of the Cynosure or tracts, or any other help to prosecute the work in the South, to 152 Clara street, New Orleans, until July 15th. If my race can be warned they can be saved.

DONALDSONVILLE, JUNE 28.—I came here from Plaquemine this morning, and had thought to meet Elder Cotton from Belle Rose and accompany him home and preach for him to-night; but owing to the long spell of rainy weather the road was impassible, so I stopped here and have seen Revs. Isaiah Lawson, pastor of Nazarene Baptist, and John Quarles, pastor of the M. E., and Rev. John Aubert, pastor of St. Luke Baptist church of Houma, La., and Hon. J. D. Stewart, former State Senator from Houma, Terre Bonne parish, La. Bro. Aubert is the only anti-lodge man among these; however, Bro. Lawson and Mr. Stewart have seen the evils of the K. of L. and denounce it very strongly; yet they seem to think other secret lodges are perfectly safe. There is very little, as yet, to be done here, saving the distribution of tracts and introducing the Cynosure. Bro. Aubert thinks lodgery is ruining the churches financially and spiritually. This is another city afflicted with lodgery, but a few Cynosures will start the people to thinking. Donaldsonville has about 4,000 inhabitants, with three white and two colored churches, with legions of secret lodges. I met one man, a deacon in a church here, and although he belongs to three lodges, he denounced them all as frauds and church-destroyers.

NEW ORLEANS, JUNE 30.—I came from Donaldsonville here and began distributing tracts and calling on Cynosure readers. I found my family very unwell. I met a secretist last night who said he was going to have the press of the Cynosure arrested for printing his name and his "s'ciety." I have met several prominent secretists since I returned, and they seem very anxious to know what I am doing and how long I am going to stop in the city. A member of my church was buried yesterday. She belonged to the Grand Samaritan Lodge, No. 1, and the pastor was hardly recognized at all, as the lodge had its own chaplain. F. J. DAVIDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM THE CONGO.

[Conclusion of Rev. Edward Mathews's letter from last number, which described his reaching the mission station at Kimpoka, manned by a Mr. Elkins and wife and forming part of the William Taylor system.]

I learned that some days previous to our call the leopards had carried off their three goats, and now the new milk is greatly missed. Breakfast was soon prepared, and we could but remark the difference between the food at this self-sustaining mission and others where we have eaten. Here everything bespoke poverty and scantiness, whereas at missions properly—yes, Scripturally supplied— supported by appropriations from home churches, they have things wholesome and in abundance. It may be that some natures are so constituted that God has to about starve them to get them through to heaven, but I can relish a good steak cooked with butter and serve the Lord to acceptance.

We read some after family worship, then laid on the floor and slept for a short time, when we were aroused for a lunch before our return trip.

At 1 P. M., the same day, we pushed off, and with the current in our favor made good progress toward home. Five hours from Kimpoka we came upon large herds of Hippos, and it was decided to put our luggage and boys and Mr. Brown on an island, while the Bangallas took me nearer to the game so as to bag a Hippo if possible. The third shot was effectual, and the huge beast, having received the charge in his head, showed us his fore feet clean, and so rolled and floundered until, reaching deep water, he sank. We could not wait eight hours for him to float, and so our Bangallas surlily complied with our request and paddled away from the scene. We soon sighted some fishermen on an island and landed to get dash (a present) for the Bangallas, who were mad because we would not wait for the Hippo to float. Five large fish were being cured over the fire, and for a dozen table-knives Bro. Brown purchased them, and now all was right.

I shot two more Hippos, three in all, so Mr. Brown claims, but we got none, and now night was fast approaching and we were an hour or more from home. That flash of lightning accompanied with terrific thunder is the harbinger of the storm, and now all bend to the paddles and I among them. Our canoe fairly flies through the water; but the storm is from the southwest and so comes on our broadside. We pulled for life and finally were driven among the rank grass and papyrus, where for fifteen minutes we were at the mercy of the swell which soon filled our canoe, drenching us and all our baggage. The fine fish before mentioned were lost, and we were left to wonder if anything was saved. We managed finally to release the canoe, and affected a landing, where for more than an hour we squatted under the pelting of the pitiless storm, and yet not a mile from the village of North Doto on the east and Kinchessa on the west, but the rank vegetation kept us from reaching either. The wind went down and soon we loaded up and pushed off upon the bosom of the restless Pool and reached Arlington about 9 P. M., thoroughly wearied with our exposure.

Bro. Silvery exerted himself and soon we were regaled with hot tea, and as a preventive we took quinine and wrapped up thoroughly and turned in, as sailors say. The Sabbath dawned brightly, but I felt stupid and chose to rest and so stave off, if possible, the fever. More quinine was taken, and so for a few days I did little more than nurse myself, and by proper care I finally came out all right; but so deaf that my conversation tube was of little or no service; persons wishing to talk to me were obliged to write. In a few days this effect of quinine passed off and my tube is again of use.

Monday, April 9th, I was aroused by a crowd gathering near my room, and went out to ascertain the cause, and met the goat boy, who, in an excited manner, told me of a tiger in the goat house. I called for the gun and reconnoitered and to my surprise I found it was a serpent (python) that was sleeping off his gluttony, having swallowed ten fowls for his early meal—as it proved after I shot him and he was opened. I have his skin, which I expect to bring home if God spares me. It is fifteen feet long and from eighteen to twenty-four inches wide through the middle.

The Station on Friday, April 19th, was made acquainted with the fact of the death of one of the Bangalla men, and all night the residue, about thirty or forty, including women, mourned as is the custom of their race. It is hard to describe the scene.

In the hut where the corpse was stretched there sat a few men and women caying, while outside, in groups around log fires, others were squatted. One group, larger than the others, was made up of men formed in a circle, with two in the center decked out in boughs of trees, and four or five drummed on iron tanks which had been used for bringing oil and paint to the Congo, with an additional native drum. These men exerted themselves beyond description. They writhed, jerked and twisted until it appeared to me they were boneless. Others shrieked and wailed to appease the wrath of their divinities. Saturday morning the body was wound in about fifty yards of cloth, and without box or coffin was laid away in the grave. Bro. Brown and I held a service, and the large crowd was quite attentive. So it goes here on the Pool.

As to weather the wet season is still on us, but we are not uncomfortable. The heat is not intense, and the rains are almost without exception in the night, so we get along very nicely.

OUR PUBLICATIONS IN WEST AFRICA.

Rev. J. Gomer, missionary of the United Brethren church at Shengay, West Africa, sends us the very interesting letter printed below, which ought to stir all our hearts toward the Foreign Fund. Bro. Gomer himself writes:

FREETOWN, Sierre Leone, May 26, 1888.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR SIR:—The enclosed letter is from Rev. Charles Cole, a merchant at Grand Bassa, Liberia, and said to be a very responsible man. He owns good property here in Freetown, and at present his wife is here; this is his native home. As Grand Bassa is 300 or 400 miles down the coast from here, and my station is sixty miles inland from here, it would be far better for him to do his business direct with you, as mail steamers call in at Bassa and we have no regular mail to Shengay.

MY DEAR BRO.—Many, many thanks for the three books that you so kindly sent me, viz., "My Experiences with Secret Societies, Illustrated," "Secrecy in its Relations to the Family, etc., by Rev. M. S. Drury," and "Christian Cynosure." Really I thank God Almighty that my ambition has never yet taken me to that society, Masonry, or any other secret society; and if I had the will all Masons and members of any other secret societies should have their own church built for themselves, and no Christian should mingle with them in their worship, however eloquent some of them may be, for their truthfulness in what they preach is rendered doubtful by their profound secrecy, even to their own bosom wife, their darling children and fond parents. Kindly send me the following publications and I shall send to settle for them; and if you have any more of those you sent me to sell, I can sell them for you and make you the remittance.

CHARLES COLE.

A PRAYER OF FAITH.

WARREN, Ill.

Our Lord requires his witnesses to testify of what they know of his grace by experience. 1 John 1: 3 says: "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." Of course such a witness could not be an oath-bound Mason; and no Christian will put his light under a bushel.

After reading Elder Callender's article on faith-healing in the Cynosure of Feb. 16, I desire to witness to the world some things that I know of Christ's doing in my experience of over sixty-one years of Christian work. As for Christ's healing the sick in answer to prayer I never doubted it since I became acquainted with him. I have heard it published from the pulpit all my life that such miracles were not designed to be continued after the establishment of the Christian religion; but I have never been told where I could have God's word for it. About the year 1830, in the town of Shelby, Orleans county, New York, a Christian lady was sick and under the care of a doctor for a long time without apparent benefit, and was finally pronounced incurable, and given up to die.

As I was passing the house one day, on foot and alone, with no thought of the sick woman, suddenly I seemed to hear a voice speak to me as plainly as words could utter, "Go in and pray for that sick woman." I went into the house and saw the invalid was very feeble, and as the nurses were trying to make her comfortable, I did not interfere and left without offering prayer. I thought no more of the matter for a few days, until I called on business with the husband of the sick woman, when she beckoned to me and whispered, "Why did thee not pray with me the other day? Something told me thee came in to pray with me." I replied that I was told to do so, and had no excuse to offer except a dislike to interfere. I felt then no disposition to pray. Not long after I was again passing the same house when the word came again as plainly as a man could speak, "Go, pray with that woman!" I went in, called the family together and had a season of prayer. All in the house felt the power of God upon us. The apparently dying woman was healed then and there by the power of God, as I believe.

PITH AND POINT.

POWELL CLAYTON.

In my June communication to the Cynosure I reiterated what the reporter of the Chicago News reported Gen. Powell Clayton of Arkansas as saying concerning the colored people's franchise, that they should not have been allowed the full franchise, and so on. All of which Gen. Clayton denies and says he gave utterance to no such words. Gen. Clayton made self sacrifices for the colored delegates at the Chicago Republican Convention. I wrote the letter before he made a denial of the charges. His late action in the convention was of such a nature as to cause the colored people of Arkansas to feel proud of him.—A. M. MIDDLEBROOKS, Pine Bluff, Ark.

ANOTHER LEAGUE FOR A BETTER CHRISTIAN UNION.

Universal Christendom (Catholic, Protestant and the Greek or Eastern church) is agreed upon the fact that the Lord Jesus Christ appointed two positive ordinances to be observed by his people, and that these ordinances are baptism and the Lord's Supper. The different human devices or modes of obedience are like flags of rebellion. And, alas! such condemned "divisions" continue instead of the "one body" for whose oneness our Lord prayed (John 17). When that prayer is answered the world will believe in Him. The union sentiment among Protestants has increased greatly of late years as may be seen by the many associations formed in support of the views which they hold in common. Our country affords a good illustration of unions in which contrary principles are held. The Northern and Southern States were one nation, but slavery and liberty were inimical, and the South hoisted its bars and stars in rebellion against the North and yet truthfully declared her loyalty to the same principles she had always maintained! So the present unions of sects or denominations may have in them some disruptive element which will prove dangerous to the future and must be set aside or eradicated before real Christian union can be safely enjoyed. Would it not then be a good plan for religious papers to open their columns on the subject? To this many hearts would throb a hearty, Amen! Readers would welcome such a column and rejoice in it as a means of purifying the ordinances of Christ and thereby a foretaste of the triumph of our common Christianity in the world. Happily Protestantism is a unit against Rome and her wafer instead of the bread and wine prescribed by our Lord.—T. H.

OUR COLPORTEURS STRIKE FLINTY SOIL AT RICHMOND, ILLINOIS.

We could not do much yesterday but distribute circulars. I secured one subscription. This is the worst town I have ever seen. Nearly all are Masons. I secured two subscriptions from ladies this morning. About an hour afterwards a man stopped me and demanded that his wife's name should be taken from my list and the money refunded. We had a hot time. I would do neither for him. In a few moments I met his wife; she wished that I would give back the money as it would make trouble. She felt so bad that I obliged her and went on. About half an hour ago the other lady came here and wished her name taken off and money given back. Family tranquility was about to be split. I tried to argue with her but it was no use. We have stirred them up; gave away a good many tracts, but can't secure subscriptions (or hold them).—J. W. F.

THE NEW ORLEANS WORK MARKED.

I am deeply interested in the good work going on in New Orleans and that part of the South. I was formerly acquainted with Elder Jackson, Mr. Ladd and many others. I was called to the financial superintendency of the erection of the female boarding house of Leland University in '82. The Cynosure came to our reading-room then. Does it still go there? Am glad to see the good work follow the traveling evangelists of this Gospel that sets captives free from the device of Satan.—R R. WHITTIER.

LITERATURE.

The two great illustrated serials of the Century, the Life of Lincoln and Kennan's Siberian Papers, are continued in the July number. Mr. Kennan describes the Steppes of the Irtish. Those who suppose that Siberia is a land of ice and desolation will be surprised at his description of the flowery country through which the route of the expedition lay. The illustrations are very numerous and novel. In the installment of the Lincoln History the relations between Lincoln and McClellan are described, and an astonishing incident relating to a call by President Lincoln upon General McClellan is here authoritatively described for the first time. Under the heads of "European Neutrality" and "The 'Trent' Affair," Mr. Lincoln's part in these matters is fully set forth. There are portraits of Charles Francis Adams, Rear-Admiral Wilkes, John Slidell and J. M. Mason. Rev. Dr. Buckley of the Christian Advocate has in this number another of the series he is writing on various superstitions and psychologic phenomena. The present essay is on "Dreams, Nightmare, and Somnambulism." The opening illustrated article is of special value to all Sabbath-school teachers, because of its fine description and illustrations of the Sinai country. The traditions yet preserved by the Mohammedans and the Catholics for the benefit of the multitude of pilgrims to these so-called "sacred" places, are interesting and instructive. The frontispiece is a portrait of Pasteur and his granddaughter by the celebrated French painter, Bonnat. This picture is printed in connection with a timely article on "Disease Germs, and how to Combat them," a foot-note to which article gives a brief sketch of Pasteur's interesting career.

A stroke of enterprise in the July American Magazine is a symposium discussion, by eminent American authors, of the Chace International Copyright Bill, which is now awaiting the action of the House of Representatives. Some of the views are remarkable, especially those of Eugene Field, who claims that America should have a literature to protect before setting about protecting it. William Eleroy Curtis has a second paper on "Ecuador and her Cities," which is fully up to the high standard of the first, and brings out much information of that part of South America which is not generally known. "Housekeeping by the U. S. Government" is the title of an illustrated paper by Charlotte Reeve Conover, describing the Veteran's Home near Dayton, Ohio. Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, the eminent brain specialist, contributes an entertaining paper on "Spiritualism and Like Delusions," in which are many statements that Spiritualists will not like to read, inasmuch as the doctor evidently considers them of unsound mind. Among other things, this paper shows how chemicals may be used in producing spirit pictures.

Bleeding from the nose in children is not an uncommon event at this season of the year. A popular article on this subject by Dr. J. B. Bissell in the July number of Babyhood will therefore be found of general interest to mothers. It clearly describes the various causes of bleeding, and furnishes a number of simple remedies not always known or thought of. Equally seasonable is Dr. Chapin's article on, "The Dietetic Treatment of Indigestion and Diarrhœa," containing many hints which, if heeded, will save unnecessary suffering to the little ones. Dr. Yale, the medical editor, lays stress on the value of sterilizing milk, a process which deprives it of the living organisms that favor fermentation. The process is a very simple one and is fully described. Among the non-medical articles is one entitled "Put Yourself in her Place," which discusses the nurse-girl question in a novel way.

Literature, the new illustrated weekly, has in late numbers given portraits, sketches and illustrative selections from their writings of Samuel L Clemens (Mark Twain), James Wood Davidson, Mrs. (Danske) Dandridge, the poet Swinburne and Charles Reade.

Words and Weapons for the month has from the editors, "The Wayside Hearer," "The Necessity of Preparation," and "Politics and the Christian." In the latter Mr. Mills slurs at the position of the Reformed Presbyterians in politics in terms most unworthy of his magazine. We doubt if Ingersoll would show more disrespect for the convictions of a noble people. If Mr. Mills would better inform himself upon the position of the Covenanters and the demands of the Word of God that Christ be honored as the head of the state as well as of the church, he would at least cesse to scorn and misrepresent if he did not agree. Dr. Pierson's biographical sketch is upon the philanthropist, John Howard.

St. Nicholas, with all of its Fourth of July stories, Revolutionary ballads, sketches of marvelous dogs and pigs, has also "Recollections of the Naval Academy," a full and interesting account of how our naval officers are educated. The story of "The Little Six," by Eugene M Camp, tells how some children raised money for the Ohio Valley flood sufferers, and how the money, was applied by the Red Cross Society. "A Japanese Lullaby Song," by A. V. R. Eastlake, tells how they manage babies in Japan, and gives a native cradle-song, with music, and an English version. Mary E. Vandyne, in "Aimee," tells a thrilling story of two young girls who were shut into a ruined villa by the earthquake at Nice.

IN BRIEF.

It would require 700,000,000 men to do the work that is done by machinery in Great Britain alone—more than there are in all the world.

There is in Germany a society numbering 4,500 members, for the substitution of English letters in place of the German in printing. The reform is growing so fast that out of 6,913 scientific and industrial books published in Germany in 1886, 5,316 were printed in English type. The same thing is occurring in Japan.

Assheton Smith has planted the side of a mountain on his estate at Llanddelnolen, Wales, with forest trees so arranged as to display the words, "Jubilee, 1887," in letters 200 feet long by 25 feet wide, to all the surrounding country. The letters are worked in trees of light colored foliage planted amid others forming a dark background, and 650,000 have been used in the undertaking.

During the last ten years the climate of Egypt has wonderfully changed, and it now rains there during the winter months as much as anywhere else. Through all history, and up to 1878, rain was unknown and the farmers were dependent on irrigation from the Nile for their crops. What has caused the change no one knows, but it may surely be a taken to us that God's purposes are fulfilling.

Rev. Dr. W. C. Winslow, of Boston, is eagerly seeking for funds with which the work of exploration at Bubastis, Egypt, may be prosecuted. Discoveries of the greatest importance have recently been made, among others a statue which authorities at Boulak pronounce to be of Joseph's Pharaoh. Thousands of people from Cairo have visited the site. Dr. Winslow writes that "without a cent of endowment we must beg or stop work."

Walter H. Lapham, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has completed what he claims is the smallest engine ever made. It is modeled after the Cedar Rapids high speed engine. The boiler is upright, has a safety valve, water gauge, pumps, etc. It will fit on top of a common lead pencil. In height it is less than three-eigths of an inch, and can be covered by a 38 calibre cartridge. Two drops of water fill the boiler. The length of stroke of the engine is one thirty-second of an inch. It weighs 15 grains.

Mr. Claus Spreckels, in speaking of the sugar industry, said there were several large refineries outside the trust. Among them are the California sugar refinery of San Francisco, with a daily capacity of 1,200,000 pounds; the Harrison & Frazier, with about 1,500,000; E. C. Knight & Co., with about 400,000. The new refinery in Philadelphia will produce 2,000,000 pounds a day, making 5,000,000, or 2,5000 tons a day produced by refineries out of the trust. The consumption of sugar in the United States is 1,320,000 tons a year. The refineries out of the trust will produce 780,000 tons a year. This leaves only 670,000 tons a year for the refineries in the trust. The four refineries out of the trust have a greater capacity than the twenty in the trust.

The New York World has a despatch from Kansas City which says that on a recent night "the little daughter of A. O. Smith, Deputy Postmaster at Nebraska City, Neb., was pronounced dead from typhoid pneumonia, and had all the appearance of death. The mother could not be persuaded to leave the little one. About three o'clock in the morning her screams of joy awoke the whole neighborhood, and several persons entered to find the child sitting on its mother's lap, refreshed and apparently well. It has improved steadily since then and is doing excellently now. The mother says she was weeping over the inanimate form and was kissing the cold lips in an agony of grief, when suddenly the little one opened its eyes, and the next instant threw its arms about her neck."

THE COST OF STOPPING A TRAIN.—An engineer on the Central road says (on the cost of stopping a railroad train) that "there is required about twice as much power to stop a train as to start one, the loss of power depending upon the momentum. A train going at the rate of sixty miles an hour can, by means of the Westinghouse air brake, be stopped within 120 yards from the first application of the brake. Now enough power is lost to carry this same train fifteen miles over a plane surface. First, there is the momentum acquired by the train flying at this remarkable rate of speed: then the loss of steam in applying the brakes, and lastly, but not least, the extra amount of coal to compensate for all these losses. By computation I have ascertained that every complete stop involves a cost of $1.17."

VALUE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.

"Do I believe in advertising," said a prominent lawyer a day or two ago. "Well, rather; and in the hidden advertisement more than in any other. I remember, one day, reading a very interesting story that ended in what I took to be a puff for Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. I threw down the paper in a rage. Not a week after that I needed some medicine of that kind, and went and bought those same little pills." "Did I find them good? Why, yes, the best thing of the kind I ever saw, but that has nothing to do with the first question, and I only mention the joke on myself to show that advertising does pay."

Fortify the system by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla against the diseases peculiar to hot weather. This medicine induces a healthy action of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, causing them to prevent the accumulation of the poisons which produce disease.

In every community there are a number of men whose whole time is not occupied, such as teachers, ministers, farmers' sons and others. To these classes especially we would say, if you wish to make several hundred dollars during the next few months, write at once to B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., and they will show you how to do it.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

REV. MATTHEW L. R. PERRINE, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesee M. E Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1888.

NEW YORK PROHIBITIONISTS. — Our excellent brother, F. W. Capwell, who is well known to every reader of the Cynosure, gives us a sad account of the Prohibition party in the State of New York. It has held a meeting lately at Syracuse, which Mr. Capwell omitted other important meetings and a trip West that he might attend, and do what he could to promote. A rumor reaches us that in the nomination for Governor the secretists lay back while two candidates were voted for, and at the eleventh hour sprung "a dark horse" on the convention and nominated for Governor a professed Masonic lecturer and founder of Masonic lodges! If these facts turn out to be so, there should be an American convention called and an anti-secret candidate put in the field forthwith. If possible, put forward a man who will stump the State. Raise a campaign fund and get W. B. Stoddard to turn in and help run this high priest of heathenism so low that he will be so unavailable that no Prohibitionist, not even those professed Prohibitionists who belong to the temperance lodges, will ever think of nominating him or any representative of secret party scoundrelism again. The mass of New York Prohibitionists are the children and grandchildren of the followers of W. H. Seward, who knew Morgan and

"The deep damnation of his taking off!"

We give no names till we hear from Mr. Capwell and learn the precise facts.

"DO FISK AND BROOKS FILL THE BILL? meet the qualifications found in Ex. 18: 21? If so, let us vote for them; if not, excuse me," writes Mr. McKelvey, of West Virginia. The text cited requires for rulers "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness," and if Bro. McKelvey means to ask whether Fisk and Brooks are perfect, we cannot say they are. If we vote for human beings, we must vote as Thaddeus Stevens said he voted for an imperfect Greenback bill, "Because I live among men, and not among angels."

The Cynosure votes for Fisk and Brooks on two grounds:

1. They are the best men we know of and can possibly get.

2. Voting for them will do most for our country and cause. Such is our estimate of Gen. Fisk that if the Cynosure had absolute permission and power to pick and put a man into the Presidency of the United States, we should select him. Our reasons will be found in the sketch of his life.

Mr. Brooks is a Southerner—was raised by a Negro nurse. When he grew up he joined the lodge, which leaves a sediment of evil in a man's nature, which only the blood of Christ can wash out. But "years ago" he "demitted," and writes that he is "not now a member." A man who can say this sincerely, as Mr. Brooks evidently does, is no ordinary man. His record against the liquor crime is magnificent. We vote for him.

DEAD FLIES IN GOOD OINTMENT.—As dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savor, so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honor.—Eccl. 10: 1. A stationary, unaggressive religion, or an army which makes no advances, will not be molested or assailed. The world accommodates itself to whatever truth is once established. There is no cross in professing it, and no established evils are disturbed by it. But the moment an established evil is assailed the rulers of the realm of darkness insert themselves into, and seek to spoil the movement, as the Phillipian damsel who, though inhabited by a demon, joined in the revivals produced by the preaching of Paul and Silas.

So with modern faith healing. The system of medicine was of pagan derivation; and it still retains a tinge from the complexion of its origin. The sick room is the home of superstition, whence the physician is often a more important personage than Christ. As Christ's coming draws near, the minds of men are turning toward the healings recorded in the Bible, and to God, the source of all healing of body and soul; and Satan is ready with his dead flies; as, 1. He makes the healer to be regarded as a wonder-worker or magician. 2. He casts contempt on the use of means. 3. And thus brings contempt on a most needed and important reform, and sends men to nostrums for healing instead of sending them to Christ.

CLINTON BOWEN FISK.

Once in an age there appears such a man as this General Fisk. He is pre-eminently sui generis. He is totally unlike Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Benton, Sumner, Chase or Stevens; yet he has filled more public stations than either of them, and distinguished himself in all of them. He was born in the woods of Michigan, or carried there a babe. Left a half-orphan by the death of his father; bound out at nine years old; trained a coon, sold him to a circus and bought books with the money; studied Latin at ten, in a town where no one knew what Latin was; made his way to Albion College; lost the use of his eyes by night study, and his heart in love with a merchant's daughter; became her husband and her father's business partner, and accumulated property; joined a half-rebel business company in St. Louis; split the company and cast out the rebels; enlisted in the first Union regiment and aided Gen. Lyon in seizing a secret camp of rebels, and saving St. Louis to the Union cause; became a Brigadier General; beat back Price and saved the capital of Missouri; was under Grant at Vicksburg, and was retained by President Lincoln after the war at the head of the Freedmen's Bureau; and now lives at Seabright, N. J., in ease and elegance, hale and hearty, sixty years old, and running on the Prohibition ticket for President of the United States.

This is something of a diagram. But it has not touched the keynote, or rather the driving-wheel of his remarkable character. At ten years old young Fisk joined the Methodist Episcopal church. Whether, as was John the Baptist, he was converted, or regenerated before he was born; whether he was transformed by the power of God in the prayers of a godly mother, or drank inspiration from "the still and solemn woods," his biographers do not tell us. Perhaps they do not themselves know, as Nicodemus did not, what a change of heart, or a new birth, means. But whether he became, as Saul did, suddenly and totally different from his former self; or, as Samuel was as different from other babes on the breast, as he was in his whole after-life from other men, Gen. Fisk's life bears no bad likeness to the statesman prophet—at once amiable and decided, capable and conscientious; like Samuel he filled office with impartial justice; and like the gentlemanly Abraham, he raised, trained and commanded, and fought his own brigade in a war which, like those of old, was a "battle of kings". For every crowned tyrant stood behind American slavery in our late great war.

From his conversion to Christ Gen. Fisk has been what he professed to be, a Christian. In the war, he sat down and sang hymns by dying comrades. On taking command of his first regiment, in a vein of pleasantry, he copied the pious commodore who bound his command to let him do all the swearing, and his soldiers are said to have kept their unanimous pledge. Like Cromwell he held prayer-meetings with his troops, and prayers and hymns kept swearing and blasphemy out of the ranks. Lincoln loved him. And when Confederate leaders were waiting to negotiate peace, and the train locomotive was snorting to take Mr. Lincoln to their meeting, Gen. Fisk took a poor old man to the President, whose son was sentenced to be shot. Lincoln, on his sole confidence in Fisk's good judgment and patriotism, wrote across the paper without stopping to read it: "Let the boy be pardoned. A. LINCOLN."

An Abolitionist from his birth, at twelve years of age in 1840, while his boy companions were flaunting beautiful flags with the campaign Whig legend,

"For Tippecanoe,
And Tyler too," young Fisk appeared among them with a cotton cloth flag sewed to his mother's broom-stick, and bearing the names printed on it with tar-wheel grease, floating the names

BIRNEY AND MORRIS.

His proud companions took it as an insult and ordered the Abolition flag down. A fight ensued in which Fisk whipped his antagonists, and proudly kept his flag afloat. Who then could have dreamed that that boy would go to the Abolition President Lincoln, with stars on his shoulder-straps, and procure the pardon of unfortunate boy deserters?

We are not writing a biography, but a sketch. We advise all to get and read the biographical sketches given by the New York Voice or other publishers. The point we make is this: when the man who is described above, after reading two of his speeches against secret societies, and particularly against the Good Templars, says to the senior editor of the Cynosure, "I am in entire accord with you in the sentiments of those speeches. I have neither time nor money to spend on their trifling;" we shall believe him, and the Cynosure will support him; and advise every American who has a vote next November, to cast that vote for Fisk and Brooks. The history of Mr. Brooks, though as opposite to that of Gen. Fisk as the complexion of the Negroes among whom he was born and raised is to that of the whites, is yet an honest history. And when they both give to the Cynosure a civil, gentlemanly answer declaring, in the teeth of the lodges looking on, that they are not Freemasons, we believe them and hope to vote for them, and pray to God for their election.

Mr. Walter R. Mills was asked by a friend who is a gentleman if he was a Mason. The little "great" man turned away with dignified silence, and refused to answer him! Is he ashamed of his secret stripping and swearing? or did his mother fail to teach him good manners? The time will come when such tares will be weeded out of the Prohibition party. And the host of noble women starting from Ohio, who are the soul of the Prohibition party; who did not sneak into garrets to start their crusade against liquor, but boldly met the rum-fiend in the open air, and with their tearful, sweet faces lifted to God, have called down the great shower of Prohibition now watering the whole United States,—these vessels of reform, and ministering spirits sent of God to lift the great burden of woe from the men, but especially from the women of America, will yet see and insist that light is better than darkness and purer; and that Christ's example is not to be contemned and trampled on by the ministers of reform.

THE ORANGEMEN SHUT OUT.

We shall speak more hopefully of the Chicago churches since B. P. Reynolds, the drunken Masonic head of the Orangemen of Chicago, found he could not march his Sabbath-breaking lodge over the threshold of the South Congregational church. A year or two since they paraded the streets from their lodge-room to Railroad Chapel, where Rev. Charles P. Morton, the pastor, preached for them. This year they seem to have understood that Rev. Dr. E. F. Williams would do them honor without regard to the sacred character of the day, or the place of divine worship. They gathered in their hall to begin their tramp through the Sabbath quiet, but were met by a note that dashed their hopes. There are members of Dr. Williams' church who are Christians with consciences and some jealousy for the honor of their Lord Jesus Christ, whose whole life and teaching were against the lodge. They objected to opening their house to a secret society. Thank God for such Congregationalists! "A number of the leading members," says one of the reports, "declared themselves uncompromisingly against allowing the church to be used for the purpose." Let Dr. Williams also thank God for such members. They prove that his years of preaching to them have not been in vain. He will find them safe advisers about accepting lodge invitations. Of course there was a howl set up by the would-be heroes of Boyne Water, and by strenuous efforts they secured the promise of the Oakland avenue M. E. church for next Sabbath, and Rev. J. M. Caldwell has agreed, it is said, to give them a sarmon. We hope there is some mistake in this report, for no Christian pastor of Chicago can afford to compromise his holy calling by giving countenance to an organization with the record of the Orangemen.

HOW STAND THE CANDIDATES?

THE NATIONAL NOMINEES.

The Republican papers speak of General Harrison and the "Grand Army" badge which he wears, advertising him as a member of the G. A. R. and giving the hint to the order to do their best for their brother candidate.

Alson J. Streeter, the candidate of the Union Labor party, lives at New Windsor in Henry county, Ill., where he owns a farm. His chief preparation for the office for which he is nominated has been in the Illinois legislature. He is, says his biography, "a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Congregational church."

STATE CANDIDATES.

Several of the Illinois candidates have responded to the inquiries of the American Anti-secrecy League. L. B. Ray, of Morris, Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor, who presents a very favorable contrast to the present Grand Lodge incumbent, writes:

"I never belonged to but one secret society of any kind, and that was the 'Independent Order of Good Templars,' and that was some thirty years since. I thought at the time that we were doing some good, but the order was short-lived—here, at least."

J. Ross Hanna, Secretary of the Weir Plow Co. of Monmouth, and Prohibition candidate for Secretary of State, sends a manly note which proves him to be in an important respect well qualified for the office:

"I am not a member of any secret society, and while I do not question the sincerity of motive actuating my friends and neighbors who have connected themselves with secret orders I have never felt any inclination or desire to unite with any such organization."

F. E. Andrews, Prohibition candidate for Attorney General, lives at Sterling. His reply might have been framed by the Delphic oracle, but it must be especially noted that he has convictions on secretism which compels him to draw a line on some of the lodges. A man with conscientious scruples against some orders is quite likely, on more careful inquiry, to find himself opposed to them all.

"I belong to no organization that requires or implies any special obligation to a portion of the people as against the balance. My opinion as to the character and usefulness of secret societies in general would be of no benefit to your society, for the reason that I am not familiar with the workings of any society of the kind, except one or two whose object is entirely charitable and philanthropical, never having united with any having any other object in view, my refusal to unite with them being a matter of conscience with me."

Other responses which are yet more encouraging, we must retain for future publication.

—Rev. Wm. F. Davis orders from Suffolk Jail, Charles street, Boston, the Cynosure to be sent to his uncle whose father was a citizen of Attica, N. Y., and was a member of the grand jury which indicated the abduction of William Morgan.

—Monday afternoon a letter from Rev. M. A. Gault, who preached at Lake Bluff last Sabbath, came in so late as to fill us with regret that our readers could not have it immediately. It will be read with double interest in connection with some report of progress which we may be able to present in anti-secret prohibition.

—Secretary Stoddard wrote that he should leave Washington for New England early this week to get the machinery in order again for that part of the country with our devoted and talented Miss Flagg in position to control it. We shall all pray earnestly for the success of this effort. The summer work planned for Pres. J. Blanchard in Vermont is growing in magnitude and importance.

—Word from the student colporteurs now visiting parts of Illinois and Indiana is cheering. Brethren Fifield and Park have visited the towns from Elgin to Harvard in Illinois, and will this week journey toward Beloit and Rockford. Brethren Johnston and Shaw held meetings Friday and Saturday evenings in Fairmount, Indiana, where they find a warm friend in J. P. Winslow.

—G. M. Williams of Attleboro, Mass., writes that he saw in these columns lately a statement that the American party had started a new paper called America. Mr. Williams is mistaken. America is a Chicago literary journal. The principles of the American party are urged by a number of papers, but the Cynosure aims to be their most ardent advocate.

—A brief note from Bro. I. R. B. Arnold and his family, who are laboring with the "big tent" in Northern Illinois, says that at Sterling, on the Rock river west of Chicago, a large audience was present on June 29 to hear how Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship are like old Baal worship. Respectful attention was given to the argument and the large pictures in which this story of indentity is wonderfully told. Bro. Arnold also struck hard upon the saloon business, and was endorsed by the Baptist pastor who was present.

—On Friday, July 13, there will be at Mitchell, Dakota, a convention for all interested in trying to secure a better observance of Sunday throughout the territory. A territorial association will be organized and arrangements made to petition the Legislature for better and more stringent laws.

—The Centennial Exposition of the Ohio Valley and Central States, which opened in Cincinnati July 4, besides the negative merit of deciding to close the Exposition on Sunday, have decided to show their respect for the Christian religion in a more positive manner. There will be a department illustrating the growth and methods of work of the various Christian colleges and societies in the Northwest, and a leading place will be given to church publication societies. Bishop I. W. Joyce, of the M. E. church, is in charge of the department.

WASHINGTON LETTERS.

The craft are busily at work here in Washington, and when occasion offers they come to the front. On the evening of July 3 twenty-one members of the Grand Lodge appeared in full regalia and laid the corner-stone of a mission chapel, under the auspices of the Fifth Baptist church of this city. Leaving the street car a block and a half from the site of their "labors," they formed in line, headed by Grand Master Lee, supported by Grand Chaplin Smith, the Grand Senior and Junior Wardens and other Grand officers, each bearing the jewel of his office, and marched to the place of their great endeavor. I fell into line, and was fortunate enough in securing standing room where I could see and hear what transpired.

After a brief delay for the adjustment of minor details the tapers were lighted, the two pillars, Jachin and Boaz, put in position, and the several "Grands" took their stations. The Grand Chaplain said a prayer; the Grand Wardens applied the implements of their office to the stone; the Grand Secretary made the deposits; the Grand Master poured the corn, wine and oil, and made a little speech in which he eulogized the craft, and wished all manner of blessings and benefactions upon the workmen, the people, and the undertaking generally. The "cowans" were called out to endorse the performance. The first to speak was Dr. S.H. Green, of Calvary Baptist church, who spoke briefly and very appropriately of the work done by his denomination in the city, and of the history and needs of the mission. Rev. Charles Stakely, of the First Baptist church, followed the same general strain, when pastor Meader, of the Fifth Baptist church, pronounced the benediction, mentioning "Father, Son and Holy Ghost." I noted carefully, and this was the first and only allusion to Christ, and if the studied omission of all recognition of the Divine Redeemer from religious services, then up to the very last clause the ceremonies were profane and pagan. I do not say that Dr. Green and the pastor of the first church intended to cast a reproach upon their Master, or to deny him before men, but the words of our Saviour came vividly to my mind, "Whosoever denieth me before men, him will I deny before the angels of God," and "Whosoever confesseth me before men, him will I confess before my Father and the holy angels." I thought the dear brethren had permitted a very fitting opportunity to confess Christ "before men" to pass unimproved.

I stepped to pastor Meader, and extending my hand said, "My brother, I don't know your name, but I want to shake hands with the man who has the courage to honor my Saviour by the reverent mention of his name in such a crowd as this." He asked my name; I gave him my card, and he said he would call at 215. The "Fraters" standing by looked somewhat indignant, but I felt that it was a fitting time to speak against the iniquitous system. I said to Dr. Green that I could not understand how that Christless performance in any way contributed to the object for which a Christian church is built, and I thought the piety of any church must be at a very low ebb when they had to invoke the aid of such a crew to perform religious rites at the laying of a corner-stone. His reply was, "Men differ about that."

Returning to 215 I found the brethren and sisters gathering for our evening prayer-meeting, and when I gave a report of what I had just witnessed, the matter was freely considered, and the remarks of Bro. Pease, who with his wife was present from Washington Territory, were of special interest. This is becoming known as the rallying point for radical reformers, and one brother said to me, as I was talking to individuals and handing out tracts on the platform at the corner stone laying, "The Masons of Washington know you."

I replied, "So mote it be. I hope they will call at my office." The leaven is at work, and although the apparent results are not great, every day brings proof of the favor of God upon our work.

I feel that the prayers of God's people are offered in our behalf, and that enlargement will come in his good time. The attention and sympathies of many are drawn to this point and to our work by Mrs. Stoddard's successful efforts in an industrial and Sabbath-school for the neglected colored children, and we were encouraged last evening by the first special donation of $5 to this special work by an old and honored citizen of this city.

J. P. STODDARD.

[From our Occasional Correspondent.]

July 6th, 1888.

Although the Fourth of July is recognized as the most time-honored legal holiday on the national calendar, there are likely to be but few celebrations of it of the old-fashioned sort that our fathers and grandfathers looked upon as a solemn duty. Since the signing of the Declaration of Independence, many new and startling episodes have intervened, of which the recollection is still vivid, and in which interest is comparatively fresh and absorbing, and Memorial days, Decoration days, and Gettysburg days have unfortunately taken the place, in great measure, of Bunker Hill, Bennington and Independence days. The effect of this transfer of loyalty to great principles to a kind of hero-worship is already becoming unhappily manifest in many ways.

The Cabinet was in high favor last week in scholastic circles. The President was elected a member of the University of Virginia Alumni Association; Secretaries Bayard and Vilas were honored guests and responded to toasts at the same place; Secretary Fairchild became a Harvard LL.D.; Secretary Whitney became a Yale LL.D.; Secretary Endicott was elected President of Harvard Alumni Association, where his son took an A. M., and the only members who escaped were Postmaster General Dickinson and Attorney-General Garland.

In his latest veto of a bill to give a pension to a soldier who was injured in a street brawl, President Cleveland made the following comment: "I believe that if the veterans of the war knew all that was going on in the way of granting pensions by private bills, they would be more disgusted than any other class of citizens."

In Washington, of course, one hears various opinions of the Presidential ticket, according to the political complexion of the Congressman or politician who utters them. It is not believed here, however, that this is going to be a noisy campaign. There is no evidence, as yet, that the people are getting excited, nor is the issue of a character to excite intense feeling. It does not appeal so much to the passions as to the reasoning powers of men. And that is why it is thought that there will be less yelling and burning of powder, and a greater amount of reading, talking and thinking. Yesterday an unprejudiced "looker on in Venice" remarked: "It is a national benefaction that we have all the requisite conditions for a dignified, decent canvass. All the candidates," continued he, "are fit for the places for which they have been named. Each of the candidates for Vice President is fit for the higher place to which he may be called. Therefore, there will be no excuse and very little charity for mud slingers, for the personal characteristics of candidates may be dismissed when the real business of the season begins."

During the tariff discussion the other day, the venerable Mr. Kelly, of Pennsylvania, rose and said he had a proposition to make, which he thought would be acceptable to both the House and the country. The Mills bill had received the approval of the St. Louis Convention and the condemnation of the Chicago Convention. The action of the House in urging the bill forward had been approved at St. Louis, and the course of the Republican minority, in contesting every modification which its judgment could not approve, had been cordially endorsed at Chicago. He then suggested that the Mills bill should be laid over until the next session, with the understanding that if, at the November election, it should be approved by the people, the Republicans would withdraw their opposition; and if, on the other hand, it should be condemned unmistakably, the bill would be no further pressed.

Every visitor to Washington hopes that Congress will make provision for running the elevator in the Washington monument. Thousands of Americans who have visited the city in the last six months have burned with the laudable ambition to mount to the top of the highest structure in the world and to inspect therefrom the capital and the most beautiful city of the nation, only to be disappointed. They were not even granted permission to climb the stairway because it is not practicable yet to protect the donated stones, which line the interior of the great shaft, from the depredations of the vandals whose power and disposition to injure have already been experienced. *

I am better pleased with the Cynosure than any paper I ever read. I will certainly renew my subscription.—MRS. M. CARLE.

I am perfectly satisfied with the Cynosure. Its principles are good. We are no secretists. When my year is out I expect to renew.—MRS. C. WHITE.

I like the Cynosure. You can take me down for 1 again. It is very interesting.—REV. J. ACOX.

I like the principles of your paper and will renew.—MRS. H. L. STUART.

THE HOME.

TALKS WITH JESUS.

A little talk with Jesus, how it smoothes the rugged road,
How it seems to help me onward when I sink beneath my load;
When my heart is crushed with sorrow, and my eyes with tears are dim
There is naught can yield me comfort like a little talk with Him.

I tell Him I am weary, that I fain would be at rest,
That I'm daily, hourly longing to repose upon His breast;
And He answers me so sweetly, in the tenderest tones of love,
"I'm coming soon to take thee to my happy home above."

Ah! that is what I'm wanting, his lovely face to see,
And I'm not ashamed to say it, I know He's wanting me.
He gave His life a ransom to make me all His own,
He'll ne'er forget His love for me, His dearly purchased one.

I often get impatient, and mourn His long delay,
For I never can be happy while He remains away.
The more I come to know Him and all His grace explore,
It sets me ever longing to know Him more and more.

The way seems long and weary to yonder far-off clime,
But a little talk with Jesus doth while away the time;
We shall not long be parted, I know He'll quickly come,
And we shall dwell together in his happy, happy home.

So I'll wait a little longer, till His appointed time,
And all along the upward path my pilgrim feet shall climb;
There in my Father's dwelling, where the many mansions be,
I shall sweetly talk with Jesus and He will talk with me.

A VIRGINIA REMINISCENCE.

TWO PAGES FROM MY DIARY.

BY MRS. EMMELINE R. STERLING.

"Are you Miss M—— from Massachusetts, who is expected at the G—— Plantation to teach?"

"I suppose I am," responded the person addressed.

"Then you are to stay here to-night," said the first speaker; adding, "The bridge is gone off!"

Miss M. had just alighted from a crowded coach which had been poaching since two o'clock that morning through the heavy red clay of that country. She was weary and dispirited, and in no condition to acquiesce cheerfully in this quarantine arrangement at the Wayside Inn! Furtively scanning the surroundings, she said mentally, "Oh, I cannot stay here to-night!" Suiting word to the wish, she said to the host, "Is there no way I can get to the plantation to-night?"

"No—well, yes—there is a way if you can ride horseback to the river and are not afraid to cross it on a little boat. But Miss, the river is very high, mebbee you'll be afraid! The G.'s told me about your coming and arranged for you to stay here till to-morrow morning, and I was to send them word and they to send a carriage round by C— where there is another bridge. But as you are so anxious to git to the Big House to-night, I'll send word by the field hands, and we'll see what can be done."

Miss M. blessed the planter, in the depths of her soul, and sat down to wait, saying, "Thank you. I'll go to-night if possible." In the course of a couple of hours, a bright quadroon boy drew up to the plantation inn on horse-back, leading the second horse. William's introduction of himself and his embassy was concise and to the point—"Master away, and missus done sent me!"

"All right, William," said the girl, "we'll go."

The sun was sinking. Miles lay between the tired traveler and the G. plantation. No time must be lost. The heavy rains had rendered the roads well-nigh impassable, but when seated in her saddle and triumphantly turned plantationward, the rider realized her terra firma basis, even with the bridgeless river before her, more than during the tedious hours of sinking to the hubs in the red clay, through which the lumbering coach had made slow and painful progress for the last twelve hours. Miss M. had little equestrian accomplishment, but she knew the use of the saddle-bow, the stirrup and the bridle.

The spanless river reached, she dismounted, and seating herself in the little boat, was ferried safely over by two slaves of the G. plantation. The turbid Appomattox whirling on might have caused hearts less resolute than hers to quake, but she of good New England stock, saw nothing to fear, and thought only of her new home and the unwonted relations and novelties of plantation life so soon to dawn upon her.

Two decades had not yet woven their experiences into the life map of the girl, but already she had learned the meaning of self help. Already the years that had come to her had brought her some wisdom.

Re-seated in her saddle, the well-trained horses strode away with their riders to the plantation, which was reached just at the going down of the sun, on the afternoon of the second spring month of the year 1836. William, the family carriage driver, acquitted himself admirably as guide through the mud of the tobacco fields, and rode up to the big house, delivering his charge to his "missus," who received the novitiate with true Virginian hospitality.

Our little sketch opens at a period just subsequent to a most startling episode in the history of American slavery,—one so gigantic in plan and sanguinary in detail as to be regarded an important factor in the problem to be wrought out in the space of less than three decades of our American history. Indeed, so directly did the Nat Turner insurrection lead to debate in the Virginia legislature and the unrestrained expression of thought on both sides of this question—the holding of man as property—that, even then, "coming events were casting their shadows before." Even then the anti-slavery sentiment was as a "pillar of a cloud by day and of fire by night," leading on the marshalling hosts of the North.

Nat Turner was a slave in Southampton, Va. He conceived the idea that he was a "prophet of the Lord", and as such delegated to a certain work, guided by Divine inspiration. In his confession he said, "On the 12th day of May, 1828, I heard a loud noise in the heavens and the Spirit instantly appeared to me and said, 'The serpent was loosed and Christ had laid down the yoke he had borne for the sins of men; and that I should take it on and fight against the serpent, for the time was fast approaching when the first should be last, and the last first, and by signs in the heavens it would be made known to me when I should commence the great work; and until the first sign should appear I should conceal it from the knowledge of men.'"

On the appearance of the sign, which was to be the eclipse of the sun in February, 1831, he was to arise "and slay his enemies."

He states that immediately on the appearance of that sign, he communicated the great work he had to do to his associates. The 4th of July was fixed upon as the day for rising, but his mind was so affected by the magnitude of the undertaking that he fell sick and the time passed. "The sign appeared again," he said, and he determined to wait no longer.

The insurrection commenced on the night of the 21st of August by the massacre of his master's family. Turner and his associates went from house to house, massacring the whites till the number of his followers was increased to fifty or more, all mounted and armed with guns, axes, swords and clubs.

The country was soon aroused, and the assailants were met, fired upon and dispersed. Turner, after concealing himself for some weeks, was discovered, tried and executed in November of that year.

The Virginia legislature met early in December of the same year. Gov. Floyd emphasized the "rebellion" in his message, and stated that a band of slaves, seventy in number, had put to death sixty-one persons. He also stated that there was reason to believe that the plans of treason, insurrection and murder had been designed and matured by unrestrained fanatics in the neighboring States, and urged a revision of the laws, to preserve greater subordination.

This legislature caused an upheaval of sentiment, probably long entertained by members who had regarded "slavery as a curse." The substratum of thought and feeling came to the surface, provoking heated debates. One member maintained that slavery was a mildew which had blighted every region it had touched upon since the foundation of the world Mr. Faulkner, minister to France, said, "If slavery can be eradicated, in God's name let us get rid of it!" Another member declared "that he should look upon the day on which the deliverance from the burdens of slavery should be consummated as the most glorious in the annals of Virginia."

These men, says the historian, "spoke and wrote of what they knew. Seldom if ever, have the evils of slavery been more graphically, not to say terrifically portrayed, than in this remarkable debate and discussion. This memorable session was as the handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountain, whose fruit was destined to shake like Lebanon."

Miss M. came to the G. plantation just in time to see greater restrictions laid upon the bondman. Master was more stern; mistress more exacting; overseer more cruel. In short, all the movements of the slave were looked upon suspiciously. A black man, woman or child, might not go from one plantation to another without a "pass," endorsed by the name of the owner. A Negro arrested on suspicion of being a slave was thrust into prison, and if not claimed after a certain time, was sold as a slave.

None, perhaps, felt this surveillance more than little Andrew, a quadroon boy on the G. plantation, a lad of twelve years, who served as waiter at his master's table. Andrew knew he was a slave, but why, he had no conception. He knew he must not learn to read, but this did not extinguish the fire which was burning in his breast for knowledge? Andrew knew that master's children were his superiors, but had never known the reason why. Andrew knew that the school-room was a spot not to be invaded by him; the spelling book a thing he might not touch; and yet calling to his aid little Martha as tutoress, from time to time, he had acquired sufficient knowledge of the spelling book to read in words of two syllables!

Alas! however, for poor little Andrew and his literary aspirations. It was a memorable day when mistress found teacher and pupil in their retiracy with spelling book between them. Words fail to describe the irate mistress, the crest-fallen, disappointed pupil, wincing under the little whip laid over his shoulders; and sobbing little Martha, who had thought it "no harm to just teach Andrew his letters." Poor little Andrew fell from a tree not long after this in restoring a fledgling robin to the mother nest. His leg was broken by the fall. Then came weeks of painfulness on the little couch in "mammy's" house; she sitting by making coarse suits for the field hands.

When Miss M. left the plantation Andrew was walking, but with one leg shortened by the accident; and the master was calculating how much less Andrew would sell for than before his injury.

The thought has often come to us in the new days of freedom, Where is the boy of the plantation? Is he a man of this day, having realized the fruition of his hopes? Did Andrew ever know the luxury of reading?

Let us turn from the memories of the past to the brighter outlook of the present. Let us turn from the sighs and tears of sundered families, and from the groans of the unpaid slave, to the beginning of happy homes in that once slave-cursed territory. Let oblivion go over the past, nor memory search for record of man's injustice to his fellow man. Tell us not, old ocean, of the unmitigated horrors of the "middle passage;" nor whisper in our unwilling ears, ye soft breezes, the tale of the auction block and the "coffle gang." Scenes like these we would forget. Let it not be remembered that, in this boasted model Republic, a Chief Justice once decided that the "black man had no rights which the white man was bound to respect!" Tell it not to our children, nor they to later generations, that where float the stars and stripes at our capital a law was ever enacted that called for the rendition of a run-a-way slave to his master. Oh, tell it not, ye of this liberty-loving country, that trained bloodhounds were ever put upon the track of the defenseless Negro!

Very joyfully turn we from this picture to the efforts now being made for the dark population of the South. The page is ready and the pen already dipped to record the supplement to our American history—the substitution of right for wrong; minds elevated; intellects enlarged; characters molded; aspirations broadened; influence deepened, and souls saved. Already fruitage is coming to the South in an improved civilization from the schools, the universities and the churches; from temperance organizations, from Young Men's Christian Associations, from girl's industrial sewing circles, from young women's model-home societies, and from Sunday-schools. And when we think of the bright present, and of the shaded past, we say, "What hath God wrought?"

AUNT MARGARET'S TEXTS.

"Your stock of Bible texts must be very small, Ralph," said Aunt Margaret, as he joined her in the garden, after breakfast.

"What makes you think so, auntie?" he asked.

"Just this, Ralph. I've been here almost a week, and your breakfast text has been the same every morning but one."

"Is that so, auntie? Well, perhaps you're right. I've been in such a hurry lately to get out here mornings, before breakfast, and see whether my seeds are sprouting yet, that I haven't stopped to hunt one up, and so I've had to say the first one that came handy."

"I thought so, Ralph, and I've been wondering—"

"Say, Ralph," shouted Ben Hanson, rushing in through the garden gate, "are you going to see the phonograph this evening? I want to go the worst kind, but suppose I can't. They say the man makes it say such funny things."

"I know it," said Ralph, "and I asked father to let me go, but he said he couldn't spare the money."

"Oh, dear! Well, I must be going along, I suppose," said Ben. "I've got to do two errands before school begins.

"Ralph," said Aunt Margaret, when Ben had gone, "I'll give you the money to go to-night, and enough to take any three boys whom you may choose."

"Hurrah for you, Aunt Margaret! I say, you're awful good to a fellow."

"Wait a minute, Ralph. There's one condition. It is that you'll let me give you a list of texts to learn, and repeat one every morning at breakfast."

"Oh! yes, indeed. That's easy," Ralph replied.

"Tell your aunt she's a brick, Ralph," said Ben, as they left the Y. M. C. A. Hall, where the phonograph had been on exhibition. "I mean," he said, correcting himself, "tell her we're mighty obliged to her for letting us go. Wasn't it cute, though, to hear it crow like a rooster, and mew and bark like cats and dogs?"

"I think the funniest was, 'Mary had a little lamb.' How it did talk through its nose, though!" said Stephen.

"Oh! but the queerest of all was, 'Peter Pecker picked a pike of pickled Peters,'" said Sam. Don't you remember how everybody laughed?"

"That's so," said Ralph. "But do you believe that if the machine should stand just so a thousand years it would say those very things over again? I don't."

"That's what he said, any way," said Sam.

"Well, I guess I shouldn't like to have such a machine round all the time, then," Ralph added.

"Guess you're afraid 'twould tell too many tales about your slang, Ralph. Is that it?" asked Ben's big brother, lifting Ralph up by his elbows and setting him down upon his own door-step.

"That's none of your business," Ralph replied, going in through the door, and slamming it behind him. Now this was a very tender subject with Ralph. He had often been corrected by his parents, and sometimes he had tried, in a kind of half-hearted way, to leave it off. But the habit seemed to cling to him, and to grow stronger than weaker, as every habit does when indulged. But now what the phonograph man had said kept coming to his mind over and over again. The truth is, he had heard a lady behind him remark:

"I suppose the Judgment Day will do that for us—bring to mind all our wrong words, especially."

"Now for Aunt Margaret's texts," said Ralph to himself the next morning. Then he read:

"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord."

"I wonder if she did it on purpose," he thought. "Let's see if they are all about words." And turning to the references in his Bible, one after another, he read:

"The words of the pure are pleasant words."

"The words of a wise man's mouth are gracious."

"Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter anything before God: for God is in heaven and thou upon earth; therefore, let thy words be few."

"A fool's voice is known by the multitude of words."

"Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of Judgment."

"There is not a word in my tounge, but lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether."

"If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man."

"Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Ralph's face had grown very thoughtful as he read them one by one.

"I declare, I didn't know the Bible had so much about it," he said to himself. "I wish I knew how to leave off slang, any way; yes, I do." And then as he turned once more to the first text upon the list, it must have been the Holy Spirit that led him to drop upon his knees beside his bed, and pray with all his heart:

"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord."—Lilian Payson, in S. S. Times.

KEEN-EYED TRAVELERS.

If there is one passage in the letters of American travelers in Europe more tiresome than another it is this: "During our six weeks' stay in Paris we did not see a single drunken person." Then they travel through Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, and all France, and still they do not see a drunken person. They attribute the sobriety of the people to the fact that everybody drinks wine and beer; drinks it all the time, and lots of it, with no high license and prohibition nonsense to bother them; consequently they never get drunk.

Well, now, the only inference one can draw from these remarkable letters is either that the writers were themselves blind drunk all the time that they were in Paris, or that the Parisian drunkard is a most successful hider. Because, while our travelers last year did not see one instance of drunkenness in Paris, the official police records state that the police of Paris saw and arrested, on an average, 150 people every day between January 1 and April 30, for being drunk on the streets. So many drunkards are not arrested in New York, and yet these travelers of ours always contrast the sobriety of Europe with the excesses of America. It is just as well to bear in mind the official report while reading these letters, and perhaps if the writers drank less and thought more they would remember that official returns will not always agree with letters from the guide-book. —R. J. Burdette in Louisville News.

THE FIRST TANGLE.

Once in an eastern palace wide
A little child sat weaving.
So patiently her task she plied,
The men and women at her side
Flocking round her, almost grieving,

"How is it, little one," they said,
"You always work so cheerily?
You never seem to break your thread,
Or snarl or tangle it, instead
Of working smooth and clearly.

"Our weaving gets so worn and soiled,
Our silk so frayed and broken:
For all we've fretted, wept and toiled,
We know the lovely pattern's spoiled
Before the king has spoken."

The little child looked in their eyes
So full of care and trouble;
And pity chased the sweet surprise
That filled her own, as sometimes flies
The rainbow in a bubble.

"I only go and tell the king,"
She said, abashed and meekly;
"You know he said in everything——,"
"Why, so do we!" they cried, "we bring Him all our troubles weekly."

She turned her little head aside;
A moment let them wrangle;
"Ah, but," she softly then replied,
"I go and get the knot untied
At the first little tangle!"

Oh, little children—weavers all!
Our broidery we spangle
With many a tear that would not fall,
If on our King we would but call
At the first little tangle.

TEMPERANCE.

THE MAINE LAW STATES.

Fifteen Northern States have had prohibitory laws on the basis of the Maine law. The following is a list of these States, with a brief statement of the date at which the law was enacted and repealed:

Maine.—Prohibition was enacted in 1846, re-enacted in 1851, repealed in 1856, re-enacted in 1858, and is now in force.

Delaware.—Prohibition enacted in 1847, declared unconstitutional in 1848.

Minnesota.—Prohibition enacted in 1847, modified by various laws, or, in other words, doctored to death since that time.

Rhode Island.—Prohibition enacted in 1852, declared unconstitutional in 1853, amended in 1853 and ratified by the people, repealed in 1863, re-enacted in 1874, repealed in 1875.

Massachusetts.—Prohibition enacted in 1852, declared unconstitutional in 1853, re-enacted in 1855, repealed in 1868.

Vermont.—Prohibition enacted in 1852, law now in force.

Michigan.—Prohibition enacted in 1851, declared unconstitutional in 1854, re-enacted in 1855, repealed in 1865.

Indiana.—Prohibition enacted in 1855. In 1855 the supreme court was equally divided in regard to the constitutionality of the law, hence the law was void.

Iowa.—Prohibition enacted in 1855, repealed in 1856 by the introduction of the beer clause, re-enacted in 1884.

Nebraska.—Prohibition enacted in 1855, modified in 1880, by the introduction of high license.

New York.—Prohibition enacted in 1845, declared unconstitutional in 1856, local option enacted in 1873 and bill vetoed by Gov. Dix.

New Hampshire.—Prohibition enacted in 1855, law now in force.

Illinois.—Prohibition enacted in 1855, lost by vote of the people in 1855.

Kansas.—Prohibition enacted in 1866. Under this law license might be granted if women petitioned for it. This law was replaced by the constitutional amendment in 1880.

With one or two exceptions the States named in this list have been Republican States almost constantly since the Republican party was organized.—Lever.

ALCOHOL IN FRANCE.

The French case against alcohol closely resembles the American. It increases police expenses. In some towns in France it has made it necessary to double or triple the police force. It increases also the expenses of criminal justice. There were, between 1881 and 1885, 336,641 prosecutions for drunkenness, or an average of 67,328 a year, to say nothing of offences caused by drunkenness. It fills the hospitals and almshouses with all sorts of victims. From 1861 to 1865, for example, ten per cent of the lunatics in the department asylums were brought there by alcohol. Between 1865 and 1870, twenty per cent were brought through alcohol. In 1876–80, the number of inmates of these asylums nearly doubled; and, of these, fifteen per cent were due to alcohol. In 1881–85 the number rose from 39,822 to 51,207—more than triple the number between 1861–65; and of these 7,387 were alcoholic. And it must be remembered that the French population has been almost stationary for half a century, and that only those lunatics are charged to alcohol who have lost their faculties directly through their own drunkenness. No account is taken of those who lose it through the drunkenness of parents. In some parts of France, the wine-growing regions of the south and center, they drink hardly any spirits at all; but in the north and west they drink enormously, and are drinking more and more. If all France drank as these parts drink, France, instead of being seventh in the list of drinking nations, would probably stand at the head. Rouen is the greatest alcoholic place in the country. The average was about four gallons a head in 1884; and, to make this average, some men there must consume twelve, fifteen, or even twenty gallons of spirits per annum. There was a decree issued after the coup d'etat in 1851 forbidding the opening of drinking places (cabarets) without special police permit. This was abolished in 1880 by way of "giving republican saloons the protection to which they are entitled," as Sheridan Shook says. The effect was very remarkable. Between 1880 and 1885, the number of saloons increased by 40,000. Between 1873 and 1879, it had only increased by 8,000. The progress upward, too, is now very steady. Every year sees the opportunities of taking a "petit grog" greatly multiplied. The remedy which finds most favor in France, as in Switzerland and Sweden, is making liquor extravagantly dear, and diminishing the number of places in which it is sold.—The Nation.

"THIS TRAIN ALL RIGHT."

A west-bound train, bearing delegates to the Republican Convention, was delayed in Indiana at a small station and some of the delegates agreed to question the engineer as to his political predilections. Stepping up to him, one of them, as spokesman, asked: "If you have no objection we would like to have you tell us whether you are for Blaine or Cleveland?"

"Neither," was the reply.

"I'll bet he's for Gresham," said one.

"No."

"Alger?"

"No."

"Allison?"

"No."

"Sherman?"

"No."

Having exhausted the catalogue of available candidates, some one said, "Well, who are you for?"

With a proud glance he looked down from his cab on the group before him, and said, "Gentlemen, I am for Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, first, last and all the time."

The group moved back with a laugh that was not all a laugh; but one ventured to remark, "A Fisk man at the throttle, this train's all right!"—The Voice.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON 4. Third Quarter.—July 22.

SUBJECT.—Free Gifts for the Tabernacle.—Ex. 35: 20-29.

GOLDEN TEXT.—God loveth a cheerful giver.—2 Cor. 9:7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Willing Spirit. vs. 20-27. This was not a tax levy but a freewill offering from every one "whose heart stirred him up" to give. God has no pleasure in a gift which has its origin in any lower motive than love for him and zeal for his service. Had the children of Israel adopted the plan of many Christian churches they would have held a great fair, accompanied by a grand feast, and among other devices to obtain money and add further festivity to the occasion they would have introduced, though perhaps setting it in some out-of-the-way corner as a thing to be ashamed of, the golden calf. It is a dangerous experiment to try—to make our amusements pay for our religion. All shams and selfishness belong to the devil, and this proves that church fairs, with all their questionable concomitants, are the devil's way of raising money—not God's. His rule we find laid down in our golden text, "Every man as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly nor of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."

2. The variety of the offering. vs. 22-24. God does not merely require us to be cheerful givers but honest givers, honest with ourselves and honest with him. As there is a great variety in his work, so a corresponding variety of gifts are needed to carry it on. All our talents are to be used for him, whether of mind or body, of hand or brain. Our bodily and mental powers are best conserved by use—their fullest, completest use; and this is guaranteed when we offer them to God. Even genius needs a higher motive spring than gain or ambition to bring out its best efforts. How many gifted women of the W. C. T. U., who to-day grace the platform and whose ringing words for "God and home and native land" echo through the length and breadth of the country, would never have been heard of outside of their own immediate social circle if the trumpet cry of a great and holy cause had not roused them to come forward and lay in weakness and trembling all they were on his altars? There is much significance in the expression "wise-hearted." He is wise who makes the most of all he has and is. We must invest somewhere. We must make God our banker or the world. If we are short-sighted, with an eye that cannot see beyond the material advantages of the present moment, we shall choose the world. If we look beyond to Eternity we shall lend to the Lord and trust Eternity to repay us a thousandfold. Christian women have often been reproached for giving so little to missions compared to what they spend on dress; and it is true that many in our churches put on their own persons, in the shape of jewels and costly attire, that which would carry "life and light" to thousands of their miserable and degraded sisters shut up in the darkness of Hindoo zenanas. But it is the tendency of human nature to be very generous for other people. Are there no male professors of religion who annually spend on tobacco more than enough to support a missionary in Africa? Yet we hear very little on this subject, and next to nothing about the money which Christian men waste paying lodge dues. The latter diverts annually from the church large sums which figure to the world as a charity fund, while mostly spent in banquets, parades, and other forms of dissipation,—an amount which if rightly expended for the spread of the Gospel might make the desert blossom as the rose. The people brought in such abundance that they had to be restrained from bringing. What if Christians everywhere should offer with the same willing heart? How long before the world would be evangelized? Shall these ungrateful, rebellious, childish Israelites teach Christ's people to-day a lesson they have as yet failed to learn? Though his is a spiritual kingdom it has its foundations on the earth. Not raised by material forces it yet needs material offerings, the gifts now, as to the tabernacle of old, of willing hearts.

—The revival services of Messrs. Crossley and Hunter, at Belleville, Ont., have produced a profound effect. So widespread are the interest and religious feeling manifested that balls have been stopped and engagements of theatrical troops cancelled, owing to the sparse attendance and lack of interest taken in them. This is one of the most suggestive evidences that could possibly be given of the deep and far-reaching results of the good work.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

MOUNTAIN MISSIONS.

In the mountain districts of our central and southern States there are living thousands whose poverty and remote location shuts them practically away from religious privileges. To these people a humble Christian, Joseph X. Dillier, felt called of God to minister. His work began in 1878, and has continued ever since. Mr. Dillier says of his work:

"I felt that it was my calling to go into the mountains and visit the poor and isolated and talk to them in private, to preach to the neglected, read the Bible and pray with the sick; distribute tracts and religious papers, and where houses were without a Bible or Testament, furnish them with one. The church would not assist me, so I started independently, and have pursued this course until now. I have learned to trust in God for my support and also the support of my wife. We are in his hands.

"I have taken five journeys, starting from New York city September 9, 1878; went on foot, and carried on my back changes of clothing, tracts and papers to give away free, as also a few small Testaments to give away, and my Bible and other books to study; went on foot 1,105 miles, and gave away 23,000 pages of tracts and papers free to all; preached and exhorted about eighty times, visited a number of sick, read the Bible and prayed with them; some were converted, and good was done. My wife went on foot with me 310 miles. I returned to New York city March 5, 1879.

"I started on my fifth journey January 12, 1885. This time I went to the State of Alabama, then into the eastern part of Tennessee, and then over into North Carolina, along the sides and tops of the Unecoy its length, then the great Smoky and the Black and Blue Ridge, as also the Allegheny and other mountains. Through the winter I held seven revivals with Bro. S. P. Whitney in several counties in West Virginia. This journey I went on the cars 859 miles and on foot 2,924 miles; gave away 30,500 pages of tracts and papers, and preached 182 times in churches, school-houses, private and public buildings, and in the open air; exhorted sixty-five times in revivals, others assisting; 155 were converted, and through my private instruction eighteen were converted. I also visited the sick, and with good results.

"The total record for eight years' work is: Mileage on cars, 859; on foot, 8,879 miles; gave away 171,500 pages of tracts and papers, also six small and one large Testament; preached 497 times, exhorted sixty-five times; visited 107 sick, some healed by prayer and instruction, some were converted. In revival work, with other ministers to assist, 172 were converted, and individual work by my instruction fifty-one were converted, and baptized eight by requisition."

In his trip this year Mr. Dillier took with him an assistant, Anthony Amundsen of Racine, Wis. They have traveled in the Cumberland mountains. Their first report of this year is sent from Knoxville, Tenn., June 18, covering three months, from March 20 to June 18.

"Went on cars 316 miles, on boat 165 miles, and on foot 703 miles. Gave away over 8,100 pages of tracts, and three small Testaments. I preached twelve times in school-houses, nine times in private houses, and five times in music-rooms; also once in a grove—in all, thirty-nine times. Exhorted seventeen times; 114 promised to start to live for God, and observe prayers. These people are poor, with large families, and have far to go to preaching. Some one ought to interest themselves about these mountaineers. I have been in this work since September 9, 1878. We have no aid for our support, and I have had less than $30 per year the ten years I have followed my calling in this work. But it requires to be done, so we continue sacrificing home comforts, friends and all, to visit the isolated in the hedges and by-ways. We need some help. We must go on foot over rocks and roots, up and down the mountain sides and over the tops, with from thirty to fifty pounds on our backs—tracts and papers and Testaments to give away, and books to study, and our clothing to wear winter and summer. We solicit your prayers and interest in behalf of this work. Christians who wish to aid in such a needed work as this may send to Mrs. Ellen M. Dillier, 176 North Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill., or to Joseph X. Dillier, until August 15, at Ooltewah, Tenn., in care of Mr. Martin Culler."

—An exchange says that of the two hundred and twelve theological students who entered Presbyterian theological seminaries last fall, only twenty-one were from New England colleges; and of these only two were from Yale and two from Harvard. All the rest were from poor and small Presbyterian schools and colleges. This seems to confirm what we have before remarked, that our small colleges, whose limited means compel them to the practice of close economy, are the schools which worthy and earnest young men seek, and to which the church must look for her preachers and leaders.

—The First Free Congregational church of Lockport, N. Y., has just celebrated its semi-centennial. The church was formed fifty years ago by separation from the First Presbyterian church on the question of slavery, the forty-five members who left holding that the slaves should be free.

—Rev. Dr. Young J. Allen, missionary to China, has, since last January, delivered more than 100 missionary addresses among the Southern Methodist churches. Four new men will go to China this year.

—At Emory and Henry College, which is the alma mater of Samuel W. Small, the Evangelist, he preached the baccalaureate sermon to an immense audience. During the summer Small and Jones will co-operate in camp meeting work at various places in the North. In July they will be at Red Rock camp ground, near Minneapolis, Minn.

—Hereafter the Dutch Reformed churches will receive "offerings," not "contributions" or "collections." The General Synod recommends the use of the word "offerings" as indicating a higher conception of giving to the Almighty.

—In London, England, there has been instituted a Methodist sisterhood. No vows are imposed, the only request made of those who join being that they give three months' notice of any intention to withdraw, so that the good work may not suffer.

—There are some indications that the Baptists of Canada will soon come out against the exemption of churches from taxation. Prominent members of the denomination have recently condemned the principle of tax exemption, and the Canadian Baptist takes the same view of the question.

—Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, of the London Mission Training School, who has recently visited Rome, writes in Regions Beyond: "The exhibition of the Pope's Jubilee presents was a sad sight. It is held in the Vatican, and is so extensive that it takes hours to walk through it and examine the enormous mass of Papal treasures, even cursorily. We were forcibly reminded by what we saw of the Babylonian goods enumerated in Revelation 18. All were here displayed to perfection."

—It is proposed to establish in Bethany (the town of Mary and her sister Martha, where the Lord raised Lazarus from the dead) a Home which shall form a center of Christian work. The village has to-day about 500 inhabitants, who live in squalor and die in ignorance of the Gospel.

—Mr. Thomas Whitley, of England, whose son recently died in the missionary work on the Congo, has paid the outfit and passage of a man to take his son's place.

—The corner-stone of the Presbyterian Hospital of Chicago was laid last Tuesday with impressive and appropriate ceremonies at the southeast corner of Congress and Wood streets, where the new hospital building, when completed, will stand. It will occupy the lot adjoining on the north that occupied by the original institution of that name, which has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of the finest institutions of the kind in the West. The new hospital building is to be constructed from an endowment of $100,000 provided for in the will of Daniel A. Joncs, who died about three years ago.

—The most remarkable religious service of which we have any knowledge, writes Rev. A. Lowrey in the London Divine Life, is the Tuesday meeting, held at the residence of Mrs. Sarah Lankford Palmer, 316 East Fifteenth street, New York city. The object of this meeting, from the beginning, has been to revive and diffuse Scriptural holiness in all the churches. It is not exclusively a Methodist meeting, though the doctrine of Christian perfection, as set forth by John Wesley, is tenaciously held and inculcated. This is done, not because the privilege and duty of salvation from all sin formed the most prominent factor in John Wesley's preaching and writings, but because his exposition of the subject is deemed most true and Scriptural. One of the most marvellous features of the meeting is its long continuance. For more than half a century it has had an unbroken run. It was started at the suggestion of the present leader, Dr. W. C. Palmer having charge during his life, and his wife Phœbe succeeding him.

LODGE NOTES.

The Knights of Pythias in Washington Territory have adopted a resolution prohibititing all persons engaged in the manufacture of liquor from becoming members of the order.

Ben T. Kavanaugh, a noted Methodist divine and brother of the late Bishop Hubbard Kavanaugh, died in Kentucky, last week. He was at one time a Grand Master of the Masons of Wisconsin and later of Texas.

The "festival of St. John the Baptist" was observed by the Masonic lodge by a basket picnic June 23, in the City Park, Olney, Ill. The oration was delivered by Most Worshipful Grand Master John C. Smith, Lieutenant Governor.

James H. T. DeLuce, chief engineer at the Grand Pacific Hotel in this city, died Thursday night. He was a member of the William B. Warren Lodge, the Lafayette Chapter, Apollo Commandery No. 1, and the Oriental Consistory of the Masonic order.

Detroit is the birthplace of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the order having been organized there Aug. 17, 1863. A grand anniversary celebration will be held, in which it is expected fully 5 000 engineers from all parts of the United States and Canada will participate.

The order of Sons of America of this city received an invitation to attend service on Sunday morning July 1, at the Unitarian Church of the Messiah, Rev. Dr. Utter pastor. Dr. Utter is the champion who a few years since tried to make out that old John Brown was a savage wretch.

The annual meeting of the Masonic Benevolent Association of Central Illinois was held in Mattoon June 13 Important changes in the constitution were made, which are not yet given to the public, but are believed to be the admission of members not Masons to save the thing from bursting.

The Ottawa, Ont, Journal says it learns on good authority that Bishop Lafl'sche, of Three Rivers Diocese, signed a decree on Tuesday ordering the expulsion of Jesuits from that diocese on the ground that they have unduly influenced Catholics to change their wills on their death beds in favor of the Jesuits.

Some unknown man attempted to assassinate Thomas Gregory, an engineer for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. The late strike on the Burlington is supposed to have been the cause. The man fired three shots and ran away. One shot hit Gregory in the face under the right eye and broke his nose, and he was taken to the County Hospital.

Some 700 members of the four brotherhoods of locomotive engineers, firemen, brakemen, and switchmen, held meetings at St. Cloud, Minn., on Sunday, for the purpose of taking steps looking to an amalgamation of these orders. The sentiment developed was favorable to their union, and a further meeting for this purpose will be held in Minneapolis four weeks hence. The Burlington matter was discussed, and action taken, but its nature was kept secret.

Some twenty thousand people went to a picnic given by the Trades and Labor Assembly at the Fair Grounds, St. Joseph, Mo., on the 4th. The brotherhood men attempted to run Golden Holman, a Chicago, Burlington & Quincy engineer, from the grounds. A crowd of men started after him, yelling "Kill the scab." Holman drew a revolver and forced the crowd to retreat, shooting three times. He then started for the west entrance, but another crowd attempted to head him off and he again fired, shooting a young butcher. Holman made his escape, but afterward gave himself up.

Information from some of the Bald Knobber counties in Southwest Missouri is to the effect that trouble is brewing between two factions of the organization. A man known as "Doc" Peters was arrested at Cassville last week as a Bald Knobber and cattle thief, and the arrest is likely to prove an important one, as Peters is now known to be one of the leaders of a band who have stolen the past year more than 2,000 cattle off the range in Ozark, Christian and Tany counties. One of the factions claims that the other has been revealing the secrets of the order, and already more than one member has been murdered for giving information to the authorities, and more killings are daily looked for. Both sides are well armed, and if an open conflict should take place the fight will be fierce and bloody.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform;

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00 Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is Identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian Journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

ONE WAY OUT OF THE TROUBLE.

Did you ask, "What is the trouble?" Why just this: the feeling that sometimes settles down over the spirits of conscientious housekeepers that this world is a sort of treadmill in which we are destined to walk the weary round of washing and ironing and baking and sweeping, till our souls grow as seamed and wrinkled as our faces. The cares and perplexities of every day life seem too great for us to bear, and when to these we add the constant worry over what may come in the future, the burden becomes overflowing. And yet, if one dares to suggest that this undue auxiety may be lightened, that duty does not compel us to do four weeks' labor in a fortnight, that we owe something to ourselves as well as to our families, what indignation is aroused. Every woman who has household duties to perform ought to aim to be, in the best sense of the term, a good housekeeper. The only difference lies in the way in which this term is understood. To wholly sacrifice personal culture and all exercise and enjoyment of the higher faculties with which we are endowed, for the sake of accomplishing a certain amount of manual labor each day, and having the credit of getting through before anybody else, is both wrong and foolish. We know one woman, noted for her neatness and thrift, upon whose ceiling a cobweb never lingered, and on whose premises no fly ventured to set his foot, whose eye beheld every imperfection, and whose criticising tongue was dreaded by any into whose home she chanced to enter, cut down in the prime of life, worn out by needless work and overanxiety. She suddenly died, and her death was a warning to all who overtax their strength, and never have time for relaxation or recreation. The bow which is never unstrung will surely break.

If we women had a little more independence and were not always comparing ourselves with our neighbors, a great deal of worrying would be saved. Let us do our work in our own way and at our own time, regardless of what others may say. If it is more convenient for us to wash Tuesday, then what matter if our neighbor does get up before daylight, and freezes her fingers and toes on Monday morning. That is none of your business, and what is the use of worrying over it? Let us be independent. Find out by careful observation the easiest way and most convenient time for each particular duty, and then do it according to our own judgment. By careful management we would be astonished to find how many spare minutes are left in the course of the day, in which we may "play," as the children say.

But housework is never done: so, if we wait till every duty is performed before we take the needed rest, the probability is that we shall never get it. Have an entertaining book at hand, and when those dishes loom up before you in a formidable pile, and you think they never will be washed, sit down and read a few minutes, or, better still, run out of doors, if only to look at the chickens or to speak to a neighbor over the garden fence. A breath of fresh air and baptism of sunlight will sink down into your heart like a little piece of heaven, and cheer you up for all the rest of the day. There is nothing like fresh air and sunshine to drive away the "blues" and make the wheels of our household machinery move as by magic.

It is possible to accomplish an almost incredible amount of work if the monotony is varied with the necessary rest and recreation. We know one pair of hands which for eleven years, unaided except in time of sickness, have done all the work for a family of four, with constant interruptions from visitors and callers, and duties of various kinds outside the house to perform. This pair of hands, with the brain to which they belong, have washed and ironed, made and mended, and still found time for much reading and music, rides and walks, and a great deal of social enjoyment, and their owner is younger in spirit and almost as young in body as she was ten years ago.—Alice M. Walker in Homestead.

Persons prematurely gray can have their hair restored to its youthful beauty by using Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, the best article in the market.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmittou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkab alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

WORK FOR THE MONTH OF JULY.

LATE HAYING.—The failure to gather the hay while it is at its best, is a too frequent and inexcusable neglect at this season. If farmers could be convinced of how much of the feeding value of hay is lost by leaving the grass to become ripe, hard and woody, it would no longer be permitted.

HOW TO CURE RIPE HAY.—Hay that has been cut late may be improved by curing in the cock instead of drying in the sun. Being comparatively dry when cut, it is very soon cured; and if put up in cocks as soon as it is thoroughly wilted, it will heat and steam and become much softened, and will remain greener than if sun dried in the swath.

CUTTING WHEAT AND RYE.—If there was any doubt about the best time for cutting grain, the general experience last year went far toward settling the question. All over the country a hot spell came on just as the cutting became general and the grain shrank badly. Had harvest been a few days earlier, the total gain would have been enormous. In the writer's field stopping the cutting for the 4th of July holiday last season, caused a loss of $100 in the quality of the grain and in the shrinkage of the weight and bulk. As soon as the grain is solid, but will crush dry between the finger nails, it may be cut, and hot weather will not injure it in the shock as it will when standing. Dead ripe grain is not only less valuable, but the straw is worth less than if cut three or four days earlier.

CORN should not be neglected in the hurry of harvest. Frequent cultivation hastens growth and the maturing of the crop. To see the difference, leave a row or two uncultivated. Much hand work later in the season may be avoided by a little work with the cultivator, and by keeping the weeds down.

FODDER CORN may yet be sown. A rye or wheat stubble may be plowed and planted in drills with three bushels of corn per acre. The large Western or Southern corn, or Evergreen Sweet Corn, may be used. Some extra good ammoniated superphosphate, with potash added, or special corn fodder fertilizer, should be sown broadcast and harrowed in before planting. Dropping the fertilizer in the drill does not answer well for corn when other manure is not used broadcast.

FODDER CROPS. — Hungarian Grass, common Millet or the Golden Millet may be sown this month for green fodder or hay. A bushel of seed per acre may be sown; though rather thick seeding, the fodder will be all the finer and better for it. Millet that was sown in May should be cut before the seed is ripe or the fodder gets hard, unless the seed is wanted. Millet seed makes an excellent addition to ground feed when mixed with corn and rye.

Buckwheat may be made profitable upon a piece of rough or newly cleared ground. No other crop is so effective in mellowing rough, cloddy land. The seed in northern localities should be sown before July 12th; otherwise early fall frosts may catch the crop. Grass and clover may sometimes be sown successfully with buckwheat this month.

Pruning can be done in this month. Look to an open head to the tree, that the sun and air may reach the interior.

The utmost cleanliness should be preserved about the premises in hot weather. All wastes and garbage should be disposed of on a compost heap; and a load of good soil and sods from fence rows will be useful as the basis for it. Weeds should be gathered and added to the heap. Liberal additions of plaster will prevent disagreeable odors.

BLACKBERRIES AND RASPBERRIES.—Treat all plants that come up and are not wanted for next year's fruiting, as weeds. Those to grow should be stopped by pinching at six feet for blackberries and four feet for raspberries. When the fruit is off of either, cut out the old canes that have borne it.

CURRANTS.—The long weak shoots that push from the interior are to be broken out, and also all others not needed. Pick the fruit early, as soon as well colored, for jelly, but for table use let it be thoroughly ripened.

FLOWER GARDEN AND LAWN.—Everything should be kept in good order. Mow the lawn when it needs it. Remove large weeds that may start up. If the weather is dry, water should be used freely. The edgings to beds and walks should be kept neatly cut. Bedding plants need much care now, as they grow rapidly and will often need the knife. Cut away flower clusters of plants cultivated for their foliage, and trim and shape to suit the design. Tall flower plants, like dahlias, gladioluses, lilies, etc., will require stakes. Do not use unsightly devices for holding up plants; straight stems of shrubs are better than painted sticks. Climbers should not be allowed to fall away from their supports. Keep the ground clean all around perennials, and save seed of all plants as they ripen. —Am. Agriculturist.

At first a little hacking cough,
"'Tis nothing but a cold,"
They say; "'Twill very soon wear off."
Alas, the story old!
The hectic cheek, the failing strength,
The grief that cannot save,
And life's wan flame goes out, at length,
In a consumptive's grave.

If persons would use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery when irritation of the lungs is indicated by a cough, it would be an easy matter to avert consumption. Be wise in time.

Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal by tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND; OR,
Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

James A. Brooks, Prohibition candidate for Vice President, lectured in Minneapolis, Minn., July 3 before a large and enthusiastic audience.

A grand Prohibition ratification meeting for the Northwest will be held at Battery D, Chicago, on Friday evening, July 13. General Clinton B. Fisk, candidate for President; John A. Brooks, candidate for Vice President; D. H. Harts, candidate for Governor of Illinois on the Prohibition ticket, are to be present and speak. Speeches are also expected from Miss Frances E. Willard and George W. Bain. Samuel Dickie, Chairman of the National Committee, will preside.

A National Prohibition Convention was opened at Montreal, Canada, July 3. About 200 delegates were present. Ex-Mayor Hawland, of Toronto, was elected permanent president. Most of the day was occupied in discussing the question of whether the Scott temperance act, which met with so many defeats in Ontario recently, is a success or a failure. Several resolutions were offered, including one expressing confidence in the Scott act, a second in favor of forming a prohibition party, a third in favor of more advanced legislation than the Scott act, and a fourth in favor of the formation of a third political party All were referred to the committee on resolutions.

WASHINGTON.

Last week the War Department allowed a claim of $75 filed by Colonel Elliott Shurtz, of Marshalltown, Iowa, in 1848, for the loss of a horse in the Mexican war. The War Department officials can hustle around a bit when they try.—Eve. Journal.

It was reported Saturday that nearly $14,000,000 of pension warrants had been signed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Secretary Fairchild reports that the public debt decreased $14,429,503 during the month of June. The debt has decreased $113,844,080 since June 30, 1887.

CHICAGO.

The proposition to hold a celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America in 1892 in Chicago commends itself to general favor.

The preface of the Chicago Directory just issued says the population of the city has during the past year been swelled by 50,000 additional residents, which make a total of 870,000. To provide for the names in the Directory 2,272 pages were required, 200 more than last year.

COUNTRY.

The Swatara, with General Sheridan and party on board, sailed from Delaware breakwater at 5:30 A. M. Friday, enroute for Nonquitt. The steamer reached New York at 8:10 P. M., and the General was reported as having passed a good day.

A large fund has been raised by St. Louis saloon-keepers to fight the Sunday-closing law in the courts, and for the purpose of making a test case some of the beer shops will keep open next Sunday. A new organization, to be known as the Merchant's Protective Association, will be formed.

A dynamite bomb was exploded in the court yard at Nicholasville, Ky., at midnight Wednesday, shattering all the plate glass windows and damaging the Circuit Clerk's office so that the books and records had to be removed.

William Armstrong, a carpenter, met with a peculiar accident at Lima, O., that cost his life. He was at work on a ladder when it turned, and in his attempt to catch a window sill he threw up his hand in which he held a hatchet, the blade of which struck him on the neck, cutting a frightful gash, from which Armstrong bled to death in a short time.

Gus Bogles, a bootblack, was hanged for murder at Fort Smith, Ark., Friday, making the sixtieth victim who has died on the gallows at that place. On the scaffold Bogles protested his innocence, and asked the jailor to shoot him.

A battery of boilers in a tannery at Allegheny City exploded Friday afternoon, wrecking several buildings and seriously injuring six persons, three of whom will probably die.

Heavy storms of wind, rain, and hail caused serious damage Thursday in the Albany, N. Y., New Brunswick, N. J., and neighboring districts. Yachts were wrecked, shade trees and awnings destroyed, barns and farm houses leveled, and crops ruined. A farmer was killed near Middlebush, N. J., and the uncompleted Roman Catholic church at Asbury Park was blown down.

The storms throughout Iowa proved very serious. Great damage has been done to growing grain, many houses have been struck by lightning, railroad tracks were washed away, and telegraph communication interfered with. Only one death has been reported. Alvin Cox attempted to cross a freshet with his vehicle near Rock Island, Ill., and was drowned. Many horses and cattle were killed. Eighteen houses and barns were destroyed between Cedar Falls and Junction City, Iowa, covering an area of a mile and a half. At Waterloo considerable stock was killed by lightning. In Scott county bridges were swept away; and in Iowa City many buildings were blown down.

Streets and cellars at Scranton, Pa., were flooded Thursday by a violent storm. Two men were killed by lightning.

Sunday, near Carabelle, Fla., two illicit distillers, John Darden and one Holmes, attempted to kill H. J. Penton with a shot gun. They missed him, and Penton then shot Darden in the head and Holmes in the ear, killing them instantly.

The Santa Fe railway system is endeavoring to lease or purchase the Ohio, Indiana and Western Line between Indianapolis and Springfield, Ohio, and is planning to secure a through route to the sea board.

The stage running between Madeira, Cal., and Hildreth was stopped July 2 by masked men. They jumped from behind the rocks and compelled the express messenger to throw them his gun and then compelled him and the driver to hand over the express box, containing $10,000 in silver and bullion. The robbers escaped.

Robert William Flack, of Syracuse, N. Y., lost his life at Niagara Falls, in an attempt to go through the Niagara Rapids in his life boat.

The blunder of a train despatcher caused a wreck on the Pennsylvania railroad near Nanticoke, Pa. Two passenger trains, running at good speed in opposite directions on the same track, plunged into each other, demolishing both engines. Some thirty passengers were injured, but none fatally.

A cyclone struck the town of Edwardsburg, Ind., about 11 o'clock Friday night. A hotel that had just been completed and had not yet been furnished up was moved about fifteen feet from its foundations and completely wrecked. Several houses were unroofed and a number of barns destroyed. No one was injured as far as known.

A fire in the large six-story building occupied by the Century Company and other tenants in New York City early Saturday morning caused a loss of about $250,000. The Century's loss was chiefly by water.

A crowd of drunken roughs tried to force an entrance to a saloon at Long Island City for the purpose of getting liquor. The keeper, in defense of his property, fired into the crowd, killing one and fatally wounding another.

The U. S. steamer Swatara arrived off Nonquitt, Mass., Sunday afternoon bearing General Sheridan and his party, who were safely transferred to the General's cottage. It is hoped that his condition will improve, as the change has been made without serious results.

The village of Norway, Mich., was lately destroyed by fire which completely wiped out the business and residence portion of the place, rendering many scores of families homeless and without the necessities of life, and the amount of suffering has been very great. The sufferers are in need of money, bedding, clothing, shoes, provisions, etc. Arrangements will be made for free transportation of any supplies to that point, and careful distribution will be made by Mr. E. F. Brown, Town Supervisor.

FOREIGN.

The Pope is preparing an encyclical on the relations between church and state. An encyclical on the social question will be published during the year.

It is believed that after a definite understanding with Russia has been established, Emperor William will propose that the European powers reduce their armaments.

The steamer Volta has arrived at Liverpool with Congo dispatches to May 27, which give further details concerning the camp on the Aruwhimi. The camp was suffering from lack of food and from maladies arising from the surrounding swamps. Reconnoitering parties which had advanced along Stanley's route passed quantities of human bones, which were apparently the remains of victims who had fallen in fights between Stanley's followers and the natives. The relief had been received by the camp from Tippoo Tib. Major Bartellot, believing that Stanley was not more than 500 miles beyond the camp in the direction of Khartoum, was preparing to strike his tent and push on and join him.

Forest fires are raging along the line of the Canada and Atlantic Road between Montreal and Ottawa. Eighteen miles of track have been destroyed, and many cars, houses and mills have been burned.

The Czar has asked that Bismarck accompany the Emperor to St. Petersburg where M. DeGiers will present a proposal for a nominal Russian protectorate in Bulgaria. A candidate for the Bulgarian throne is to be appointed by a conference held either at Vienna or Constantinople. It is doubted in Austrian official circles if Austrian assent to the proposals can be obtained. The Russian Pan Slavist party does not approve the Czar's overtures with Germany.

Judge Hawes, of the Superior Court, in this city, has just decided one of the most important cases that could come before a court of justice. After a long investigation, a trusted employe of the South Side street railway company has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for attempting to bribe a juryman. This is one of the richest corporations of the city, and its president and attorney, who are both recommended to the examination of the grand jury, stand very high among our citizens. Few are willing to believe the former, Mr. C. B. Holmes, who has an enviable reputation as a practical Christian philanthropist, can be guilty of the charge; and S. B. Cobb, vice-president and largest stockholder of the company, is one of our oldest and most respected citizens. But no consideration should interfere between such a crime and its punishment. The lodge has notoriously prostituted our jury system, until it seems a hollow sham, and many are ready to abolish it. If a change can be begun which shall reach to the Masonic as well as the capitalist briber, the agents of such a reform are to be hailed as public benefactors.

Rev. John Jasper, the eminent colored Baptist preacher of Richmond, Virginia, has been for a few days in Chicago, raising money for a new church edifice for his Richmond flock. Mr. Jasper has a national reputation for maintaining the theory of the sun's motion about the earth. It is rather, however, a newspaper repute, as his lecture on that topic only presents the reasons for such a belief, without arguing for the fact. But Mr. Jasper is sound on the lodge, and there is no doubt of his position. On the Sabbath he preached in the Olivet Baptist church, and his doctrine was an excellent antidote for the lodgery that we regret to say prevails in that body. He advised his Christian hearers to stand fast together and not "let the forms and fashions of the world coax them away from the Lord God. You can join your Masonry, and belong to the base ball crowd, and be policy dealers, and all that; but none of that belongs to Christianity, and you must come out of that if you want to join the hundred and forty-four thousand that sing before throne of God."

Last week Monday President Cleveland made the final change which ended the Republican control in Utah. He nominated Elliott Sandford of New York to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory and John W. Judd to be Associate Justice. Chief Justice Zane, whose term expires, was appointed by President Arthur from Springfield, Illinois. He was the first man to make the Edmunds law of some effect. Under his decisions there began to be hope that the law would be enforced, and the United States Supreme Court have uniformly affirmed his judgments. The Mormons have achieved a great victory in preventing his re-appointment, for which the Gentiles have labored with equal assiduity. Petitions signed by every citizen of Salt Lake City who is opposed to the Mormon abominations have been sent to Washington. But the counsel of the enemies of the Old Flag prevailed. Mr. Elliott may not inaugurate any change; and, indeed, the firm rule of Judge Zane has made a return to the old times of Mormon bribery difficult; but the hierarchs of polygamy seem anxious to attempt it.

The dynamite conspiracy on the Burlington road is nearly uncapped. Several more arrests were made last week, Hoge, chairman of the engineers' order among them. Several of the arrested men have confessed. They tell where the dynamite was bought and how disposed of, and how several explosions were managed, fortunately with no serious results beyond disabling engines. The preliminary examination proceeded last week, and this before the United States authorities, and it is too early to say what may be the developments of the final trial. It is not believed, however, that the engineers as a body are implicated, but some of their leaders are, without doubt. The revelations turn some of the strikers against the order, while others are enraged at the company for bringing this villainy to light. Violence is threatened in some quarters, and may now be rather looked for from a company of men long idle, than from the same persons just quitting their work.

A few weeks since our Boston correspondent wrote of the attack of a Romish priest upon one of the public school-teachers for his definition of the word "indulgence." The Catholics followed up this attack by a war on school books that did not speak according to their word; and the subservience of the school board to their demands has aroused the churches. An immense mass meeting that overflowed into Tremont Temple met in old Faneuil Hall. The speakers denounced the Catholics influence as destroying the efficiency of the public school system, and dictated by bigotry. The resolutions are emphatic in denouncing the Jesuit doctrine that the state shall have no part in public education; in applauding Mayor Hewitt, of New York; and pledge the vote of the people against any one who is subservient to a foreign potentate. God grant it be not too late that the old Puritan sentiment of New England is arising to push back the floods of priestism and ignorance which have, under shelter of lodge and saloon, gained such power in Boston.

The order of the Pope a few weeks since against the Irish boycott and plan of campaign adopted by the National Home Rule League had its day of sensation. Before the universal opposition of Catholics in Great Britain and America the Pope seemed to give way, and his exponents, the bishops, have been officially explaining away all the force of the order. But a new encyclical letter was read last Sabbath in all the Catholic churches of Dublin, in which the Pope regrets the excitement and opposition which arose against the former decree, and reaffirms that order. His decision was taken after full information on the condition of Irish affairs, and he urges the Irish people to keep within the bounds of justice and right. The letter is dated June 24, and causes as intense dissatisfaction as the first decree produced astonishment. In one church the congregation marched out during its reading in a state of rebellion. If Leo XIII. shall succeed in raising such a storm in the bosoms of Irish Catholics as shall sweep away the last remnant of bigoted devotion to the priesthood, he will prove to them a greater benefactor than Parnell or O'Connell.

The press reports of the Pan Presbyterian council in London suggest a number of interesting debates and resolutions which the denominational press will soon give to the churches in full. Among these was a report concurring in the Quakers' memorial to substitute arbitration for war in the settlement of international disputes. Dr. Ellinwood, of New York, read a paper denouncing the liquor traffic with Africa, and stated that the work of missions in the Congo was paralyzed by the influence of trade restrictions. In this matter united action was necessary, and all Christian people should appeal to every government to correct the evil. Dr. John Hall of New York believed the influence of the church should prevail with the rulers of nations in this matter; and later on the progress of Romanism. Dr. Hall said that system was not so strong in Europe as formerly, and in America it seemed stronger than the reality. The bargaining of the politicians for the Catholic vote exaggerated its power. The action of the Council respecting Africa is a legitimate use of the influence of the church for the welfare of nations, whereas the Romish church has assumed to be a dictator, and has misused this influence.

POOR GRANT! POOR BISMARCK! POOR SIMS! POOR BLAINE!

BY WILLIAM F. DAVIS.

Very splendid was the firmness which General Grant displayed in opposition to a rebellion which was begotten by tyranny, fattened on slavery, fomented by Jesuitism, fired by whisky and officered by treason. In that cause the rudest language of his usually dumb obstinacy was caught up and treasured by watching nations as excellent eloquence, and "I'll fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," has become an international password of persistent patriotism.

But sickeningly sad was the sight when our greatest soldier and highest civilian defaced himself and disgraced his exalted offices by daily training in the ranks of the voluntary advertising agents of the public poisoners of American citizens. The people of the United States were compelled to gaze upon one, crowned a victor over a continent-shaking rebellion, placarded by the ubiquitous newspapers as the confirmed victim of the ill-mannered, filthy, despotic and deadly tobacco habit. In his dismal final conflict with the subtle enemy—which General Grant had shown such insane generalship as to assign the most honored post within his life-guard lines, having appointed Cigar the keeper of his mouth—the will of our ex President was proved to be as impotent as it had before been regarded irresistible. Cigar brought in Cancer, and Cancer killed Grant by a most torturous, lingering, and loathsome death.

At eleven o'clock A. M., June 15th, Emperor Frederick of Germany, whose ancestry, achievements, and dominion encircled him with the most coveted glories of this world, after a reign of three months, six days, two hours and a half, was slain. Cigar and his armor-bearer, Cancer, did it.

Emperor Frederick's manly beauty, strength, courage, discretion, gentleness and magnanimity had endeared him to the people of united Germany and of the world. He sat firmly on the imperial throne in the Frederichskron palace at Potsdam, but more firmly in the hearts of his people. But he gave his lips to the lying tobacco, and rolled the deceitful poison as a sweet morsel under his tongue, and the enemy dragged him by the throat from his throne and drove him into the tomb prematurely. The more than eighty decorations,commemorative of the esteem in which his character and achievements were held, which were lavished upon him, had no power to stay the cancerous rot which tobacco begot. The proud crosses of the Black Eagle,the Red Eagle, the Legion of Honor, etc., were no match for Cigar.

"Unser Fritz"(our Fritz), as the Germans lovingly called him, was fifty-seven years old, of magnificent physique, powerful constitution and long-lived progenitors. But for his loved Cigar he might well have filled out thirteen, twenty-three, or even thirty-three more years of honored and useful life, in defiance of the ordinary foes to royalty.

The Boston Journal of last evening (6, 15, '88) says:

"Frederick William had been ill for some time. He was an inveterate smoker, and accordingly when an affection of the throat was noted it was pronounced cancer of the throat,known as tobacco-smokers' cancer. His case was very similar to that of General Grant. The German physicians in consultation found they could not arrest the growth, and the case of the prince was entrusted to a prominent English doctor, but,as the result shows, in spite of temporary relief, with no permanent recovery."

When the examining physician reported to premier Bismarck the desperate disease which had fastened upon Unser Fritz's throat, that "man of iron and blood" replied sternly, "But the Crown Prince must not have cancer!" Bismarck's haughty will overbore the trembling physician, even as it has in former years ridden rough-shod over the constitutional liberties of the people. But the cancer was not terrified nor turned back. Fastening its fangs more deeply in the throat of the Crown Prince day by day, it tortured its imperial victim in the face and eyes of all Christendom and heathendom, extorting, as by a kind of natural, terrible inquisition, involuntary testimony to the invincible virulence of the deadly narcotic, TOBACCO. And now that inescapable death has come the dispatches tell us that "Bismarck is greatly afflicted." Poor Bismarck! "The tobacco smokers' cancer" is more than a match for his autocratic will.

Many years the driver Sims has driven the "Black Maria" of Suffolk County Jail in Boston, and been charged with the care of the yard and general outside work of the jail. Six months ago a prisoner, who was allowed some exercise in the yard under surveillance, warned Sims that tobacco is a poison which a man cannot safely smoke, and pointed him to Jesus Christ,the Saviour,who has delivered many souls from that and other bondage to sin.

The warning and the exhortation were disregarded. Four months ago Sims was off duty and reported ill. To the officer who informed him of Sims's sickness the prisoner testified, "He injures himself by tobacco-smoking." "That is a fact," replied the officer, who has the same habit, shows its evil effects, but denies them.

Sims gave up his position,but not his pipe. Soon after he was thought to be mentally deranged by the poison which he loved. He was watched with some anxiety. Day before yesterday, a little past 4 o'clock, a policeman saw Sims jump from a two-story window to the sidewalk, and run towards West Boston bridge. The policeman followed. Sims reached the bridge, jumped over into Charles River and finished his suicide. Poor Sims! He would never own that tobacco hurt him. He would drown himself first. But the tobacco did the mischief,nevertheless. To-day the clerk of the jail, often warned before, replied to the usual warning as usual, "Tobacco never injured me," even though some of the effects of its baleful power were pointed out to him in his own person while he spoke. It is probable that not less than fifteen millions of the people of the United States are to-day the voluntary slaves of the tobacco tyranny. It is probable that these slaves squander on this lust more than six hundred million dollars per annum. A Chelsea horse-car driver told me he paid over $125 for cigars in a single year.

A superintendent of mines in Marquette, Mich., told me he had paid for the cigars which he and his sons had smoked in fifteen years, $20,000. A lumber proprietor there told me his cigars cost him $900 a year. It is probable that not less than 250,000 persons every year are killed in the United States by this deadly poison,which attacks the mouth,nose, eyes, ears, throat, tongue, lungs, stomach, liver, kidneys, blood, brains, nerves, muscles, and bones with cancerous, rotting venom,and fouls the whole neighborhood of the voluntary victim of this pervasive black plague of America.

If any act is fitted to bury its author or advocate in a bottomless sea of infamy,the scheme to enlarge and facilitate the devastations of the tobacco-demon in our land is such an act. The advocacy of this scheme is the main plank of the political platform which James G. Blaine has built and mounted, and on which he bases his latest claim to be regarded as the foremost statesman of the Republican party. Poor Blaine! Poor Republican party! Let them be buried together, with tobacco. God save the people of the United States from the public poisoners!

THE LAW OF THE WORD.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The Psalmist says, "Thy Word is a lamp to my feet." How many walk in darkness. Here is a professing Christian who works on the street-car on Sabbath. He says,"I know the Bible says,'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;' but this work is a necessity growing out of our modern civilization." No, my friend,that is not a sufficient reason, for in Toronto, Canada, and other cities, they have no street cars on Sabbath.

Here is another who is a railroad engineer and works seven days in a week. That is not a necessity, for the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad run no trains on Sabbath. Their general manager says, "Giving our men rest every seventh day improves the service. With an improved service we can do as much transporting in 144 hours as otherwise we could do in 168 hours. Sabbath work is not a necessity on railroads."

Here is another who serves seven days in a week in the post-office, and surely that is necessary. In Toronto, Canada, and London, England, the post-office is closed every Sabbath day. And if they can do without them New York and every other city can also. The railway and post-office in England and America deprive 2,500,000 men of their rest day. A few years ago 450 engineers on the New York Central road petitioned for their Sabbath on the ground of their right of conscience. It was denied them. A minister in New York preached against the Sunday newspaper. Some of his men came forward and shook their papers in his face and said they would read their papers and he could not help it,and they made it so hot for him he had to leave in six months. This is the car of Juggernaut crushing our liberties.

Two of Christ's children are related as laborer and capitalist. They do not agree. They call it the conflict between labor and capital. Now there is a lamp to guide them—"Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." A manufacturer in New York becomes involved and is forced to sell. He hears of a wealthy man who wishes to buy. He goes to him and says: "My manufactory is worth $20,000. But I am in great straits and will sell it to you for $15,000."

"I will consult my wife and answer you to-morrow."

When he states the facts to his wife she says, "Is the manufactory really worth $20,000?"

"Yes, I believe it is."

"Then you ought to pay him $20,000 for it."

The next day he goes to the owner and says, "I will take the manufactory at $20,000." That is following the Golden Rule.

When a girl comes and offers her services in your home for $20 per month is it your custom to say, "Twenty-five dollars is little enough. I will give you $25 a month"? A widow of eighty years lives in Baltimore. She depends upon her daughter. Her son of seventeen years is sickly, is serving with a plumber and receives $2.50 a week. The daughter makes pantaloons for a tailor at 35 cents a pair,finding her own thread and buttons. She could make two pairs a day if she had no household duties. But with these she can only average one and a half pairs. He has a heart of stone who does not more wisely consider the case of this poor woman. That tailor is not doing by her as he would wish to be done by. A brother offends and you must reprove him. That is washing his feet. Be sure and do not use too hot water; that will scald him—hot words. Do not use too cold water; that will chill him—the cold shoulder.

We are Christ's stewards and must give an account. A wealthy Christian in Philadelphia takes his family west on a pleasure trip costing $1,000. He also paid $80 to take a pet dog along. Returning home, he listened to an appeal for foreign missions and gave $5.00 in the collection. How will that be accounted for? Seventy years ago the Baptist body divided, one for, the other against missions. To-day the anti-missionary division has 45,000 members, while the missionary division has 2,500,000. The wealth of the United States is $50,000,000,000. At least $10,000,000,000 belongs to the Evangelical churches. Last year they gave $4,000,000 to home missions and $3,000,000 to foreign missions. That is"withholding more than is meet." "It tendeth to poverty." "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith if I will not open to you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing until there shall not be room enough to receive it."

TRY IMPORTUNITY.

BY MRS. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

It is said that the people of a certain town laid a deep plan for the removal of the saloon, which was troubling their community. Two persons called upon the saloon-keeper, requesting him to close up the place of temptation. Their call was treated as a matter of small import, but soon two more came with the same request. These were followed by two more, and still two more, until the man, in dismay, asked how long this procession was.

The pastors of the different churches in Rockford, Ill., once planned to have one of their number preach against Sabbath-breaking one Sabbath, and another the next, and so on until each church had been instructed upon this point. Also a goodly number of the reliable families of that little city visited successively the provision merchants with the request for closed stores on the Lord's day; and though their request was not heeded at first, they soon had the satisfaction of seeing in the store windows placards bearing the words: "Closed on Sundays."

Reader, have you done what you could to prohibit the running of railroad trains on the Sabbath? Perhaps there is one thing more you can do. If you have not already done so, please at once sit down and write an earnest request to the manager of each branch of railroad within your knowledge, and ask the Holy Ghost to accompany the message. Something must be done, and done quickly, or the Sabbath of this land will be a thing of the past, and perhaps our children be made to suffer cruel persecution for righteousness sake. But it need not be so if you do all in your power to turn back the hosts of evil! Be quick!

OVERSHOOTING THE MARK.

Overmuch zeal in a bad cause generally reveals its true character and reacts upon itself, as was demonstrated a few weeks ago by the G. A. R. Post in Hudson, Ind. The protracted meeting then in progress in the United Brethren church received much opposition from lodgemen, and this was intensified by certain cowardly denominational zealots who used their lodge connections as a fort behind which to hide their denominational envy and enmity. A building was moved near the church and fitted up for a post hall. A flag-staff was raised, the colors were thrown to the breeze and the adherents of the post were busy as bees; they kept the streets warm. As soon as everything was in passable readiness the Sons of Veterans had an "installation." Two young men who had been seekers were enticed to the installation. This seemed a victory for secretism. The father of those young men was a member of the post, but, having great regard for religion, had urged the boys not to go to the lodge, but to go to church. He was a zealous advocate for the post, and was, in turn, the moral stock in trade for it, being referred to as a moral man and a model citizen in every respect. So zealous was he for the Grand Army that he would not attend the protracted meeting. But, upon the return of his boys from the installation, which they had attended in preference to church service, serious reflections came over him. His heart smote him. As he says, God used him roughly. His boys had been rudely enticed from the altar of prayer to attend a worldly lodge, and as a father he had been setting them an example. This thought, he says, "struck him like a cannon ball," and the next morning, listening to his boys' conversation, he was so moved that he fell upon his knees and looking to God said "Here, Lord, use me!" God thrilled his soul with joy, and off came badge and brass buttons. He attended the morning meeting, announced his purposes, and in a few days united with the church free from lodgery, and had the satisfaction of knowing that two of his sons had the manhood to withdraw from that which so nearly proved their ruin. A committee waited on him to obtain his return, but he remains firm and rejoices in the freedom which he has in Jesus.

If the G. A. R. does not overdo itself in this (Steuben) county, it will have to reform suddenly. If it can be known by what it does, it has about resolved itself into a "Hoss Trot Association." Bills are up to this effect, and the "trot" is to last from Friday until Tuesday, except that on Sunday there will be no set horse racing, but a Sunday-school assembly in the afternoon; admission, 10 cents. This will varnish up the horse racing of the week days, and get them ready to shed tears for a purse on Decoration Day. This blasphemous compound of heathendom is sanctioned by so-called Christian preachers. Some of the members of the G. A. R. are protesting against such conduct, and blush at the shame which this secret society heaps upon old veterans. The purity and loveliness of Jesus, and the righteous principles which he ordained, forever forbid our fellowshiping with such institutions, either individually or ecclesiastically.—W. H. Clay, in Christian Conservator.

SECRET DESPOTISM.

When a committee, consulting in secret, can, and do, for reasons unrevealed, command a hundred thousand men to stop work a month at a loss of millions, it is a great evil and sin.

When laboring people are so deluded and duped as to commit their industrial welfare to such a conclave, they yield to a despotism worse than any government or corporation. No greater harm can come to laborers than a declaration of war with their employers, shutting out from their counsels a sympathizing public, always ready to take their part, in a just cause. What an obstacle to salvation are the excitements, the bitterness, the poverty, and the distress of such a contest.

When secret orders divide neighbors, making distinctions where there are no differences; control politics; corrupt courts and juries and witnesses; inform criminals of indictments before the sheriff can reach them; set constables off the track of criminal brothers in secret orders; cheat justice of its victims; teach that partiality is benevolence, and sinners can be saved without a Saviour; and take time and money and energy due to religion, they hinder salvation. Such secret orders are intrinsically bad. The name of Christ, which they reject, could not sanctify them. The less sacred things are connected with their ceremonies the less there will be of sacrilege and delusion.

Secrecy itself, under some circumstances, is cause and just cause of jealousy and suspicion. Openness, frankness, transparency, are better. My advice is, Avoid all secret organizations as hindrances to salvation.—Pres. Fairchild's Baccalaureate Address.

LODGE WORK IN THE IOWA LEGISLATURE.

"He that is accustomed to utter what he knows to be false, or to suppress what he knows to be true, is in a perpetual state of degradation."—Godwin's Political Justice.

"Masonry, however, is not only the most ancient, but the most moral institution that ever subsisted."—Webb's Freemasons' Monitor.

"Our records inform us that the usages and customs of Masons have ever corresponded with those of the Egyptian philosophers, to which they bear a near affinity. Unwilling to expose their mysteries to the vulgar eyes, they concealed their particular tenets and principles of polity under hieroglyphical figures—and expressed their motions of government by signs and symbols, which they communicated to their Magi alone, who were bound by oath not to reveal them."—Ibid.

While the abstract fact of secrecy is not necessarily vicious, yet most organized and systematic secret associations are; and some forms of organized secrecy are demoralizing in effect, and extremely dangerous to the public welfare.

In a March issue of the Iowa State Register, there was an editorial in which it was claimed that "a secret organization was effected in the House, under the control and manipulation of five or six gentlemen for the control of all bills in regard to railways."

Now whether this charge is true or false we do not propose to discuss; but we wish to note the utterance of the writer in condemnation of such a course of action as a means of gaining a desired end. He says: "It is as discreditable to the State as it is to the House. * * * * Measures so put through by compulsion and secret organization can hardly be such legislation as will be either wise or just. We do not believe that any measure which will not stand discussion in open daylight, should ever be enacted into law in Iowa." If to obtain success in legislative measures by resorting to "secret organization" is so reprehensible a course as the Register states, then is the whole brood of secret fraternities under the ban of reason and public welfare. For all these fraternities exist for the very purpose of effecting ends and objects which could never be secured by a "discussion in open daylight." What man is there so demented as to suppose that the ridiculous and puerile performances of "work on the Entered Apprentice" or Master Mason's degree, or the initiation into Odd-fellowship, could be performed or even favorably discussed in open daylight with any hope of success in developing moral philosophy or symbolic religion (?). The motive therefore of these societies is unworthy. It is to accomplish by secrecy what could not be gained by open methods. This involves two very important things. That both the method and object of secret societies are to be condemned. Yea, they stand condemned before the votaries of these orders; for if they had confidence in the righteousness of their cause then the open method of promulgating their principles would naturally be adopted.

Secrecy, as a method, is compassed with many evils, as well as betraying a cause inherently weak. An old author in civil jurisprudence has said, "We cannot determine to keep anything secret without risking at the same time to commit a hundred artifices, quibbles, equivocations and falsehoods." The evidence of the truthfulness of this sweeping statement is found with hundreds, who, when asked as to the correctness of the revelations and exposures of the different secret orders, deny the whole thing. Church members and even ministers, many times, can be cited in proof of the statement. We once knew a case where, after a lecture on Freemasonry, condemning the institution for reasons stated, a gentleman who had once been an adhering Mason said to an old acquaintance who also heard the lecture, "What did you think of the lecture," and received the answer, "It was a mess of lies from first to last." "Why," said his interrogator, who had sat with him in the same lodge many times, "that is just as you and I received it, and gave it in our lodge." It is sadly true that there are few members of the lodge whose word can be relied on when the character of the lodge or its principles are involved. In many cases the pernicious spirit of lodgery predominates over that of divine grace.

In view of these facts, what wonder that Guizot raises the inquiry, "Shall the miracles of Sinai have no more virtue than the mysteries of Eleusis, and Jehovah languish away and vanish in the routine of sacerdotal ceremonies, or in philosophical skepticism?" The spirit of organized secrecy is shown in the epitaph of Dictator Sylla, written with his own hand. The following is the epitaph: "No friend ever did me so much good, or enemy so much harm, but I repaid him with interest." This spirit he imbibed as an initiate of the greater mysteries of Ephesus.—C. E. Harroun, Jr., in Birmingham Free Press.

TITLES ENOUGH.

The desire for ornaments to one's name is allied to the desire for ornaments for the person. The savage with sixteen brass rings on his ankles, and the barbarian with sixteen high-sounding titles have a natural kinship. As manhood is developed and the individual is eliminated from the mass this desire fades out, and at last ceases wholly to be an advantage, since the plain name distingishes the person more than the use of titles which are shared by others.

Hon. Caleb Lyon and a friend, once, while traveling in the Holy Land, sent in their cards to the Turkish Pasha at Jerusalem, but were informed by an officer that his master could not see them because their titles were not long enough. The Pasha's titles made a string a foot long. So Mr. Lyon gave the officer the name of his friend, and his native State, then added the United States, and the name of every State in the Union, and then commenced with the names of the towns and villages until he had made a list sixteen inches in length. When the Pasha received this he was in another trouble. He feared he was not great enough himself to receive so distinguished a visitor! But the matter was finally arranged, and the Pasha had the honor of receiving a visitor whose list of titles was longer than his own.—Missionary Visitor, Toulon, Ill.

Maxwell, the murderer of Preller, who has appealed to the Masonic lodge to help him out of his trouble, is sentenced to be hung July 13. He still hopes that his Masonic brother, Gov. Morehouse of Missouri, will come to his assistance. The probability now is that he will have to hang. Masonry does not come to the rescue of criminals in such public ways. Had he kept still and relied upon purely Masonic ways of reaching the governor he would have had a better prospect for success.—American.

LETTERS FROM ROME.

[From our artist-friend in Europe.]

ROME, Italy.

Last Thursday we went to the Catacombs of St. Calixtus, out on the Appian Way, the same way that Paul came to Rome by, and it is said to be little changed since then. They call it a "Queen of Roads" in Italy, but if it is queen I do not care to see the others. As far as to the Catacombs, which we went to see, it is walled in, so that nothing of the country outside is to be seen. The walls are six feet or more in height and perfectly tight, and between them is a pavement of cobble stones as rough as possible to ride over. Of course there are no flowers or plants of any kind, and the only view is a glimpse of a back yard occasionally through a wicket gate.

A little way this side of this part of the Catacombs that we visited, is a church where they say Paul turned back and was going to leave Rome, when he suddenly saw Christ standing before him, who asked, "Where are you going, Paul?" Paul was ashamed to answer that he was afraid to enter Rome; and, instead of replying, asked the Lord where he was going. He said, "I am going to Rome to be crucified in your place again." Then Paul went on to Rome to his imprisonment.

I do not know where the story originated, but the priest in the church tells the story and solemnly shows the footprints of Paul's feet and those of Christ in a block of marble kept in a glass case. The marble, he said was found in the Appian way, and the imprint of the feet was "miraculously preserved," and the church built over it. They tell some such wonderful story in nearly every church.

The Catacombs we saw are the ones usually visited here, but there are others all around and under Rome. We went into a vineyard gate, and were taken down by a monk into the rooms where the Popes were buried, where St. Cecelia was found, and through a long connected set of galleries. In a few of the niches in the walls there are skeletons lying, and we were allowed to look into two sarcophagus coffins made of carved marble. In one of them was a mummy lying still in good preservation; but in the other was only a pile of dust, shreds of cloth, and a few bits of bones, and one or two fragments of pottery and jewelry. The galleries are in three stories, one beneath another. The upper ones are not very dark, but the two others were quite in the darkness, until they made several openings to the surface. I cannot imagine how people ever could have lived there, as some of the Christians did when they were so persecuted. There are some paintings still on the walls quite plainly to be seen and a number of inscriptions, though most have been removed to a museum here.

The Pope is having an exhibition of the presents he has received this year. I have not been to see yet, but intend to go soon. We were in a part of the Vatican (the Pope's palace) yesterday where he is "in prison," as the ignorant Catholics at home imagine. His "prison" has over a thousand rooms and a garden as large as one of our parks, and as beautiful. They say he never can go out of the palace grounds; but then he has a small city in his house of a thousand rooms, and every imaginable luxury at his command—and he has never had anything less all the time they have been taking contributions from the servant girls and other poor people for him. Did you ever see a picture of "His Holiness," as he is called? He has a broad smile always on his face as if he were perpetually smiling in his sleeve at people's credulity. The people say he looks "so benevolent."

No one is allowed to enter the ruins with sketching materials without a permit from the authorities, which takes always a day or two to procure. And just before I came there had been a new law made about the permits, which prevents any Americans from sketching in the "palace of the Cæsars" or the "baths of Caracalla" at all. These two places are the most picturesque ruins of all, and it is hard not to be permitted to go there. The "permit" required must now be obtained through our "Consul General", who must make the application for the same in writing on the Italian revenue stamp paper; our Consul says he cannot do it without breaking his oath to do "nothing against the honor of the United States," as using a revenue stamp is a violation of the conditions of our treaty with Italy. I suppose it will be arranged sometime, but certainly not in time to be of use to me.

I was rather surprised a few days ago when I went to the Pope's exhibition, to see there among the presents from royal families, one from our President Cleveland. I did not suppose our republican principles allowed of such a very un-republican act as sending a "token of good wishes" or "regard" (I am not sure which expression the President used) to the very power that is the worst enemy of all freedom. At any other time it would not have been so unsuitable as now, because just at this time all the gifts do not belong to the Pope individually, but to the Roman Catholic church as a power. Rome is full of "pilgrims," dressed in black, and priests, going from one church to another. They get so many years indulgence for their pilgrimage here. By the way, in one of the arches of the Colliseum is a small black cross inserted in the stone, underneath which stands in Italian, "Eight days' indulgence to every one who will kiss this cross." I have frequently seen persons purchasing eight days out of purgatory by this means.

To return to the Pope's exhibition: I looked quite carefully through it for presents from the United States, and am quite positive there were only three, about twenty minerals and a gold plate in a box from California, two organs, (no doubt sent as advertisements) and the President's gift, which you probably know was our Constitution in an elegant binding. England was also almost entirely missing in the exhibit, though she sent more than our country, and the Queen sent a large golden bowl. There were magnificent presents from some countries of South America, and from Spain, Portugal, France, Germany and Italy. One hall was devoted to presents from rulers and royal families and was a blaze of diamonds and precious stones, gold and silver.

The President of France sent a vase of delicate blue and white porcelain at least six feet in height, a beautiful thing.

One room was filled with paintings, in which the Pope figured as conspicuously as the "Doges" in the Venetian galleries; only the "Doges" were usually kneeling before some heavenly apparition, and in the representations of the Pope the arrangement of the figures is very nearly reversed. In one painting he sits on a throne, crowned with laurel, surrounded by allegorical figures representing Art, Sculpture, Music, Poetry, Science, and what I take to be intended for a figure of Religion at his ear, at least a form with wings that could as well represent the electric light, and perhaps does stand for electric force. At any rate these marvelous beings are doing Leo XIII. homage.

Another large room is filled with thousands of bottles of wine; an alcove with drugs, particularly pills; a bicycle was presented; various animals and plants; in the court were ten or more chimes of church bells and several single ones, which were kept continually ringing by curious people who wanted to test their tone, until the jingle and discord was deafening.

But the greater part of the exhibition was made up of priests' garments, embroidered in linen, gold and silver thread, and made from the most costly materials. There must be many thousands of them altogether. A part of this exhibition is placed in some halls of the Vatican Museum of Sculpture, and there stand these statues and appear to look very coldly at the display of modern vanities, as certainly from their age and fame they have a right to do. Among others is the famous statue of Minerva, and several statues of the Cæsars.

The "Sistine Chapel" was very dark when I was there, and I could not see much of it, but saw Raphael's "Transfiguration," Madonnas, and many pictures of other great artists. I was delighted with Guido's "Aurora," and admire most of his pictures more than I had any idea I should. His "Beatrice" is here too. None of the chromos or engravings have either the color or expression right. I spent eight hours studying the "Aurora" and "Beatrice," and was tired of neither. I am going to-morrow to the Sistine Chapel again and will describe it and the other pictures I have seen in my next letter.

R.

THE NEW YORK PROHIBITION CANDIDATES.

[From Rev. N. Wardner's editorial in the Wesleyan Methodist.]

If the Prohibition party attempts to champion secret societies as such, by bringing forward men and publicly presenting them for office because they are members of some or many of the secret orders that hold tyled and curtained night revel in the country, the party will make a serious mistake. There are some thousands of straight Prohibitionists who will not be forced to vote sanction to the lodge to condemn the rum traffic. There is no necessity for putting the anti secret reform forces in this critical and disagreeable condition. The great majority of our people are set in desperate determination against the rum power; but they are equally set against the lodge power.

It is not a little painful to know that the New York State Prohibition convention recently brought forward a man publicly declared in connection with the nomination as a member of a "secret order," and who hung out in the most conspicuous manner badges of sworn secrecy covered with the legend, "Hiram Tyrian Widow's Son Sent to King Solomon." Some tried and true Prohibitionists will feel inclined to send such publicly proclaimed and personally advertised candidates to "King Solomon" for votes. A most earnest protest against any such avowed secret society nomination was made in a circular put into the hands of nearly every member of the convention. One of the perils of the Prohibition party is the purpose of the lodge to capture, control, and run the party in the interests of organized secretism. We are sorry to be obliged to write this, but fidelity to the principles of the church we represent compels us to these utterances. We trust this is the last instance when a man will be brought forward for office for any other reason than that he is a Prohibitionist, and as a man worthy of the honor allied to the nomination given. While we are in a life and death tug of holy war against the rum curse let no one ask us to put our hands of benediction on the lodge system of the day in pressing on the conflict for temperance.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

KNIGHTS AND LADIES OF HONOR.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

This is one of the vast number of secret societies whose main object (professedly) is life insurance, but which also claim "to promote benevolence, morality, science, industry, mutual protection and assistance." It is regularly incorporated under the laws of the State of Kentucky. Certain persons whose names are specified are declared to be "created a body politic, to be known by the name, style and title of the 'Supreme Lodge of Protection, Knights and Ladies of Honor,'" and capable in law "of instituting Grand and Subordinate lodges as it may see fit, under such laws, rules and regulations as the corporation may enact, and not inconsistent with the laws of the State, or of the United States."

The act of incorporation, of which this is an extract, is duly signed by the Governor of the State and the officers of the Legislature. On the constitution and laws I wish to remark:

1. That a secret lodge system "to promote benevolence, morality and science" is an intrinsic absurdity. There are most ample means accessible to every one by which these objects can be and are promoted. The only real and effective method for the promotion of benevolence and morality is the Christian religion. Anything which usurps its place, or attempts to do its work, is a delusion and a sham. It is safe to say that this order has done nothing in this direction. Nor are its capacities to promote science any more real. Our schools and colleges, which are accessible to all, do not ask to be supplemented, and surely do not fear the competition of the lodge. Nevertheless, such a pretention, put forth in an official and legal document, is calculated to deceive, and cannot be too strongly reprobated.

Nor is life insurance likely to be any more effectually promoted by a secret society. For centuries life insurance companies have been carried on by open and legitimate methods. The whole system has been reduced to scientific accuracy. The records and methods of procedure are published, and challenge public scrutiny. There was surely no occasion for the organization of a new insurance society, whose chief recommendation is that it works in the dark and its records are not open to public inspection, or even to its own members, but are manipulated by a secret order which is responsible only to itself, and is especially exempted from the insurance laws of the State. It is a sufficient condemnation of these secret insurance societies that in England a large majority of them have failed, and that in Massachusetts and Michigan so numerous have been their failures that it has been thought advisable to suppress them by law. Of the unfair and unreasonable conditions of this particular company I will speak hereafter.

2. It must be noticed that an organization which is a creature of the State ought to be open to the inspection of its officers. This is true of all other corporations. Secret societies are the only exceptions. True, the act of incorporation says that none of its rules shall be in conflict with the laws of the State, but it reserves to itself no authority or power to know whether this condition is complied with. Moreover, the Legislature has stultified itself by creating a body corporate that can successfully resist its authority and control. Section sixth of the general laws declares that "All things appertaining to the order, the mode of procedure to gain admission into the lodge, its signs and pass-words (past and present), business transacted, in any lodge, etc., are secrets alike to be kept inviolate." "Any Grand or Subordinate lodge that shall cause to be printed, or have made for its own or the use of others, any of the secret work and supplies enumerated in law 10, shall, on satisfactory proof thereof, be suspended, and forfeit its charter or dispensation. (Sec. 12, law 4). The power to adopt, change or amend the secret work in use is vested in the Supreme Lodge exclusively. The directory and other requirements embraced in the ritual shall be enforced as law." (Idem).

Thus it will be seen that members are strictly forbidden to, in any wise, publish the secret work or proceedings of the order. Should they do so they would be liable to expulsion or other punishment, and their testimony would be regarded as illegitimate, and be discredited. However indecent, criminal or even treasonable, the proceedings of such a lodge might be, the officers of the law have neither the right nor ability to investigate the facts of the case, and no means of knowing anything that the lodge does not see fit to communicate. If the lodge or any member should be charged with crime committed in, or instigated by the lodge, he would only have to plead his obligation of secrecy, and his liability to self-crimination, and he would be excused from testifying.

Such cases have not been infrequent. When the Legislature of Pennsylvania summoned the members of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons of that State, and demanded of them whether they had any criminal knowledge of the abduction and murder of William Morgan, they made the plea that their obligations to secrecy were paramount, and that they were not bound to criminate themselves and refused to testify. It goes without saying that a Legislature that charters an institution and confers such powers is guilty of self-stultification, and practically establishes another government with powers superior to its own.

OUR NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Boston matters—Sunday-school politics—The grand old party—An incident of Franklin Pierce's administration—Some antiquarian reminiscences—The land of the Nile makes a contribution to fashion.

Boston's discontent with her city council has been of late rather loudly-voiced, and borne at least this much of good fruit: that on the Fourth there was little junketing at the city's expense. Nor were any liquor or cigars furnished at the public cost. It was probably not an innovation much relished by gentlemen who have hitherto been used to settling all such bills out of the city treasury, but we hope still more startling ones are in store for them next fall. The general mortality in Boston has been higher than for many previous years, and the cause has been attributed—not without reason—to the exceptionally filthy condition of her streets, which the government, with true Democratic economy, never think of cleaning. Fewer liquor licenses have been issued so far this year than last (dirty streets and liquor saloons have so close an affinity that this item seems to follow naturally on the above), but it is doubtful whether less has been drank. Reports make the total income derived from this source somewhat larger, footing up to an aggregate of $615,775. So much blood money, whose fearful interest of broken hearts and wrecked lives who shall compute?

The secular papers are having a good deal to say just now about "Sunday-school politics," which, though the expression is used mainly as a slur, may be considered a hopeful sign of the times. I only wish there could be more politics in the Sunday-school, and the result would naturally follow that there would be more of the Sunday-school in politics. Either too many Sunday-school teachers are not themselves sufficiently posted on the great moral questions of the day to instruct their pupils on the one all-important point, What does the Bible say about these things? or else there is the same foolish fear of introducing politics into a Sunday-school class which many ministers have of introducing them into the pulpit. But what better place than the Sunday-school, unless it be the family, to teach our future voters the need of national righteousness and the bearing which the divine Providence and laws as revealed in God's dealings with the Jewish people have on our American nation? Too often the whole time is frittered away on mere questions of geography or casuistry, leaving the sphere of practical morals and vital religion untouched. What wonder that so many go into business life unprepared for its dangers, and with but the loosest ideas of the responsibility resting on them as American citizens!

One cannot but consider the popular choice for the second Congrrssional district of Hon. Elijah A. Morse, of Canton, as quite a signal triumph of "Sunday-school politics." In the State Legislature he has stood as the friend of every righteous measure for so long that his name has become almost synonymous with all such efforts in behalf of temperance and purity. When three or four years ago the infamous Age of Consent bill was pending at our capitol, and the hearts of all good men and women throughout the State were throbbing with indignation, his noble championship, almost single-handed, of unprotected girlhood endeared him to the heart of every friend of justice and virtue. Let him be sent to Congress by all means, and if the women could vote he would be certain of a handsome majority. So long as such men remain in the Republican party it will have need to apologize like Charles II. for "being such an unconscionable time dying." Its roots have struck too deep into the hearts and lives of the men who have so long borne its standard to have the connection severed without a pang; and only the other day I heard a strong Prohibitionist, who had been attending the meetings at Lake Walden, confess to a considerable amount of hurt feeling at the way Gov. St. John in his speech abused the grand old party, but he ended by apologizing for him on the score that he was a Westerner! which I thought showed a high degree of political charity. And though for prohibition ever and always, I will own to a fellow-sympathy, a feeling that for us who are the sons and daughters of the Republican party filial duty rather demands that we > "Walk backward with averted gaze

than make its weakness the occasion for ridicule.

Campaign flags are being everywhere flung to the breeze to stand their chance of being torn into strips by the summer gales, which are no respecters of party and sometimes play queer freaks, as once during the Presidential term of Franklin Pierce, who was on a visit to his native home, and at the very point when he was passing under a magnificent American flag a gust of wind struck the stars and stripes and tore them into ribbons over his head. The incident excited much superstitious terror in the mind of Pierce, and it is said that he nearly fell from his horse at the portentous spectacle. Morally and politically he was a nonentity, but no President unless it was Buchanan worked more mischief, for by his weakness and pussilanimity he did quite as much as the latter to help on the plans of the Secession leaders.

A correspondent whose strength seems to lie in antiquarian researches writes to the Nation a little entertaining gossip regarding Justin Parsons, or "Father Parsons" as he was familiarly called, the grandfather of Levi P. Morton, the Republican candidate for Vice President. He was nearly fifty years of age when he studied for the ministry, and from 1813-31 preached for the united churches of Pittsfield and Stockbridge, towns in Vermont whose total population did not then exceed 596 souls, receiving very meagre salary, but like many of those primitive New England ministers he knew how to make money in other ways than by his calling, and died a nonagenarian who must have been possessed of much of this world's wealth, as he is said to have been one of the principal benefactors of Oberlin. When he brought his wife as a bride to his home in Goshen, Mass., there was a custom of warning all new comers out of town, lest they should get a legal settlement and so the town be obliged to maintain them in case they became paupers; and as Mr. Parsons was then constable it became his duty by a posted paper and crying aloud in church to warn his wife "that she reside in said town no longer." And this he actually did, receiving twelve shillings as his fee.

It is not to be supposed that the readers of the Cynosure habitually take much interest in fashion notes, but that erratic dame has recently decreed for a new style of tea-gown a garment modelled from the Egyptian abaya, the dress worn by Egyptian women. It is not likely that it will be anything more than a passing freak, for judging from descriptions of it it is like the Spanish mantilla, impossible to wear gracefully except by "one to the manner born." But it strikes one with a peculiar sensation to think of the mysterious land of the Nile, of the Sphinx and the pyramids, land of unknown dynasties, of Joseph and Moses, of Sesostris and Cleopatra, at last contributing to the world—a new fashion in tea-gowns. REFORM NEWS.

JOTTINGS BY THE WAY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The extreme heat of these July days has had a depressing influence on mental, as well as physical activity, and though I have kept at work I have had little to say to your readers. The rains that last year were withholden are now poured out without stint in Central Illinois, and while all vegetation has had a most rapid growth, the culture of the corn crop especially has been materially interfered with, and some pieces will be ruined. The work, too, in the harvest, is greatly hindered, and much loss will result. Nevertheless it is a beautiful year. Never did the grass grow more magnificently, nor were oats ever such a beautiful crop. Wheat, which for twenty years has been little grown in this part of Illinois, has for several years increased in acreage and productiveness. I have not for many years seen such fine crops as at present.

The great moral harvest makes an unequal progress. The evangelical churches, whose mission it should be to develop and mould the convictions of the people, are not, in the rural districts, keeping pace with the growth in wealth and numbers. In many places they scarcely hold their own. There has been a large influx of foreigners, with much of irreligion and more of perverted religion.

In the cities the churches seem to grow, but in the smaller towns they seem often to struggle for life. Their ministers are apologetic rather than aggressive, and "Ingersollism" is often bold and blatant; though, perhaps, less so than heretofore. Because the watchmen on the walls have so often seen the sword come and warned not the people they have suffered the consequences that were inevitable. Had the testimony given by Pres. Finney and others on the lodge system twenty years ago been heeded by the Christian ministry of Illinois there would have been a far different state of things from what we now see.

Nevertheless "there are a few names even in Sardis that have not defiled their garments." The outlook is not hopeless. The temperance reform has made a most substantial progress. Most of the ministers are fairly earnest, and some are brave in this matter. The Prohibition movement has hosts of friends, and will never go backward. The Masonic system has lost its attractions for the ministry. They have mainly ceased to love, but not altogether ceased to fear the great modern abomination. The unchristian character of the Masonic system is much more generally admitted than it was ten years ago. Our discussion has not been lost. Like the rain and the dew from heaven that waters the earth, it is in the minds of the people, and will ere long bear fruit unto righteousness. When once the saloon question is settled, as ere long it must be, then the lodge system will be arraigned for trial, condemned and executed. That such a body as the locomotive engineers should, as seems probable, be implicated in deeds as atrocious as those of the anarchists, will surprise some and open the eyes of many to the great danger of all secret combinations.

I have found the old stand-bys all earnest and faithful. All are interested in our work in the South and disposed to help in establishing a district head-quarters in New Orleans. I have given one sermon and one lecture since I left Chicago, both of which were well attended, and in both the principles of our reform were insisted on. The down-pour of yesterday prevented a farther hearing. There is a great field for our reform in all the central counties of this State, and I hope that after the presidential election we shall have an agent in the field. Yours for Christ, H. H. HINMAN.

COLPORTEUR NOTES.

BELOIT, Wis., July 12, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In the two weeks we have been in the work we have visited twelve towns, beginning at Elgin; have scattered tracts, spoken at the prayer meetings, and have secured sixty-four subscriptions for the Cynosure. In the pleasant villages of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin we find many well-wishers and co-workers. There are also the gaping crowds, well decked with badges and charms, who receive us at the depots, read the titles of our leaflets, ask if we are from that "crank college," and having relieved themselves of a gross amount of saliva, freighted with nicotine and cabbage leaves, advise us to do something good and not "try to force a lot of lies on their people."

The program for a visit to a fraternity house is something like this: A quick, nervous rap by a youthful Anti-mason. Door opens and the youth is given the soft chair by the bay-window. Gentleman comes good-naturedly in.

"Good morning, sir, what can I do for you?"

"I am working in the interests of the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, distributing tracts [gentle shower of "Selling Dead Horses," "Masonic Oaths Null and Void," "Freemasonry in the Family," "The Voice of the Empire State," etc], talking with the people and taking subscriptions for the Christian Cynosure. And knowing you to be an influential citizen, interested in all good works, I have called to lay the matter before you."

A storm arises, gathers and bursts. The atmosphere changes. The thermometer suddenly drops. A brief interview on the point at issue follows. Last words of the gentleman: "Well, I didn't think nobody was so ignorant."

Trusting that some of the seed we sow may find fertile soil and not all be cast by the wayside, or in stony places, I am yours for Christ and reform.

J. W. FIFIELD.

MARION, IND., JULY 13, '88.—In Fairmount our discussion caused quite a little excitement and street debate. The latter I regard as the best fruits of our work. The cause has some strong, able friends, old and young, in that place. We would have spoken again in that place if the Wesleyan revival meetings had not begun so soon. We secured a local agent there for the Cynosure, Mr. J. Hester, who is pastor of the Wesleyan church and a very able, thorough Christian gentleman. He will doubtless prove a true friend and successful worker in the cause.

We stayed with J. Howell of Jonesboro last night. To-night we stay with Jacob Ring To oppose secret orders in this place means business. Masonry is in complete power. Churches, municipal offices, etc., are controlled by the order. Our course here is uncertain. We cannot get room or audience for speaking. Pastors glory in their secret orders, and one, Mr. Neal, has written a poem to ridicule the "antis" and flaunt their name. We shall canvass all the railroad towns of the county.

F. L. JOHNSTON.

BACK IN NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, July 7th, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSUAE:—The secret empire seems to be using every opportunity to make proselytes. I met a prominent secretist and a reader of the Cynosure. I asked him to renew. He refused and began to charge us with injustice in accusing secretists. But after I begun to go through certain processes of initiation and blindfolding, he was forced to acknowledge the truth. Another prominent Odd-fellow and Baptist preacher invited me to his house and got a lot of his secret books and allowed me to examine certain things in them, but not the particulars nor the Scriptural quotations. He said, "You are wrong, my brother, to fight against the lodge, for it is founded on the Bible. God himself advised the plan of the order." He referred me to a number of Scriptures to justify his lodge. But the brother didn't allow me to examine these passages of Scripture from his ritual.

I called on Bro. Jackson and found him yet firm and unchanged. Bro. Green has gone to Richmond, Va., to visit relatives, and there are two young secretists in his church, who have circulated all kind of reports about Bro. Green, and have tried to upset the church. I preached for his people Sabbath evening and gave the secretists a blow. Loud and many were the Amens. After services the deacon and others came up and said, "Your sermon has uncovered somebody here to-night." I met a lady today to whom I gave a tract before I left the city. She said her husband was going to join the Odd fellows, but since he read that paper he has given up the idea. Praise the Lord for the saving of that man from lodge grips! A secretist said to me, "Where is dat paper printed? I'se g'win ter sue dat press for printin' my name." I advised him to go home and be quiet.

I have received a letter stating that Bro. George W. Clark has been charged by some malicious party in Texas as working against the Prohibition, and in favor of the old Republican party; but let me say right here, all such statements are unfounded, and I am sure could not bear examination. I am inclined to think that the gentleman who makes the charges is unequally yoked and bound by a lodge oath to conceal and never reveal under no less a penalty than that of having his throat cut and his tongue torn out by the roots. Hence Bro. Clark's radicalism against lodgery, rum, etc., awakes him from his secret place. I lectured Thursday night at Shiloh

Baptist church, and am to preach Sabbath at 7:30 P. M. at Pleasant Plain M. E. church, Rev. T. J. Johnson, pastor. F. J. DAVIDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LET WOMEN REFLECT.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rob. Morris, Knight Templar and Poet Laureate of Masonry, has written a book called "Lights and Shadows of Freemasonry." On page 94, in an address, he speaks of females and their connection with the Masonic order. Referring to the plan of adoption patronized by Josephine, wife of Napoleon, when he was First Consul, Morris says:

"Nor can any insurmountable objection be urged why the fair sex should not participate in the privileges and share the pleasures of this kind of association. If it be a claim to possess physical weakness; if gentleness in retirement and dependence in society call for that aid which mutual associations guarantee, surely the female portion of mankind, of all the world, stand upon this footing.

"I would not be misunderstood. I do not ask that the doors of our chartered lodges should be thrown open to females. The very terms of admission, the preparation and the reception, forbid the Mason granting such a privilege to women, however exalted or deserving. Whatever key to the world's mysteries and to life's treasure may be extended to her, the key to the lodge-room is eternally denied her. Its doors are eternally barricaded against her entrance. Her light footstep may thrill upon our hearts, but we must hear it outside the door. Her soft voice may arouse passionate emotions within us as she pleads for aid, outside the door. The sunshine of her presence may and shall penetrate our walls, and warm our hearts in charity as she shines upon us, outside the door. But her sphere is in the heavens, ours within the lodge, and though her light and warmth may reach us, her form cannot enter. Then ask not, sweet voice, for we cannot grant this boon. Seek not, dear form, for you never can pass these portals. Knock not, soft hands, for our inexorable guardian is steeled against your approach. Disgraced amongst the world's holiest, and traitors to the highest sense of obligation, we should be as unworthy your notice as of the companionship of our own brethren, were we thus to betray our trust."

Now, are not these fine sentiments from those who say Masonry is the handmaid of religion? So much light and purity, and yet no woman dare enter! Now, I do not think a pure woman wants to be a Mason; so Rob. need not give himself any trouble. No man like Morris can ever enter heaven till forgiven of all such wickedness.

On page 37 of "Lights and Shadows" is a short article on the Eastern Star degree, which I think every woman who thinks anything of herself should read. Here Morris says, "This degree was introduced in this country by French officers who assisted us in our struggle for liberty."

But some writer in the Masonic Review, September, 1884, page 110, says Rob. created it himself. See how he fibs! If any one wants to read anything dictated by Satan himself, let them read "Lights and Shadows." He says that upon the Eastern Star foundation stand the following pillars: "To be true; to be aiding; to be counseling; to be loving; to be secret; to be the servant of Jesus Christ." Now we all know if we would be Christ's servants we cannot be secretists. Jesus had no secrets.

COLPORTEUR WORK FOR THE NATION.

UNIONVILLE, MO.

DEAR EDITORS:—I have always done all I could for the spread of the Cynosure and the cause of reform, and but too much for my own good financially. The Masons have directly and indirectly occasioned me a loss of nearly seven thousand dollars, and imprisoned one of my sons for over three years. There is a great spirit among the people here for freedom, but the Masons have so acted that those opposed to them are afraid to open their mouths, or to be caught in each other's company, for fear some one shall see them and report to the lodge, and they will suffer as I have. So you see they are completely Masonized here. But if I had a few of your tracts I could do something yet. I shall try; that is all I can promise.

I wish to make a little suggestion, which I think can be made to work. It is to select persons well educated and thoroughly posted on secret societies and their mode of work, and sufficiently filled with the Holy Ghost to make an impression on the people, and send two together, and let them spend two weeks in each county throughout the United States. Their work, with such other papers and workers they could influence—the Prohibition movement and the aid of the Women's Christian Temperance Union—carried on with energy and faith, would greatly influence the next election. R. A. CULLOR.

THE REPUBLICAN RESOLUTION.

MARYVILLE, MO.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been called a prophet. I claim not to be even the son of a prophet. Less than four years ago, at the time the American people for a little season could not tell which of the old parties was successful, I did say that in my opinion whichever party it should be was the unfortunate party. It then seemed to me that party would remain in power eight years; then retire for good. By that time enough of the other party would get their eyes open to join the reformers in the field, and take America for God on the question of prohibition. From some cause I remain of the same opinion.

I said a few months ago the Democrats would renominate Mr. Cleveland; the Republicans would put a new man in the field, and pass a temperance resolution outside of their platform to catch prohibition votes. This hitting the nail on the head is what makes some men think I am a prophet.

As I close this short article, prophet or no prophet, I must prophesy once more:

1. All true Republicans may thank God for this grand resolution. Let me tell you how this resolution will work. "It is the little one that shall become a thousand; it is the small one that shall become a strong nation." See Isa. 60: 22.

2. The strong-drink Republicans will curse the day that resolution was passed. They cannot change it now. The true temperance element (if it can be found in the Republican party) have now a wide door open to come over on the Lord's side, on the prohibition question, and carry out in detail the glorious principles of this little and (as it was thought) harmless resolution.

3. This resolution will surely prove the most effectual blow of any the old party has had for the past four years to bring it to "a wise and well-difected class of efforts for the promotion of temperance," etc.

4. This can only be done in one way—just simply to carry out this little resolution; and do it at once. Just exactly what they said. "The first concern is the virtue and sobriety of the people and the purity of the home." Hence, the first thing to be done is to stop this wholesale slaughter of the American people by this rum fiend. No use to ask how. All men worthy of a home among us know this can be done, if the people want it done! This resolution says it should be done first, and the "Republican party cordially sympathizes with a wise and well-directed effort." That is business.

5. Let us test every man by this "resolution." I intend to begin at once. No time to lose. If the majority did not mean what they said, let those who did come over on the side of the resolution and vote for prohibition.

6. Can you not see, dear reformers, how God can over-rule this matter for the good of the people, even if the motive in passing it was not sound?

Let us make good use of the sling and the stones so long as this great man of sin is within reach. Yours till after its death by a United States law.

R. SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

A VETERAN.

I have had the Cynosure from the first number, and it will be the last earthly good I shall give up. I am 86 years old.—JOSIAH SHAW, Durand, Wis.

THE HIGH-LOW TARIFF PROHIBITION PLANK.

I see in the Union Signal that there is an omission in the fifth resolution of the Prohibition platform as passed at the convention. The Indianapolis papers left off the four last lines, stopping at a comma, and so omitted a very important part of that resolution. And such as have only seen the abridged form are dissatisfied on account of its leaving the producer without protection. I see that the Voice has made the same omission, and I have just written to them. The New Era and the Iowa papers, so far as I have seen them, have full resolution as passed.—DAVID TATUM, Cleveland, Ohio.

NOTE.—The protection supplement to the tariff plank was not fairly discussed. Had it been, there would have been a greater division of opinion than over W. T. Mills's efforts against suffrage which had a vote of 28 to 1,000 against. The Cynosure printed the whole resolution, but in such a way that our readers could understand the character of the added portion.

AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

HOW IT IS ENDORSED.

Elder Isaac Bancroft: "I want my name registered among the number that never, if I know it, vote for any officer of any kind that belongs to a secret society."

Rev. C. F. Hawley: "I like the plan you have published in the Cynosure, of encouraging men to be Christian mugwumps in politics."

"I, Cornelius Denham, do depose and say that for fifteen years I have not voted for a lodge tainted candidate, large or small, knowing them to be such, and propose never to do so. I am an anti-lodge prohibitionist."

Elder A. D. Freeman: "I want to say that I cannot conscientiously vote for a man for any office who is an adhering member of any secret society, either civil or ecclesiastical."

A. C. Bundy: "Such has been my ticket for the last eight years: to vote for no one for any responsible office that belongs to any secret society."

H. Siemiller: "Count me as one that will never vote for a secret-society man for office in church or state, knowingly."

J. D. Frick: "You may put me down on the Anti-Secret League. I settled that question last winter, and if I can't get a chance to vote for men that are not oath-bound to secretism, then I will not vote at all."

Rev. M. W. Jordan: "I have always been anti slavery, liquor, tobacco and secret societies."

Frederick Byrer: "I am one that will not vote for a man that belongs to any secret society and have not for a number of years."

J. R. Alcock: "Enroll me as a voting member of the Anti-Secrecy League."

M. L. Worcester: "I hope to hear that the Prohibition party is solid on the anti-lodge matter."

Jacob Ring, voter; Susan Ring, non-voter: "We two are willing, yea, more than willing, to make it a rule not to vote for any lodge men for office."

LITERATURE.

THE LAND OF THE PUEBLOS. By Susan E. Wallace. Pp. 285. Price 75 cents. John B. Alden. New York.

To our fragmentary knowledge of the Pueblo tribes of New Mexico and Arizona very much was added a few years ago by the sensational accounts of the Zuni tribe given by Frank Cushing, and by the visit of a deputation of the tribe to Washington and Boston. It was before this date that General Lew Wallace was appointed Governor of New Mexico, and his wife had the opportunity of collecting the material for this entertaining volume. If the author of "Ben Hur" deserves the popularity which that work has brought him, Mrs. Wallace, in this and her other volumes, proves herself worthy to stand by his side and share his laurels. She is a bright and entertaining writer and this volume will add to her reputation. It does not profess to be a history of the strange natives of our Southern Territories. No one is able to write that and it may never be written. Nor does it purpose an exhaustive description of the country, which might prove as dry as its climate. It is rather a charmingly written account of observations taken upon the spot, intermingled with enough of the mysterious history of the natives and the brief records of the Spanish invaders of three centuries ago, of which just enough remain to give a most romantic color to their story. There is no part of the earth so shrouded in mystery, not even Egypt, as the region of the Pueblos, and the story of their ancient civilization, of which we have some record in their strange and ruined cities, seems to be forever lost. Mrs. Wallace found among them, as did Cushing, unmistakable traces of secret lodge worship. Cushing, who was a Mason, and could therefore join the tribe and take its initiatory oaths without a qualm, said these ceremonies resembled the Masonic. Mrs. Wallace tells of the underground rooms, which are used for religious and political purposes, into which women are not admitted, and where the mysterious fires are never allowed to go out. In referring to the mystic lodges "which date back to the days of King Solomon" she writes like the wife of an ignorant and bombastic Masonic orator. But as General Wallace has never appeared in so dishonorable a role, it must be his wife simply accepts a Masonic lie for a fact and makes no investigation. If the other statements of the volume were no more accurate it would be worthless.

A portrait of Dr. Samuel Johnson, from the portrait by Sir Joshua Reynolds in the National Gallery, forms the frontispiece in the July English Magazine. Of the illustrated articles, the second part of C. F. Gordon Cumming's interesting investigations into the religious customs of the Asiatic nations continues the interest aroused by the first number. He continues to follow the subject of "Pagodas, Aureoles and Umbrellas," and his inquiries are illustrated by drawings made by himself. Prof. Minto's story of the Wat Tyler rebellion and its high-tax causes continues with undimished interest.

This hot weather prompts one to flee from the sun's rays and seek the fresh air and cooling breezes beneath the roofs that were first known to man, that is to say, under the trees. In the July number of the American Garden are bright and timely articles on the tree question, and company out-of-doors, which covers this ground in delightful fashion with fact and fancy that the only true way to live in clear weather in summer time is in this "house not made with hands," surrounded with trees, shrubs and flowers, upon the cool, green carpet underneath. This magazine is a pleasant thing for summer reading, and we can highly recommend it to practical people for its valuable information on gardening topics.

The London Illustrated News has lately been giving attention to the Panama canal, and its June 31 and July 7 numbers have numerous illustrations which enable the reader to understand much of the prodigious difficulty of the work and something of its progress.

Thomas A. Edison, the great inventor, has a fine portrait in the Swiss Cross for July with a short sketch of his remarkable life. "A History of Almanacs" has illustrations of a church calendar of the 14th century and the well known Mexican calendar stone, with an interesting account of the singular methods of former generations in reckoning time. A curious letter on "Hawks and Hydrophobia" will suggest strange ideas respecting this singularly fatal and little understood disease.

Vick's Magazine reminds us that "cherries are ripe," and in its talk about flavor and quality in fruits makes us wish to taste and decide for ourselves. The flower notes are as full and fresh as a "posy bed" after a refreshing shower.

OBITUARY.

DAVID TUTTLE died at his residence in Roseville, Ill., on the morning of Thursday, Jan. 19, 1888.

He was born in Greene county, Penn., Oct. 13th, 1800, and was consequently aged at the time of his decease, 87 years, 3 months and 6 days. In 1824 he married Miss Elizabeth Axtell, by whom were born to him four children, three of whom survive him. In the fall of 1850 he, with his family, moved to this State, settling near Roseville. In 1853 his wife died, and in 1854 he married Mrs. Philena E. Young, by whom were born to him two children, both of whom are deceased. He was the eighth child of ten, and lived to see children of the third generation, having at the time of his death three children, twelve grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren.

In 1825 he united with the Presbyterian church, and as a Christian man was singularly characterized by his fidelity to his convictions of right. The practice of sacrificing principle at the shrine of policy he loathed, and, even at the risk of appearing impolite, shrank not from denouncing what he conceived to be wrong and advocating what he deemed to be right.

Having this character he could not fail to fall upon the lodge when it came in his way, and he was well known for his Christian opposition to its iniquities. He loved to read the Cynosure and contributed to the funds of the National Christian Association. He sometimes subscribed for several copies of the paper for others. He was, says a friend, a man more devoted to his Bible than any other I ever knew, and next to the Bible he seemed to enjoy the Cynosure. It became his frequent theme in conversation to speak of Bible topics in connection with anti-secrecy, tobacco and intoxicants. He was also an earnest Prohibitionist, voting the ticket first for St. John in 1884 Through all the rebuffs of lodge men he kept cheerful and sweet tempered beyond the power of most men. In 1880 he distributed a great many American party tickets, and on election day entreated men to vote for God. He dared to stand alone and advocate the right; and, no doubt, in God's sight his one vote counted more than all the rest. Others learned to admire the courage he displayed, and it was the means of drawing many conscientious persons to him In 1884 twenty-one votes were recorded for Prohibition, mostly through the earnest efforts of Father Tuttle.

In his last illness, when he came to realize that his earthly pilgrimage was almost over, he seemed to rejoice in the fact, and praised God for keeping him steadfast to the end. His spirit passed beyond without a struggle, in perfect peace and happiness.

The funeral services were held in the Congregational church, and Rev. Geo. Peebles, pastor of the church, paid a high tribute to the deceased, as a man who, even in these days of moral vacillation and compromise, dared, in defense of principle, to be a Daniel.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. LEONARD BACON, D. D.—Wishing you good success in your war against secret societies.

REV. B. P. AYDELDOTTE, D.D., former president of Woodward College, O., (a renouncing Mason):—Freemasonry is a lie all over.

ALBERT BARNES, 1849:—Any good cause, I think, can be promoted openly; any secret association is liable, at least, to abuse and danger.

REV. JUSTIN EDWARDS, D D., author and head of Andover Seminary:—Whenever the cause of temperance is veiled in darkness and secrecy, it must lose its hold on the public confidence and sympathy.

REV. M. BENNETT, long presiding elder M. E. church—I am pleased to be counted in for the movement which is being inaugurated against tyrannical organizations and factitious distinctions in society.

DR. THOMAS SCOTT, the great commentator:—Rash oaths are above all things to be avoided; but if men are entangled by them, they ought rather to infringe the sinful oaths than to add sin to sin and ruin to their own souls.

REV. J. C. K MILLIGAN, editor of "Our Banner:"—Through such silence, secret connivance and horrid oaths "ever to conceal and never reveal," the state of our country is rapidly becoming such as to alarm every Christian philanthropist.

REV. B. T. ROBERTS, editor of the Free Methodist:—For us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ.

JOSEPH COOK:—I do abhor the selfish, clannish spirit of secret societies.

WILLIAM OTTERBEIN, founder of the church of the United Brethren in Christ:—A Freemason cannot be a Christian.

BISHOP WARBURTON:—Each of the heathen gods, beside the worship paid to him in public, had a secret worship to which none were admitted but those who were prepared by previous ceremonies.

RICHARD S. STORRS, D. D., pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn—My judgment and feeling are both strongly opposed to the secret lodge system. I heartily agree with what Dr. Howard Crosby has so forcibly said about it.

CARDINAL MCCABE, Dublin:—Secret societies, which seem to possess a fatal charm for our people, have from time to time drawn thousands of misguided youths within the fatal circle from which there is no escape.

REV. LEBBEUS ARMSTRONG:—Among the various stratagems of Satan in opposition to God and holiness, and for the purpose of destroying the souls of men, the institution of speculative Freemasonry holds a pre eminent rank.

HENRY G. LUDLOW, pastor Spring St. Presbyterian Church, New York, 1829:—I can hardly think that any candid and intelligent Master Mason can seriously assert that Masonry should be kept up. For my own part I have ever been disgusted with its nonsensical ceremonies, and ashamed of myself for submitting to them.

GEORGE F. PENTECOST, D, D., pastor of Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn, editor of "Words and Weapons."—I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the "grip" of Masonry and all other secret and unchristian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence.

H. L. HASTINGS.—Freemasonry is the one institution of this country that will not bear investigation. Schools are inspected; churches throw their doors open and invite the strictest scrutiny; political parties are examined, searched and riddled if anything like corruptness is seen or suspected in connection with them; all these institutions simply ask a fair field and no favor.

REV. J. E. ROY, D. D., Secretary American Missionary Association:—A man is not fit to be a juryman who has taken these Masonic oaths and holds to them. Such a man is not competent to be a constable or a justice of the peace. He has disqualified himself practically and really, for he has by these oaths perjured himself for the one side or the other, and so is unable to do justly in his official relation between man and man.

REV. JAMES H. BROOKES, D. D, editor of the "Truth," and pastor of Washington Avenue Presbyterian church, St Louis:—It would give me pleasure to aid you in your work of seeking to bring Christians out from entangling alliances with secret societies. It seems to me that the positive injunction of the Holy Ghost, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," applies particularly to those disciples of our Lord who have been led into such societies.

THE BISHOP OF BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND:—Freemasonry is built upon the basis of a natural religion having for its foundation the honor and worship of the Supreme Architect of the Universe, but excluding the divine Incarnation and the mysteries of human redemption. Whilst using the sacred Scriptures, as Freemasonry it ignores the divine doctrines of the Christian faith. Pretending to a special and progressive illumination, it resembles, and through several of its writers even claims descent from the secret societies of Pagan Egypt, Greece and Samothrace.

REV. HENRY JONES:—On what then does the whole superstructure of Freemasonry rest but a base fabrication of wicked men, who in some dark and apostate age of the world, have risen up, united into a secret society and darkly handed down their inventions to flatter us to believe that their institution is good as having originated among wise and good men; and being ignorant of the manner in which their false pretensions would be exposed, have told us that it was established on certain specified facts and events, which by looking at them carefully, and comparing them with our Bible, we find never had existence?

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1888

A LETTER FROM MR. CAPWELL confirms the rumor which we gave last week, that the Prohibition convention at Syracuse nominated a Masonic propagandist and founder of lodges for Governor. Such a man is unfit to be voted for by any but slaves, or to govern a free people. A convention should be called and a worthy man nominated. A citizen of Mexico might be ignorant, but a citizen of the State of William H. Seward, Gerrit Smith and David Bernard knows that Masonry is a murderess, or, in the words of Robert J. Breckenridge, he "has simply no moral sense." By all means the Masonic record of the Syracuse candidate should be made known through all our papers, and a good man nominated at once to receive the votes of American citizens. No large convention is necessary to make this nomination. An electoral ticket is a more complex and difficult thing to achieve. But the vote for Governor is direct, and every man can write and deposit his own ballot.

LAKE BLUFF, which aspires to be a Northwestern Chautauqua, occupies a beautiful wooded site overlooking Lake Michigan, a few miles beyond the beautiful city of Evanston. Mr Hobbs, late Prohibition candidate for Governor of Illinois, is a chief proprietor and promoter of the place; and he is opposed to both liquor and the lodge. But the unpleasant news reaches us that Walter T. Mills is reporting that Miss Willard this year introduced and carried a resolution through the committee of arrangements forbidding the discussion of secret societies at that place! We fervently hope Mr. Mills is mistaken. He is a man little of stature, with large self-esteem, and may possibly resent the snubbing he received at the great convention at Indianapolis, where he asked two hours for the opposers of woman suffrage, and received permission to speak five minutes. But we dislike to think him capable of falsifying and misrepresentation. But how Miss Willard can say to the public, "I am opposed to secret societies," as she has more than once done, and yet strangle all discussion in the Lake Bluff Assembly of a theme on which she gives her sentiments to the public, is hard to be accounted for. Last year she allowed a long lank defense of a secret order by a weak doctor of divinity; and if now in committee she is strangling the utterance of her own professed opposition to secret orders, she must be forfeiting her own self-respect. We hope Mr. Mills is mistaken, not malicious.

GOOD TEMPLARS AND THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

J. W. Haggard has issued a pamphlet "History of the Prohibition Party," whose cover contains a pictorial advertisement of "Good Templars' regalia." From this pamphlet and from Dr. Jutkins's handbook we learn that "The Illinois Grand Lodge of Good Templars," Sept. 15, 1868, resolved, "That after the close of the present Presidential campaign we will, in our respective localities proceed as early as practicable to the organization of a party upon the principles of total abstinence and prohibition, looking ultimately to a State and national organization." This singular resolution, that somebody should do something in future, seems never to have been carried out.

Next year, September, 1869, a convention met at Chicago "for the purpose of organizing for district political action for temperance." The call for this convention runs thus:

"All churches, Sunday-schools and temperance societies of all names are requested to send delegates, and all persons favorable to this movement are invited to meet at the time and place above stated."

Secret lodges, as such, are not named in the call to this or any other convention which assembled to form a Prohibition party. On the contrary, the names of such lodges were omitted, while churches and Sabbath-schools are inserted in the call. All the conventions preceding the organization of the Prohibition party, up to the great convention in Farwell Hall, Chicago, where "the Home Protection" and "the National Prohibition party" were united Aug. 23, 1882, were open conventions. Any attempt to conceal any part of the proceedings from any part of the temperance people would have been fatal to the object.

It is well known to all readers of the public press that Good Templar lodges, as a rule, adhered to the old parties. In Wisconsin, especially, the lodge opposition to a third or Prohibition party was bitter and constant; and as late as 1884, during the St. John movement, a motion was made, and nearly carried, in the New York State Grand Lodge of Good Templars, disapproving of a third party and the support of St. John. The Dakota Grand Lodge have lately been reported as opposed to the Prohibition party.

In the face of these facts, to put forward the Good Templars as founders of the Prohibition party is a piece of arrogant effrontery peculiar to the worshipers of the usurping "god of this world." The pretense that a Good Templars' lodge conceals nothing which it concerns the Prohibitionists to know is absurd and false. The lodge professes to be seeking the prohibition of liquor by the agency of men; and the Prohibition party seeks the same end by the same agency. Why then should the one conceal its meetings and methods from the other? Such an attempt by one part of a family or business firm would be regarded, and justly, a fraud upon the whole. But to add to concealment a solemn pompous ritual, which is religious worship, and degrees, rising one above another, the upper pledged to conceal from the lower, thus putting into the hands of a few persons the control of the whole, gives the lodge the stamp of a clan or society of brigands rather than of a republican society of equals. And the apology of Miss Willard and others, that the secrets are few and trivial, limited to the password and ceremonies, but aggravates the condemnation of the lodge. If the secrets are so trivial, why insult their associates in the temperance work by keeping them up? But that which Christ forbade by his example and precept is not trivial. And the tenacity of the lodges in clinging to them shows that they do not regard them as trifles. And we are right in withholding our ballots from those who withhold their confidence from us.

THE ORANGEMEN.

This political secret society was formed in North Ireland in 1795, seven years short of a century ago. James II., "the simpleton who lost three kingdoms for a mass," had fled to France, and William, Prince of Orange, was king. From the time of Cromwell Ireland had been a sea surging with the bloody billows of faction. Papists had murdered Protestants till William rode into the Boyne, July 1, 1690, saying, as the song goes:

"God must be our King this day,"
And I'll be General under."

That battle turned the scale, and Protestants repaid the Papists, blood for blood, as only Irishmen made savage by religious faction could. The Ribbon-men wore green badges; the Protestants, orange;

"And they hung both men and women
For the wearing of the green."

When neighbors had butchered neighbors for one hundred and five years "The Loyal Orange Institution," which was a Masonic lodge with an Irish name, undertook to protect the Protestants against the Ribbon-men, and they have embittered the quarrel ever since, even down to Gladstone and Parnell. The streets of Belfast have run blood, shed by Orangemen against Gladstone and "Home Rule."

But, like all secret lodges, the Orange lodge has a nature and an object of its own. It is an idolatrous religion with degrees, oaths, ceremonies and obligations borrowed and modified from Masonry. Hence, it has spread over the globe where people know and care nothing about the original Irish quarrel in which it started. It was dissolved by English authority in 1836, but came to life again, as did Masonry in this country, after a short lapse of nine years; and it is now initiating, deceiving, taxing and governing multitudes in the Canadas and elsewhere; stultifying the masses by the sorcery of its false worship, and enriching its leaders by their dues and degree fees.

Such is the Orange lodge whose exploit the Cynosure noticed last week. It seems that these lodges, like the Knight Templars, have adopted the trick of asking ministers to preach them a sermon; and as the denominational organs, as a rule, shun all lodges and keep their people in ignorance, the pastor of the South Congregational church, Chicago, consented to their wishes; and this Chicago lodge met at their secret lodge-room on Sabbath morning, expecting to march to Dr. Williams's church behind a band of music; strutting in regalia and fluttering in Orange ribbons; to excite the curiosity of quidnuncs; draw a multitude of boys from their Sabbath-schools; advertise their useless trumpery; and defeat the worship of a Christian congregation by sitting in a body and listening to a sermon which they value as highly as monkeys do the music of a circus.

But lo! a disappointment! The South Congregational church is unwilling to be turned into a menagerie, and the lodge is notified that their presence is not wanted. In vexation and wrath they post a messenger off to Rev. J. M. Caldwell, of the Oakland avenue Methodist church, who promises them a sermon on the next Sabbath to allay their thirst for a preaching pastime and help them keep up a heathen fanfarorade in a Christian country.

CLEAN-HANDED PROHIBITION.

Events are working in the providence of God for the separation of a righteous principle and an iniquitous system. One of the most active speakers, who has traveled in all parts of the country advocating prohibition, very positively asserts from his own observation more Prohibitionists oppose the lodge than favor woman suffrage. From the vote at Indianapolis, 1,000 to 28 for the latter, the anti-secrecy sentiment must be nearly unanimous.

IN NEW YORK.—The nomination of W. Martin Jones of Rochester, a high Mason and Good Templar missionary, for Governor, is met with a deserved rebuke by the Wesleyan Methodist, which we reprint. The Free Methodist brethren are yet to be heard from, but we are assured they will stand for principle and will support any reasonable effort to provide a clean ticket. In 1884 we were urged to vote for Blaine by a leading member of that church, as he was not a member of a lodge; and after his defeat by some 1,500 votes it was claimed that had the Anti-masonic vote been cast for him instead of St. John, the Republican party would yet be in power. We shall at the earliest moment inform our readers of the decision of the New York brethren.

AT LAKE BLUFF.—Secretary Stoddard has written of his investment in a membership at the Lake Bluff Convocation, with the understanding that, inasmuch as secretism was given so large a place last year, there would at least be a fair discussion of the question of the benefit or injury to the temperance cause by binding upon it the burden of the lodge; and that the outrage and abuse which a so-called "Right Worthy Chief Templar" poured out unchecked would be no more allowed. He was disappointed. The Executive officers agreed there was too much powder in a lodge discussion for the quiet and rest they wished to promote at Lake Bluff. So, too, with the presentation of the principles urged by the National Reform Association. It was understood by the Secretary of the Western District that he should present this great reform. Had he been a Freemason he might perhaps have been heard. He would not at least have been opposed by the "chancellor of the school of politics," although he would have been acting the hypocrite: for no man can advocate both National Reform and the principles of Freemasonry and be honest. Bro. Gault's letter elsewhere tells its own story. We only need to add, from the report of the affair in the daily press, that Mills, like an autocrat, set aside the program prepared by the committee duly appointed for that purpose, that he might use the time for a reply to Secretary Gault, and argued against the authority of God and his Word in the nation and in politics. He also used the opportunity for an attack on the Indianapolis convention and its woman suffrage plank.

The natural effect of such mismanagement at Lake Bluff will make it a place to be shunned by all sincere Christian people. But we do not understand that the lodge is to control either that Convocation or the Prohibition party.

FOR OPEN WORK.

If Richmond, Mills and Hastings stand by their secret orders and oppose the W. C. T. U. and woman suffrage because of the natural incompatibility of the two systems, there are others who are publishing a different gospel. Dr. George P. Hayes of Cincinnati, late moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, gave the address on Independence Day, and declared himself, in the very words, FOR OPEN WORK in prohibitory politics. Prof. W. G. Frost, the Prohibitionist of the Oberlin faculty and grandson of the old Abolition editor, William Goodell, in one of his lectures on American political history quoted from the platform of the Liberty League, which, more determined in its expressions against slavery than the Liberty party, refused to vote for Birney in 1844, and nominated Gerrit Smith and our revered and honored C. C. Foote of Detroit. The last plank of their platform affirmed that no man should be permitted to hold public office who was a member of a secret society. If Prof. Frost was as much of an Abolitionist as his grandfather, or of an Anti-mason as his great instructor, Finney, he would honor that plank and its revivification by the American party and the American Anti-secrecy League.

He has our thanks for reviving this item of history, so long covered with the debris of stirring events that it seems to have been lost to this generation. The Prohibition party are naturally and constantly referring to Abolition times for their precedents. Let this one be no more forgotten.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard was last week holding special meetings with the church at Geneva, Ill. The religious interest was strong and the co operation of the church hearty.

—Miss E. E. Flagg has written another tract for W. C. T. U. readers, to inspire them with such a love for Christ's example and instruction that they shall loathe the secret lodge.

—Mr. H. M. Huguain, an old Chicago editor, has written an able pamphlet on the rise and decline of the Sons of Temperance, closing with the secret ritual of that order. The manuscript is in the hands of the N. C. A. publication committee.

—At the Cook county Prohibition meeting last week, John Culver, one of the N. C. A. auditors, and E. R. Worrell, secretary of the Board of Directors, were nominated for county commissioners, and Alexander Thomson and Wm. Morrow of the Board were made members of the county committee. Chicago politics have seldom engaged the attention of better men.

—President and Mrs. J. Blanchard were expecting as we closed this number to start for their summer campaign in Vermont on Tuesday afternoon. Through the efforts of Rev. Mr. Leach a number of appointments have been secured, and with God's blessing there is bright promise for the return of the Green Mountain State to her former place in the foremost ranks of reform.

—Rev. L. G. Jordan, our Texas correspondent, has been North for a few weeks attending the National Prohibition Convention, and speaking for that cause. He has been in Chicago some three weeks, preaching and lecturing among the colored churches. He expects very soon, under arrangement with Prof. Dickie, chairman of the National Committee, to visit Virginia, and speak for Prohibition.

—On Saturday last Mr. J. M. Hitchcock, long superintendent of the "Moody" Sabbath-school and the well-known manager of the employment bureau of the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago, performed the sad duty of laying in the grave the body of his wife. Mrs. Hitchcock has been an invalid for several years, and her sufferings have been severe, but her Christian fortitude and exemplary patience have been superior to her trials, until God has given her release from them. Her funeral was attended by a large gathering of friends, whose sympathies were kindly given to the bereaved husband and children, and with them the Cynosure would most sincerely join.

THE CENTENNIAL AT CINCINNATI.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In an address at Music Hall on the evening of the 4th, Senator Sherman gave the true import of the Cincinnati Centennial: "I wish to impress upon the good people of the city of Cincinnati, and especially upon the managers of this great Exposition, that this is not a Cincinnati Exposition; that it is not an Ohio Exposition. This is a National Exposition, provided for by the Congress of the United States, which is represented here in all departments of the Government by proper articles of exhibition, sent here under wise exhibitors, to contribute to a National Exposition.

"I felt disposed to complain of one thing to-day, and the only thing in the interesting ceremonies of this morning, and that was that the National character of this Exposition should not have been more distinctly presented to you. When we voted appropriations out of the public treasury to represent all departments of the Government to this great Exposition we intended it should be national in the same sense the Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876 was national. Cincinnati is the place for this as Philadelphia was the place for that. But the object of this Exposition is to exhibit the growth and progress and power of the Government of the United States, and not that of the State of Ohio or any particular section."

The Exposition is on a scale commensurate with the object indicated. There are eighteen miles of aisles along which visitors pass. Music Hall is carpeted in crimson—2,400 yards were required, the largest carpet in America—and illuminated with 600 incandescent electric lights. The ground was not broken for the Park Building until last October, and now lighted, decorated and illuminated, it is a marvel to all beholders. The pioneer display is attractive. The original Fort Washington, a fac simile of the original farm now occupied by this city, with its fields, fences, lanes, cabin and well-sweep; the State of Ohio in miniature, with its elevations, depressions, gas wells, rivers, etc., are interesting.

The beer display is on a costly scale, and they paid well for the privilege. As an offset to this the missionary department is making a fine exhibit of our religious progress. That may serve as a sop to the consciences of Prohibitionists who may be disturbed by the presence of so much liquor. The Art Gallery and Machinery Hall are full of interest. It is said 30,000 passed through the gates the first day.

J. M. FOSTER.

LAKE BLUFF IN 1888.

LAKE BLUFF, Ill., July 9, 1888.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After speaking at a Prohibition Convention in Wisconsin, and giving four lectures and a Fourth of July speech in Will county, Ill., I arrived here at Lake Bluff last Thursday. Mrs. Gault came the same evening, and we have settled down for a week's rest. For this purpose there are few places so inviting as Lake Bluff. At early dawn you hear the birds' concert in all its glory. The deep shade of surrounding forest, where, in some places, it seems as if, in the language of Pat, "The hand of man had never set its foot," the murmur of the waves along the shore, the rustle of the leaves and the song of the birds,—all seem to invite to rest.

The attendance is not as large as last year, owing to the absence of several speakers of national reputation. Governor St. John and Colonel George W. Bain have not put in an appearance as yet, though the latter is expected next Thursday and Friday. No speakers on the Prohibition platform draw like these men. The National W. C. T. U. School of Methods is the most interesting feature, occupying the morning hours from 9 till 12. Their various departments of work are conducted by such leaders as Miss Frances E. Willard, Miss West, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, Lelia S. Bedell, Mrs. Buell, Caroline A. Leach and Narcissa White. The other prominent speakers are Dr. Bascom, Dr. Geo. P. Hays, John A. Brooks, Samuel Dickie, Geo. W. Bain, Dr. Jutkins, Dr. Villars, Rev. Mr. McKelvey, T. C. Richmond and others.

What has kept very many away from Lake Bluff this year, and what is a serious damage to the place, is the influence of Walter Thomas Mills with his

SECULAR "SCHOOL OF POLITICS."

The speakers he has brought here join with him in advocating that the Prohibition party platform should drop the Woman Suffrage plank, the Sabbath plank, and the plank referring to God's authority in government. Mr. Hastings of Wisconsin declares that there will be a division of the party in 1892 if the Woman Suffrage plank is not dropped. These men are devoted secret-society men. Mr. Richmond of Wisconsin, in his lecture Saturday, classed the Good Templars and Legion of Honor with the church of Christ and Sabbath-school as moralizing agencies in our public life. Most of these men are doubtless Freemasons. Trained in such lodge schools, where they are taught to discriminate against women, and where they are sworn never to initiate a woman, it is no wonder they wish to discard the woman factor in politics.

THE LODGE AND THE W. C. T. U.

There is a very manifest clashing of this "school of politics" with the W. C. T. U. Mr. Mills, in conversation with me some weeks ago on the train coming down from a Wisconsin convention, expressed very bitter feelings toward the W. C. T. U., claiming that they had opposed the third party until shortly before the last Presidential election. He told me that he was in Dr. Jutkins's office when a letter came from Miss Willard requesting that my name be put on the program at Lake Bluff to present National Reform, but he said he opposed it because I was an anti-secret man.

MILLS TRIES TO WALK IN FINCH'S SHOES.

Yesterday, through the influence of the W. C. T. U. ladies here, I was asked to preach the sermon. I endeavored to show how the Bible settled the great questions in our American politics. The audience was much larger than any day previous. At the close of my sermon Mr. Mills arose and announced that he would preach a sermon in the evening not on the line of the sermon just delivered. All seemed to understand that he meant to debate my position. In the evening he lashed himself into quite a fury, declaring, in opposition to what I had stated in the morning, that the statutes of the Bible were not designed for civil government, and religion could only be brought to bear on government by its indirect influence through the citizen, and not by any formal declaration in the Constitution.

May the gracious Lord deliver us from all such "schools of politics" as Mr. Mills is trying to lead. It was expected that he would have about one hundred students here at Lake Bluff, but he has only about half a dozen, and the whole scheme is very likely to fail, as it ought to fail. Let this young man retire to Jericho, and there remain until his beard be grown. It would be his wisest course.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 12, 1888.

The visiting stranger who drops into the Senate or House gallery on one of these summer days is in imminent danger of failing to receive the imposing impression he had expected from a view of the National Legislature. There is but little spirit in the proceedings of either branch, and both Representatives and Senators, attired in something like the sportsman's toggery of loose jacket and flannel shirt, may be seen by the dozen, lounging in their chairs or on the sofas, fanning themselves vigorously. I do not mean to say that all, or even half of our lawmakers have adopted the tennis style of costume, although they would be excusable for so doing, or for appearing in any style of costume which admits of the least amount of clothing consistent with decency (not dignity). And you will fully agree with me if you have ever had any experience with that overwhelming oppressiveness that lurks in Washington air when the thermometer is careering among the nineties. One thing I notice without exception, the Congressmen who adhere to the "boiled linen" are completely wilted down at the neck and wrists.

The President goes on vetoing private pension bills, and the more he vetoes the more skillful he seems to become in the work. Every soldier will read with interest his recent message to the Senate on the subject of pension legislation, in which he says: "I cannot spell out any principle upon which the bounty of the Government is bestowed through the instrumentality of the flood of private pension bills that reach me. The theory seems to have been adopted that no man who served in the army can be the subject of death, or impaired health, except they are chargeable to his service. Medical theories are set at naught, and the most startling relation is claimed between alleged incidents of military service and disability or death. Fatal apoplexy is admitted as the result of quite insignificant wounds; heart disease is attributed to chronic diarrhœa; consumption to hernia, and suicide is traced to army service in a wonderfully devious and curious way." This is the first time that the President has entered upon so elaborate a defense of his action in vetoing so many pension bills.

The House continues to hold daily seances over the tariff, which discussion had grown a little monotonous until Saturday, when a really lively debate was sprung, showing a difference of opinion among some prominent Republican members in regard to the duty on sugar. Representative Cannon had made a proposition to reduce sugar duties one half and adopt a system of bounties for the sugar raisers instead. The venerable Mr. Kelly, of Pennsylvania, attacked with spirit this proposition, and warned his associates that bounties, as a direct encouragement to industries, never have been, and never will be sanctioned by the American people. A number of Republican members from Iowa defended Mr. Cannon's proposition, and Republican members from Kansas, with another from California, rallied boisterously around Mr. Kelly, while the Democratic Congressmen sat back and greatly enjoyed the little conflict between the Republican brethren, who generally dwell together in unity.

Mrs. Cleveland has taken command of the crusade against the wearing of bustles, and society is consequently divided into bustle and anti-bustle factions, and the feeling between the two parties is constantly growing more bitter. It is a dangerous thing which Mrs. Cleveland has undertaken, notwithstanding the fact that she is supported by all the men.

Senator Blair has succeeded in having his constitutional amendment, prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation or sale of all alcoholic liquor as a beverage in the United States, favorably reported. This is only the beginning of the struggle. There will be bitter battles before it is adopted by Congress. When it passes that body, this amendment will be submitted to the several States.

THE HOME.

BE AT PEACE.

"Be at peace!"
Life is but a transient lease,
Never long enough for hate,
Sharp contention or debate,
In the land to which we're going,
Just beyond the river flowing,
We are told the dwellers never
Through the long and bright forever
Know a tumult or a jar,—
Life is tranquil as a star;
On his height
Sits the King of Peace in light.

"Be at peace!"
Lo, the angry billows cease,
When the Master cometh near,
Turning back the storm in fear;
Let him hold his sceptre o'er thee,
As his banner goes before thee;
Follow thou with high endeavor
To the hills of joy forever;
With thy comrades on the way
Weep and suffer, work and pray;
Peace descends
On all true abiding friends.

"Be at peace!"
Comes a time with long increase,
When the nations shall unite
On the broader field of light;
We are on our journey thither,
Let us live in peace together;
In the temple, glory-lighted,
With our comrades re-united,
Oh, it will be sweet to know
Heaven with us began below!
Peace is best!
Earnest of eternal rest. —D. Williams.

THE INDIAN DANCE.

In Mr. Henry S. Wellcome's most interesting volume, "The Story of Metlakahtla," which gives an account of missionary work wrought by William Duncan in a tribe of savages in British Columbia, which he conquered by love, Christianized by the Gospel, and taught the arts of civilization by common sense, are many most touching and interesting incidents illustrating the reasonableness and effectiveness of that method of missionary labor.

In the appendix is a report of Mr. Duncan's address before the board of Indian Commissioners, and the conference of the Mission Boards and Indian Rights Association, in Washington, Jan. 6th, 1887.

After having described the condition of the tribe when he went among them, settled in a village of 240 houses, degraded even down to cannibalism, he told how he learned their language, trusted them and was trusted by them, he went on to detail the story of his "Reception" among them in 1858:

One of the most embarrassing questions that was ever put to me by an Indian was one that was put when I first went there. It was this: "What do you mean by 1858?" I had to tell him that 1858 represented the number of years that we had the Gospel of God in the world. He said, "Why didn't you tell us of this before? why were not our forefathers told this?" I looked upon that as a poser. He said to me, "Have you got the Word of God?" That, in the English language, would be equivalent to saying, "Have you got a letter from God?" I said, "Yes, I have God's letter!" That would really be the idea that would reach the Indian. He said, "I want to see it." I then got my Bible. Remember, this was my first introduction. I wanted them to understand that I had not brought a message from the white man in England, or anywhere else, but a message from the King of kings, the God of Heaven. They wanted to see that. It was rumored all over the camp that I had a message from God. The man came into the house and I showed him the Bible. He put his finger very cautiously upon it and said, "Is that the Word?" "Yes," I said, "it is." "The Word from God?" I said, "It is." He said, "Has he sent it to us?" I said, "He has, just as much as he has to me." "Are you going to tell the Indians that?" I said, "I am." He said, "Good, that is very good."

Now, you see, if I had gone out there in the name of a single party; if I had gone and told them I had come from the queen, or from a nation, immediately I would have created in that man's mind a sort of antagonism; but as soon as I told him I had a message from God, who made him, he instantly began to pause and think and wanted to know about that message. When I was able to tell those Indians in their own language the Word of God, it just had the same effect upon them that it has upon the white people, and their congregations are as earnest, as conscientious, and as indefatigable in their worship of God as any congregation of white men. The influence of this work has spread all over the country.

I will just give you a brief idea of how I was deceived, on that point, in a very heathen tribe. They had heard that I was coming, and the chief, in order to show his great delight at my arrival, put up what they called a large cap. Their cap was an umbrella. They had no idea of preventing rain from falling on their heads by its use, but looked upon it simply as a web-footed cap, and so they used it on state occasions. As soon as I landed I saw the man with the umbrella, and saw the excitement. He sent a message to this effect: "I would like you to come into my house, and I shall send my messenger to tell you so." I immediately encamped upon the bank of the river. By and by, I was told that all things were ready and prepared to receive me. I said to my little crew—for in those days I took only boys with me, being afraid to take men, as they might kill me for the purpose of getting my clothes—I said, "What are they going to do when I go into the house?" "Dance." "Tell them I did not come here to see dancing, and I cannot go, therefore." They told the messenger to tell the chief that I objected to seeing them dance, that I had come with a solemn message to them. The chief replied, "Tell the white chief he must come; if he doesn't come to me I won't go to hear his word; but if he will come I will go and hear him." That changed the matter altogether. I had a little consultation with my boys, and they said, "You had better go; if you don't go the chief will not come to hear what you have to say." I walked up to his house, I confess, in a very grum kind of a spirit. I did not like to attend a dance! The idea of a missionary going in to see a dance! [Laughter.] But I saw that I had to do it; public opinion was in my favor. [Laughter.] I was very glad afterward that I did go. When I entered the house there was a person there ready to point out a seat for me. There was a bear-skin spread over a box for me to sit on. The chief had all of his men placed around in different portions of the house, which was a very large one. I observed that he had gotten a large sail and used it for a curtain in part of the room. Very soon I saw two men step out. One had a rod in his hand beating the floor. They had a kind of theatrical performance. The old man, after stamping his foot and putting his rod down very firmly, said, in his own language, of course, "The heavens are changing." The other man was there to respond, "Yes, so it seems; the heavens are changing." A few little remarks of this sort were made, and then the sail was drawn aside and out dashed the chief, dressed in most magnificent costume, his head being completely covered with feathers and other ornaments. He had his rifle in his hand. He shook it and then pointed it in my face; walked up a little way to me and then put up his hand with his rifle in it; he looked through the hole in the center of the roof where the smoke came out, and immediately began a beautiful prayer. I was astonished. This was no dance. If I could only give you his prayer in his own beautiful and eloquent language, you would be astonished also. I can only give you the substance of it. It was something like this: "Great Father! Great Father of Heaven! Thou hast sent thy Word! Thy letter has reached this place. We, thy children here, are wanting it. Thy servant has come here with it. Help him to teach us and we will listen. Thanks to thee, Great Father, for sending thy Word to us."

That is just the outline. It was uttered in a most pathetic, eloquent and solemn manner.

Having said this little prayer, he looked at me, thanked me for coming. Then he began to dance, and the Indians began a chant, clapping their hands. It was an extemporaneous song, and I listened to it with a great deal of pleasure. There was a man among them who made a hymn, just as they wanted it, and when they wanted it. The tune was a sad one in this instance. It was a chant; the words were all extemporized by this man. I found that the song was all about God having sent his servant and his messenger to teach the Indians. They clapped their hands and sung with the greatest joy. It was a grand reception.

Having been thus favorably received, Mr. Duncan went on with his work, teaching the Gospel, living with the people, teaching them to build, putting up a saw mill, making soap, erecting a blacksmith shop, a cooper's shop, and sash shop, starting weaving and spinning, and canning over thirty thousand cases of salmon, and so leading them into civilized and settled life; though in order to get away from the meddling of certain ecclesiastical overseers, he finally found it advisable to take his people and cross the line over on to American soil.

But the whole story is a most interesting account of the power of the simple truth of God preached without sectarian attachments, and the power of the personal influence of a faithful Christian man who like his Master would go out to seek and save the lost.—The Christian, Boston.

CROQUET PLAYING.

A GIRL'S OBJECTION.

My mind has, during the past year, been exercised considerably upon this subject, not having been aware of the fact that many good people were indulging in this amusement.

Our guide book says: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Certainly then, some light may be obtained on this subject from that source.

We find: "Let love be without dissimulation." Shall we then delight in those things in which the object of each one participating is to be self-exaltation? Is this "in honor preferring one another?" Does it not rather gender a spirit of selfishness and jealousy? "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." Is not croquet a stepping-stone to the greater forms of gambling, billiards, pool and the like? Indeed, does it not resemble one of these in its name—lawn billiards? I learn from one of our ministers that croquet-sets are sometimes taken to billiard tables and played there. Now the principal remaining difference between the amusement under consideration, and the others mentioned, lies in the betting, and the money at stake. Would billiards be unobjectionable without these? We believe not. Croquet? No. There is a fascination about it, which in many instances leads to a great waste of time. One sister informs us that in a certain neighborhood there were farmers who, after working hard all day in the field, after supper went out and engaged in games of croquet until eleven o'clock, for exercise. If they were needing exercise, did they get it here?

While playing, the body is necessarily thrown into a stooping posture, not even the arms being raised, and no organ of the body is sufficiently exercised to afford any benefit to the player. Does not this game furnish a needless point of sympathy between good people and the notorious gambler? I once noticed a young person of perhaps thirteen years, whose form was so bent as to detract much from her good appearance, she being accustomed to playing croquet a large share of each day.

Cannot some recreation which is perfectly harmless and "free from the very appearance of evil," be substituted? "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

LUCIA ARNOLD.

BABIES IN ARMENIA.

"Now shall I tell you a little about the children in Armenia? Not in the great seaports like Constantinople and Smyrna, because there they are dressed and tended more as ours are, but in the interior, where the ancient customs are still retained.

"The baby has a little cotton shirt or long calico wrapper, but for the rest it is swathed in pieces of cloth—swaddling clothes—like the infant Christ, so that the baby looks like a nice bundle, and is as stiff as a stick of wood. You can hold him any way—except head down—without hurting him. When his mamma wants his little sister—perhaps only six years old—to carry him out of doors, so that she can weave, wash, or get the dinner, she does not have to say to Mariam, Is goo-he, or Fatmah, 'Now be sure you hold him tight; don't let him fall, nor strain his back, nor stand on his tender little feet.' All she has to do is to tie the little bundle on the little sister's back, and off she runs, while baby sleeps, or watches the children, and gazes at the strange things in the strange world about him until he gets hungry and cries for his dinner.

"When baby gets cross and tired, what do they do to amuse him? Do you know the little rhyme beginning 'Two little yellow birds sitting on a hill?' Well, they have something like that in Armenian, and baby likes to see the bird 'fly away.' Then they have an Armenian edition of 'This pig went to market,' etc.,—only there is no pig in it. If I tell you the Armenian, do you think you can say it? I'll try you, at any rate. These little things learn some English, why should not you learn their language?

The thumb says, 'Yeg-oor, yer-tank.' 'Oor yer-tank?' asks the forefinger. 'Haleb, yer-tank,' answers the middle finger. 'Cheh-leb yer-tank,' suggests the next. 'Bij-jeh-lik-im, chid-deh-lik-im jam-pah chee-dem, inch bess yer-tam?' wails the little finger,—which means 'I'm a wee little teenty thing. I don't know the way. How can I go?'

"But what about the babies whose poor mothers do not know of the blessed Saviour, and who teach their little ones to pray in the name of Mohammed? Can we not do something to bring them to Him who said, 'Suffer the little children to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven?' "—S. S. Times.

JAPANESE BABIES.

The babies in Japan have sparkling eyes and funny little tufts of hair; they look so quaint and old-fashioned, exactly like those doll-babies that are sent over here to America. Now, in our country, very young babies are apt to put everything in their mouths; a button or a pin, or anything, goes straight to the little rosy wide-open mouth, and the nurse or mamma must always watch and take great care that baby does not swallow something dangerous. But in Japan they put the small babies right down in the sand by the door of the house, or on the floor, but I never saw them attempt to put anything in their mouths unless they were told to do so, and no one seemed to be anxious about them. When little boys or girls in Japan are naughty or disobedient, they must be punished, of course; but the punishment is very strange. There are very small pieces of rice-paper called moxa, and these are lighted with a match, and then put upon the finger or hand or arm of the naughty child, and they burn a spot on the tender skin that hurts very, very much. The child screams with pain, and the red-hot moxa sticks to the skin for a moment or two, and then goes out; but the smarting burn reminds the little child of his fault. I do not like these moxas. I think it is a cruel punishment. But perhaps it is better than a whipping. Only I wish little children never had to be punished.—A. V. R. Eastlake, in St. Nicholas.

A BIT OF WISDOM.

"Grasp the nettle with both hands,
And it shall not sting."
Take this bit of wisdom, dear,
Into everything.
If the lesson's long and hard,
At it with your might!
Do not let it conquer you
While you've strength to fight.

Foolish people stand and fret,
Wonder what to do,
Bear their trouble twenty times—
Such a silly crew!
Get the trial over, dear;
Never frown and pout;
With a brave and steady look
Put the foe to rout.

Carry not to-morrow's load,
Little heart, to-day;
Trip with happy feet along
Life's uneven way.
"Grasp the nettle with both hands,
And it shall not sting."
Take this bit of wisdom, dear,
Into everything.

A MINUTE'S ANGER.

Not long ago, in a city not far from New York, two boys, neighbors, who were good friends, were playing. In the course of the game a dispute arose between the boys, and both became angry; one struck the other, and finally one kicked the other, who fell unconscious in the street, was taken home, and now for four weeks has suffered most cruelly. The doctors say that if he lives he will never be well, and will always suffer and need constant care of a physician. If the boys had been the greatest enemies they would not, could not, have desired a worse fate for each other than this. But, instead of enemies, they were friends and loving companions. Now everything is changed. One will never be able to walk or take part in active games; the other will never forget the sufferings he caused.

A minute's anger caused this.—Exchange.

The Anti-saloon Republican League issued a circular showing that in the States which have voted on the question of prohibition since 1880 1,211,000 votes have been cast for prohibition, and 1,160,000 against it.

TEMPERANCE.

AN INDUSTRIOUS AND LEGITIMATE BUSINESS.

Many men are of many minds. In Philadelphia the licenses to sell liquor have been reduced by thousands, by the application of the Brooks law. Very much disturbed by this result, the Wine and Spirit Circular talks in this fashion:

"The result is that hundreds of honest, industrious and law-abiding citizens have been deprived of occupation and plundered of their property by having it rendered valueless; while others similarly situated have been granted franchises, the value of which has been immensely increased by the losses inflicted upon those so unfortunate as to displease the caprice of the all-powerful cabal. That this is tyranny in its baldest form, that this is favoritism of the rankest order, and that the delegation of such powers to individuals is a mockery of our institutions and an outrage upon the liberty and the property rights of the American people, are propositions which admit of no question among well-informed people."

The facts are that of the over three thousand who applied to the judges in vain for licenses, all, with the exception of about twenty-five, confessed that they had violated the old law under which they had authority, by selling liquor openly on the Sabbath, and also at all times to minors; both of which practices were forbidden by the old law. Besides, it was proved that of the rum-sellers, more than nine-tenths of whom were foreigners, being mostly Germans and Irish, a large proportion had taken licenses before they became naturalized citizens, and yet they had made oath, as the law required, that they were citizens of the United States. The reports of the police proved also that many of these men and of those who had become naturalized kept houses of debauchery in connection with their saloons, and that these establishments combined were vile dens and the resorts of the worst criminal classes, frequently the scene of disgraceful fights and disorders, and that the keepers of these concerns were in many instances scoundrels and criminals. All this was established by a careful judicial investigation and is on record, and has been sustained on an appeal to a higher court.

These are the "industrious and law-abiding citizens" for whom the Circular pleads.—Intelligencer.

PERSONAL LIBERTY IS PERSONAL LICENSE.

Personal liberty is all right as long as there is nobody else around. Alexander Selkirk when he was on the island alone could say, "I am monarch of all I survey;" he could do just as he pleased. But just as soon as another man came on that island, as soon as a colony was formed there, his liberty was curtailed and he had to come down to the requirements of those men and agree with them as to what each other could rightly do. Let me illustrate this personal liberty sophistry. Suppose I go down street and swing my arms right and left. This is a free country, I can swing my arms as I please. Suppose I hit a man on the nose, he would say to me, "Don't you know where personal liberty begins and where it ends?" In this instance it ends on the tip of my nose, as a lesson for me to remember I might find myself lying in the street. Suppose I chew tobacco (I don't want to, but if I did I am sure I would want to spit). So I spit, anywhere, on the ladies' dresses, on the gentlemen's coat-tails; why, this is a free country, I am only demonstrating my personal liberty. I soon learn that my personal liberty is limited. Suppose that a Fiji islander should come to this city and walk down street. He catches your little boy, takes him home, kills him, eats him; what would the government of this city do? It would say, don't you know what you have done? "I only killed a boy; I have killed many before I came here; I thought this was a free country; I am a personal liberty man."

Suppose the ex-Khedive of Egypt instead of going to Italy had come here to reside with his wives and concubines, a police officer would go to him with a warrant for bigamy. "Why, I thought this was a free country and I could do as I pleased here. This is no free country at all," says the ex Khedive. It is preposterous to think that we have laws, customs, rights, which these maggots of society must respect.

Nine-tenths of the men engaged in the liquor traffic are men from the despotism of Europe, and they are sucking the very lifeblood out of the American people, and then talking about personal liberty. There is just as much reason in the plea of the Fiji islander and the ex Khedive of Egypt as there is in that of the slop-house-keeper.—Rev. C. Winbigler.

RUM AND ANARCHY.

Anarchy is wrong. Moreover its exponents know it to be wrong. The citizen born American is not an anarchist. Anarchy is the product of foreign soil. The individual who gathers his effects into a bundle and ships to America is the future anarchist. He lands in Castle Garden, meets a friend, and while tossing off his beer is instructed to promote the interests of anarchy under the vain hope of amassing wealth. He secures a position as "hustler" in a lumber yard at a dollar and a half a day, spends his evenings in a saloon, wastes his mental energies in brooding, and makes bombs by which he hopes to gain the identical height he so bitterly hates—wealth.

Now, there's a social and commercial paradox!

The average anarchist is one because he is so advised to be, and he does not seek information upon the merits of the question. And so long as he continues to practice fealty to his misguided faith he remains a poor, beer-drinking man, without home or a hope of peaceful plenty in the future.

Anarchy is born in foreign lands, and bred in the American saloon.

If it cannot be strangled at birth, by reason of the remoteness of its place of birth, it certainly can be rendered extinct by the removal of its breeding quarters on American soil.

The saloon has forced the erection of the almshouses that dot nearly every county in the United States.

The saloon has produced the rags that clothe every drunkard's child.

The saloon has placed the lines of care that are worn upon the face of every drunkard's broken-hearted wife.

The saloon created the bombs that gave Haymarket Square a place in history, and its subsequent horrors upon the scaffold.

Not content with its conquests, the saloon sighs for more worlds to conquer and turns its eye upon the National Capital.

Shall the thinking men submit to dishonor, that the crime-abetting saloon be saved?—A. E. Johnston, in American Magazine.

It is said that the temperance people of Newark, N. J., are arranging to send a representative to all the meetings of the Common Council hereafter, to take note of the number of aldermen who are not quite sober.

The new law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants on holidays went into effect in Boston on Decoration Day.

The New York Sun has the following regarding the "free-whisky" plank adopted by the Republicans: "Three sets of voters are most earnestly in favor of President Cleveland's re-election by reason of his attitude toward a question upon which they are in radical disagreement with each other. First, the moralists who think that the public would be better according as all intoxicating drinks are dearer. They are for Cleveland because he is for maintaining the internal revenue, whisky tax included. On the other hand the largest makers of intoxicants, the beer-brewers, are for Cleveland because they think that with whisky kept up in price the field for their product is proportionately protected, and thus their business will be correspondingly larger. And of course the manufacturers of whisky—the great whisky trust—although beer is their most aggressive and successful enemy, follow the brewers in preferring Mr. Cleveland because the present whisky tax is the very foundation of their business. Without it the trust would burst."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON 5. Third Quarter.—July 29.

SUBJECT.—The Tabernacle.—Ex. 40: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them.—Rev. 21: 3.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Rearing of the Tabernacle. vs. 1-8. We will not linger over any description of the tabernacle, which has been so often pictured and described, but will proceed at once to the spiritual lessons which it embodies. The tabernacle and all its furnishings are typical of Christ. He is both Sacrifice and Priest. He is our Fountain of cleansing, typified by the brazen laver; the Light of the world, typified by the golden candlestick. Shall we reject Him who has thus been made all in all to us? Nowhere else than in the tabernacle could acceptable worship be offered, for no other place had God honored by the sign of his visible presence. So only in Christ can we see God manifested; only in him can we approach the Father. He is the Door through whom we enter the Holy of Holies. There is always in truth a divine oneness. Falsehood is bewildering, complex, many-sided. We can tell a thousand falsehoods about a person or thing where it is only possible to tell one truth. Simplicity marks the divine plan of saving men. There are many false Christs; there can be but one Saviour. So in spite of difference in form and ritual there is but one church universal, to be known by this one sign of always having an ever present Christ, who is its one High Priest, offering forever the one sacrifice of himself to take away sin. Through no bewildering labyrinth do we approach God, but by one straight way. The universal religion of the lodge, which holds up to equal reverence the Koran or the Bible, and adores "the unknown God," whose name may be "Jehovah, Jove, or Lord," according to the faith of the worshiper, proves itself false by this faculty of suiting man in his natural condition, when what he needs is a supernatural power to make him dissatisfied with that condition, and to help him rise above it to a higher sphere. So in moral questions: there are many wrong ways out; there can be only one right one. The temperance voter at the polls is often told to vote for the least of two evils; but what has he to do with their comparative magnitude? His duty is plain: shun even the appearance of evil. It is only when considered as a type of that greater and more perfect tabernacle, "not made with hands," that we find interest and profit in the study of the ancient Jewish sanctuary. We now proceed to another lesson of most precious significance.

2. The Consecrating of the Tabernacle. vs. 9-16. In the anointing of the tabernacle we see an image of the Christian, who, in body, mind and spirit, should be consecrated to be a temple of the living God. Am I thus consecrated? is a question that each individual should put to himself. It will be hard or easy to answer according as he is partially or wholly consecrated. Am I doing the work the Lord has given me to do in the best possible way? Now one may be honestly trying to serve God, yet, unconsciously to himself, be so weighted down by fashion, custom or habit, as to be all the time hampered in the service. Against the verdict of the whole medical world that corsets are injurious, how many a Christian woman will persist in wearing them, when her own reason ought to tell her that any unnatural bracing or compressing of the frame, which forbids a free circulation and full play of every muscle and organ, must interfere with the power to do effective physical or mental work. The priests' garments were anointed; so our consecration should extend even to our dress. That apparel is best for us in which we can best serve God; and this does not mean that we are to be singular in our attire or disregard beauty. The highest beauty of dress consists in its fitness for ourselves and for our work. A Christian man with the tobacco habit robs God just so far as that habit robs him of his nervous power, his intellectual vigor and his influence for good with others. All the vessels were to be anointed. So our senses, our tongues, our hands and feet should be so many vessels for temple service. It ought not to be a hard matter to know whether or not we are fully consecrated. When active motion brings no pain with it, but positive pleasure, then we know that all parts of the body are in health; so when the Lord's service is pleasure, when all duty becomes, not a stern, imperative needs be, but a joyful must be, then we know that we are indeed consecrated, a temple for the living God, which death may destroy, only to be raised again in eternal strength and beauty.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

WILLIAM TAYLOR AND AFRICAN MISSIONS.

William Taylor, the California street-preacher, the founder of self-supporting Christian missions in India, South America and Africa, spoke last week Tuesday evening in this city to a large audience on his African work. As he was appointed a Missionary Bishop last year by the Methodist General Conference, his appearance in Chicago was under the auspices of that denomination, and the attempt of the young man who presided at the meeting to make the occasion extremely sectarian was pitiful. William Taylor's work is not for one sect, nor for one age, but for Christ and eternity. In appearance he is rough and strong. Clad in a dark suit of very plain material, he has the appearance of a shrewd, successful farmer; and his strong good sense appears most strikingly in his exposition of Scripture, and in his account of mission management. The Inter Ocean report of the latter being excellent, we have borrowed largely from it.

He commenced his self-supporting missionary work in Bombay, India, sixteen years ago. He supported himself until he could build up self-supporting churches that could support their pastors. It was in this way that he and others established the Bengal and South Indian Conferences. For twelve years they never asked for a cent. In conducting the missions of South America the same principle was pursued, the missionaries being supported by the moneys they received from their schools, while in India they were supported by their services as preachers. In Africa it was different, as the natives there had no appreciation of what was done for them. Not receiving, therefore, any services that they could acknowledge as value received, they could not be expected to pay for anything. They established, therefore, industrial schools in connection with the missions to cultivate an appreciation of values, and no system that did not embrace both the culture of the brain and of the industrial capacity of the native could ever be successful in Africa. In describing Africa the Bishop said he had no mind to talk about its extent. It was a wonderful country. The climate was not as bad as some people supposed it was. In the torrid zone, where his work lay, temperature ranged from 75 to 85 degrees the year round, and even during the prevalence of the northwest trade winds the sun was veiled by mists three days out of four. He was told that this mist was full of malaria. He found that the theory that the atmosphere was at these times full of malaria was false. The mists were not malarial. The rarification of the atmosphere by the sun on a hot, clear day, created a vacuum, and at sundown the northwest trade winds brought up the moisture which filled the air for several days. This cooled the air, and made the climate a delightful one for out-of-door work, and he put in six days of the week, eight hours a day, in out-doors work, and three days out of the four worked out of doors without any hat on his head. So the climate of Africa was not so dreadful after all. In regard to the healthfulness or unhealthfulness of the climate, it might be considered as healthy a climate as that of any country in a wild, uncleaned state. Many died there, it was true, but it was from pursuing a false theory of living, resulting largely from following the directions of a book written by a doctor in London, who had never been in Africa. This doctor warned them from going in the sun or taking any vigorous exercise. If he, the speaker, was going to prescribe a treatment for killing missionaries in Africa, he would prescribe just as this doctor did. A sewer in cold weather was not a very dangerous thing, but a sewer in hot weather, or a sewer in the tropics, would, if not frequently washed out, soon commence to ferment, and so produce disease and death. Now, the system of pores in the human body were like a system of sewers in a town. In warm weather in this country, and all the time in the tropics, these human sewers must be sluiced, just as the other sewers are. In other words, a perspiration must be created, and the pores of the body thus cleansed. If missionaries would do that, they would get along all right. As to the Negroes in Africa, he would say that the natives who were brought to this country were not of the best type of the Negro. The men who sold them, who had never been in bondage to any man, were better men, more powerful men, than those who had been brought to this country as slaves. The most powerful women on earth were there—women straight, symmetrical, vigorous, and equally and well developed. Both men and women were shrewd and intelligent.

As for self-support by missionaries in Africa, the difficulty was rendered easy to overcome by the fact that in every tribe a farm was set aside for strangers, being placed in the charge of the king's or chief's first wife, and no one but her and strangers could use any of the products of that farm. A house, the best house in town, was also given up to the use of the missionary. The chief's wife not only gave them daily rations of vegetable food, but prepared it in a tasteful manner, together with eggs and chickens. All the missionary had to do was to announce who he was, and he was looked after. The Mohammedans understood this custom thoroughly, and were sending propagandists all through Africa. The propagandist started barefoot, carrying nothing with him but the Koran in his hand. These men had gone all through Northern and Eastern Africa, and they were now advancing to the West. The humility, patience, pluck and power of adapting themselves to circumstances that these Mohammedan propagandists possessed, and which they used in spreading a false religion—most of it false, though it had a good deal of truth in it—might well be copied by Christian missionaries, and with such qualities they might win Africa to Christ in a short time.

—Elder J. L. Barlow is now preaching in Bloomington, Wis., in response to a call from the Baptist church.

—The United Presbyterian General Assembly at its recent session appropriated to the several Boards for the coming year $279,600 as follows: Foreign Missions, $110,000; Home Missions, $72,000; Freedmen's Missions, $40,000; Church Extension, $40,000; Education, $8,000; Ministerial Relief, $6,000; General Assembly Fund, $3,000.

—We are beginning to hear of spiritual results following the administration of relief to the famine sufferers in Turkey. In some places portions of the Scriptures have been distributed with needed bread for the body. Mr. Gates of Mardin reports that in one village a man said after an earnest discussion: "It is nothing other than the words of this Book which have sent us this aid." A Moslem at one village affirmed: "I know that the Protestants are the best of all the sects." "How do you know that?" said a bystander; "you are a Moslem. What do you know of the teachings of the Protestants?" The Moslem replied, "I know by one sign. If I go to a priest, he says to me, 'Give;' if I go to a Moolah, he says to me, 'Give.' The Protestants alone say, 'Take;' their schools say 'Take;' their teachings say, 'Take;' their charities say, 'Take.' By this I know that they are the best." Mr. Gates reports that villages are asking for teachers, and that the evangelical helpers are honored wherever they go among the mountains.—Missionary Herald.

—The general conference on foreign missions, which met in Exeter Hall, London, June 9–19, proved, says the Interior, to be a larger and more thoroughly representative assembly than even its projectors expected. As has been explained before, the conference was in the nature of a centenary celebration of the beginning of the foreign mission movement in England, and it was thought that about an even hundred societies would be represented. Great was the joy of all concerned when it was found that 126 societies had sent delegates. There were 1,060 delegates in attendance from the 52 foreign missionary societies of Great Britain and Ireland, 150 from the 51 societies in the United States, 27 from the 6 societies in Canada, and 22 from the 13 societies of Europe. If all the delegates can return to their homes with full cargoes of the enthusiasm and of the zeal according to knowledge, which did so much abound at the conference, it will not be too much to hope that a new epoch in foreign mission work will have its rise this year.

—The Illinois Baptist Assembly convenes at Sailor Springs July 22, and remains in session fifteen days. Sailor Springs is located in Clay county, Illinois, and has become a favorite summer resort because of the curative properties of the waters and the beauty of the situation. Among the speakers are Rev. C. H. Morcup, D.D., St. Louis; Rev. A. D. Zaraphonithes, Greece; Presidents Kendrick and Washburn; Drs. Fulton, of Brooklyn, Broadus, of Louisville, and many others.

—For years there has been an opposition in the Association of Baptist Churches in Indianapolis and vicinity to Rev. M. Buchanan, of Acton, who procured a divorce from his wife on the ground of incompatibility, and within a year married again. Many of the churches were much opposed to his conduct, and being unable to expel him, have formed a new association and adopted a constitution that prohibits the admission of any church that avails itself, either temporarily or permanently, of the services of a minister who has been divorced.

LODGE NOTES.

Twelve brotherhood engineers and firemen returned to work on the Burlington road at Omaha Thursday, stating that they believed the charges against Chairman Hoge and other leaders, and were unwilling to be identified with such men.

The annual conclave of the Supreme Temple, Patriarchal Circle of the United States, met in Fort Wayne. An effort to make some changes in the uniform was defeated, as well as many other changes that were sought to be brought about. A competitive drill was held, and Thursday evening a banquet and dress ball.

At Minneapolis Tuesday Frank Hoover, President of the Typographical Union, and William B. Hammond, a member of its executive, were indicted for boycotting the Saturday Evening Spectator.

General Master Workman Powderly has written a letter in the Journal of United Labor in which he advises abstention from the use of coffee until the present "corner" is broken

The contemplated strike of the Brotherhood of Engineers on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad is off. A meeting was held at which all phases of the trouble between the railroad and the Brotherhood was fully discussed. It was finally agreed that the strike should not occur. Thomas R Monahan, who has caused all the trouble, left the city suddenly.

The National Division Sons of Temperance met last week in Toronto. Reports show a net increase of membership last year of 245. The total membership at the end of the year was 79,158.

The State convention of the Catholic Knights of America met in Eau Claire, Wis. A procession, with two bands, was formed, and delegates escorted to St. Patrick's church, where high mass was said by the Rev. Manager Muenich of Racine. The afternoon session was held in the court house. A grand banquet closed the meeting.

The Grand Commander Knights Templar, of Iowa, having refused to accept the ritual promulgated by the Grand Encampment held at St. Louis. Grand Commander General Charles Room, of the United States, issued an edict interdicting intercourse between Knights Templar and those under the jurisdiction of Iowa. Judge Frederick Speed, Grand Commander of Mississippi, refused to publish the edict in his State, and is also accused of writing National Grand Commander Room an insulting letter.

The Grand Lodge of Elks have made the Grand Lodge migratory An effort was made to create a supreme lodge and have a grand lodge in each State. Charters were granted to thirteen lodges in various parts of the country.

The Bridge Beach stove foundry strike cost the Iron-molders' Union, No. 10, $23,348.40. It was a notable defeat for the workmen, and resulted in the organization of the Manufacturers' Defense Association.

Several of the Engineer Brotherhood men at Galesburg, Ill, have received anonymous letters warning them to leave town.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God an home an country. Forty pages.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."

Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."

Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."

Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal by tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."

The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body a Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

GOOD HOT WEATHER ADVICE.

The annual sun stroke circular of the New York Health Board may be summarized as follows:

PREVENTION.—Don't lose your sleep; sleep in a cool place; don't worry; don't get excited; don't drink alcoholic beverages; avoid working in the sun, if you can; if indoors, work in a well-ventilated room; wear thin clothes; wear a light hat, not black; put a large green leaf or wet cloth in it; drink water freely and sweat freely; if fatigued or dizzy, knock off work, lie down in a cool place, and apply cold water and cold cloths to your head and neck.

CURE.—Put the patient in the shade; loosen his clothes about the neck; send for the nearest doctor; give the patient cool drinks of water or black tea or black coffee, if he can swallow. If his skin is hot and dry, prop him up, sitting against a tree or wall; pour cold water over the body and limbs, and put on his head pounded ice, wrapped in a cloth or towel. If you can't get ice, use a wet cloth and keep freshening it. But if the patient is pale and faint, and his pulse is feeble, lay him on his back, make him smell hartshorn for a few seconds, or give him a teaspoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia, or tincture of ginger in two tablespoonfuls of water. In this case use no cold water, but rub the hands and feet, and warm them by hot applications until the circulation is restored.

To this we may add that persons who live chaste, sober, temperate, godly lives, avoiding condiments and stimulants, pepper, salt, tea, coffee, etc., usually have little trouble from heat, cold, or disease.

We recently called on Mr. D. Needham, at 116 Dearborn St, Chicago, to ascertain the facts in reference to his being cured of cancer. We found him to be a well preserved man in his seventy-ninth year. He stated that thirty-five years ago he was living on a farm, and one very warm summer day while carrying rails an abrasion was made upon his shoulder. The injury soon healed, leaving a scar. Thirteen years later this scar became the seat of a cancer. The cancer developed suddenly after eating buckwheat cakes freely for two weeks. Its malignant nature was evident in a few days. The scar grew purple, felt tender and itched. Sharp pains were present occasionally. He consulted eminent physicians in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and New York; every one pronounced it cancer of the scirrhus type, and advised either the knife or the plaster as the only possible hope of relief. About this time an old friend heard of his misfortune and advised him to drink very strong red clover tea. He began taking the clover tea in June, 1864, the cancer having made its appearance the previous November. A beneficial effect was experienced almost immediately. On the top of the left shoulder and upper part of the chest we found a surface of nine inches one way and twelve inches the other covered with nodules and scars. We have not the slightest doubt but what Mr. Needham had a genuine cancer, which would have proved fatal in a few months had it not been arrested and practically cured. From the time the cancer was most inflamed he has worn over it a folded cloth, which he moistens with tepid water as often as it becomes dry. He abstains from eating pork, buckwheat and tomatoes, as he believes they tend to produce cancer. He pays great attention to his diet. He has used the clover occasionally since he discovered its merits. Eight years ago he began to manufacture the extract of red clover for sale, and has built up a good business for himself and sons.—The People's Health Journal.

WHAT AN EGG WILL DO.—For burns and scalds nothing is more soothing than the white of an egg, which may be poured over the wound. It is softer as a varnish for a burn than collodion, and, being always at hand, can be applied. It is also more cooling than the sweet oil and cotton which were formerly supposed to be the surest application to allay smarting pains. It is the contact with the air which gives the extreme discomfort experienced from the ordinary accident of this kind, and anything that excludes the air and prevents inflammation is the thing to be at once applied.

The Teacher

Who advised her pupils to strengthen their minds by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, appreciated the truth that bodily health is essential to mental vigor. For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is remarkably beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. James H. Eastman, Stoneham, Mass.

"I have taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great benefit to my general health."—Miss Thirza L. Crerar, Palmyra, Md.

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from

General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Moluncus, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Moffitt, Killingly, Conn.

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 79 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

The Master's Carpet

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 631 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 420 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general applicatiou of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

THE SECRET ORDERS

OF

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

GOOD RULES FOR RIDING AND DRIVING.

When the horse is taken out for either riding or driving it should not be allowed to move at a fast pace for the first mile or more, otherwise, as its stomach is then full, it may injure its wind and bring on the heaves. A good rule to observe before putting the horse up to a fast gait is to let it dung three times. This relieves the bowels to a moderate extent. If necessary to stop when out, and a cold wind prevails, put the horse under cover and blanket; if one is not to be had, then hitch on the lee side of some building. If in summer, put in a shade as clear from flies and mosquitoes as possible; if there is no net, cover with a cotton sheet or light blanket. The best strap for hitching is one that buckles round the neck, as it holds more securely than a halter or bridle rein, which are liable to be slipped. In crossing a river or bay in a steamboat or other conveyance in cold weather, or facing a raw or strong wind on the road, hang a short, thick blanket from the neck, spread in full breadth over the chest, to guard from taking cold. When the exposure ceases, remove it. Returning home from a ride or drive of some extent, and the horse is sweaty, let the last mile be done slowly, that it may be cooled a little before reaching the stable. Some blanket as soon as the harness is taken off; others contend that it is better to rub as dry as possible and then blanket. But which may be preferable will depend something on the weather and the nature of the horse, whether to dry quickly, or to sweat longer and copiously.

Examine the shoes, and if gravel or any hard substance has got between them and the hoofs, pick it out. During this time the horse may safely take two to four quarts of water, at a moderate temperature if in summer, and warmer if in winter. After being well cooled, give all the water the horse will drink. Now wait a short time and then feed a little hay at first, after which his ration of grain or meal. Never let a horse stand or wade in water when he is hot, as it would endanger foundering him unless the water is quite warm, and perhaps even then. If ever forced to do this, exercise him well after it, and when stabled, rub the legs thoroughly dry down to the hoofs, then he would probably escape founder.—American Agriculturist.

THE CURRANT.

Currants are usually shipped, like strawberries, in quart baskets packed in crates; and gooseberries may be sent the same way, but are liable to shake themselves out in transit, unless the baskets are wrapped in paper. To avoid this trouble some shippers prefer sending them in bags by express. The gooseberry is less popular in market than the currant, and there is no demand for it when ripe. This is singular, for it is excellent canned, requiring less sugar than green ones; although there are sweet toothed persons who insist that no amount of sugar can ever make gooseberries palatable. However, in canning them, it will be found economy not to add the sugar until the fruit is wanted for use, as sugar boiled with gooseberries, or any other acid fruit, is changed into glucose, which has but half the sweetening power of sugar. Ripe gooseberries resemble, and make a good substitute for cranberries; are much cheaper, and can be raised anywhere. Green gooseberries may be kept fresh the year round by simply bottling them in cold water, excluding, of course, all bruised berries. They need not be sealed, only corked tightly and kept in a cool place.

Canned currants are delicious, and every housekeeper knows that for jelly-making purposes there is nothing equal to the currant. By the way, it is strange that more impecunious women, with a genius for making jellies, do not turn their attention to this industry as a source of profit. Of course, they could not compete in the general market with the cheap, artificially-colored preparations of gelatine, sold as jelly, but which never had even a remote relationship to any sort of fruit; still, there are many ladies who lack either time, strength, inclination or skill to make their own jellies, but who would gladly pay a good price for a superior article if they knew where such could be obtained. By the judicious purchase, not only of currants, but other fruits, when abundant and cheap, a skilled jelly-maker might materially increase her income if she chose.

Delicious currant jelly, that never fails, can be made without observing the old expensive "pint for pound" rule. Gather the fruit before it is dead ripe, but not immediately after it has been saturated by rain. Wash and drain, but do not remove stems. Boil twenty minutes, stirring occasionally to prevent burning. Strain through flannel and measure. Return to the fire, and, after boiling a minute or two, add heated sugar, allowing but half a pound for each pint of juice. As soon as the sugar is entirely dissolved, the jelly is done, and should be placed in glasses immediately.—Independent.

"Oh! where shall rest be found?"
The worn-out mother sighs;
"Stockings to mend, and trousers to darn,
Dishes to wash, and butter to churn,
While my back feels to break, and head and heart burn,
And life is a constant friction."
The summer came and went,
The matron no longer sighs;
Elastic her step, and rounded her cheek,
Work seems but play, life is now sweet,
And the change was made in one short week,
By Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Positive remedy for those derangements, irregularities, and weaknesses so common to womankind.

The Photo-Engraving Co., 67 to 71 Park Place, New York, have recently sent out samples of their new method of engraving, the Half-tone Process." By this method it has become possible to produce plates for printing from photographs, etc, without the aid of the artist or engraver. No finer work, than these samples show, has been seen.

Bodily health and vigor may be maintained as easily in the heat of summer, as in the winter months, if the blood is purified and vitalized with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Every person who has used this remedy has been greatly benefited. Take it this month.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Cleveland, who has been accustomed to use a glass of wine at dinner or semi-occasionally at other times, is said to have yielded to a request of Mrs. Cleveland, who desired to get the influence of his personal example, to totally abandon the use of liquors.

Professor J. W. Powell, of the geological survey, made an argument before the Senate Committee on Appropriations on the development of the arid land regions. Professor Powell is very enthusiastic in the belief that his views as to the irrigation of this vast region by establishing reservoirs in the Rocky Mountains for the supply of water is entirely practical.

The bill to pay $5,000 to Mrs. Larimer of Wyoming for important services in giving information as to the hostile purposes of the Sioux Indians has passed the Senate.

Elliot Sandford of New York has been nominated for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah; J. W. Judd of Tennessee, Associate Justice, and Hugo W. Weir of Pennsylvania, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Idaho.

Congressman Randall of Pennsylvania was prostrated by an attack of an old trouble last week, and had four hemorrhages Friday night, losing sixteen ounces of blood. It is feared he cannot survive another attack. The difficulty was brought on by his assiduity in securing a private pension bill.

COUNTRY.

A terrible accident occurred on the Virginia Midland railroad early Thursday morning. The through Southern train went through a trestle between Orange Court House and Barboursville, falling a distance of fifteen feet and killing eight persons outright, and wounding some twenty-five severely.

The principal county officers (all colored) at Marion, Tenn., were escorted to trains by white men Thursday morning, given tickets, and warned never to return. The county judge fled the previous night, and the county clerk was given twenty-four hours to arrange his books. The dispatch avers that the county has been under Negro rule since 1870, and that, as prominent white men had been warned to leave, the white citizens undertook to assume control of affairs. The Negroes in the county out-number the whites seven to one.

The great fire that laid Alpena, Mich., low sixteen years ago, was Wednesday almost duplicated, when fourteen blocks were swept away. Two hundred buildings were burned and 225 families, representing 1,300 persons, are out of house and home. Nine-tenths of these are workingmen, and most of them have no insurance. There were several fatalities among women and children.

Dr. Reitman, of Legrand, Iowa, reports to the State Board of Health a full statement of a case of leprosy coming under his care. The patient is Helena Halverson from Norway. She claims no relative ever had the disease.

Receiver Dyer has made a demand on the Mormon church for the property of the church held in excess of the amount allowed by law. It amounts to $790,000.

Stephen Freeman, a colored man convicted of assaulting a white woman, was hanged in Wilmington, N. C., Wednesday. Freeman protested his innocence to the last, and in spite of many applications to the governor for a commutation the sentence was carried out.

Fire, on the afternoon of July 10, destroyed eight blocks in the heart of the town of Suisun, Cal., mostly brick stores. The postoffice was also consumed. The fire started in a shed back of W. T. Bartlett's residence, and rapidly gained, crossing the streets and burning even what goods had been removed for safety. At least seven-eighths of the town have been consumed. Over twenty five residences were burned to the ground, among them being that of Joseph McKenna, member of Congress. This town has a population of about 800.

A dispatch from Indianapolis says: An extraordinary increase in the pay rolls of the Indianapolis pension agency has given rise to a suspicion that the department is giving special attention to rushing through the claims of Indiana petitioners, with the hope that this activity will be helpful to the Democratic party at the November elections. Since General Black became Pension Commissioner the number of pensioners on the pay rolls of the Indiana agency has been increased from 29,000 to 40,000.

A cyclone leveled three paper mills and many houses between Pittsfield and Albany, Mass., Wednesday night.

It is reported that Congressman W. L. Scott of Pennsylvania has subscribed $1,000,000 to the Democratic campaign fund; that Mr. Brice of Ohio and Herman Oelrichs of New York are down for $500,000 each; that the rich men of Tammany pledge a half million, and that Edward Cooper is prepared to donate $100,000.

The National Council of the National Educational Association met at San Francisco Friday, President J. L. Pickard of Iowa City, Iowa, presiding.

Near Gridley, Ill., Thursday night, Miss Witzig, aged 20, was dragged over a barbed wire fence by a horse. Her face was torn off, the lower jaw and tongue remaining hanging to the wire. She is still alive but cannot survive.

FOREIGN.

Emperor William sailed on the royal yacht Hohenzollern on the morning of the 14th inst. for Russia. The Czarina will accompany the Czar. When Emperor William steps upon the deck of the Russian yacht the German standard will be unfurled from the masthead of that vessel.

In the French Chamber of Deputies on Thursday General Boulanger moved dissolution. His proposition was rejected, and the general immediately resigned his seat. During the debate some sharp words passed between Boulanger and Premier Floquet, during which the former called the latter a liar. A duel was arranged between the two, and was fought with swords near Paris, Friday morning. The battle was fiercely contested, and in the second round Boulanger received a thrust in the neck which may prove fatal. Premier Floquet escaped with a few scratches, and in the afternoon delivered the oration at the unveiling of the Gambetta statue.

In the Italian Chamber of Deputies on Friday the question of granting the ballot to women was defeated by a narrow majority.

Prince Milan has demanded of the Prussian authorities that the Crown Prince of Servia, now in possession of Queen Natalie at Wiesbaden, be returned to Belgrade. The German authorities complied with the request, and Queen Natalie was compelled on Friday to deliver up her son to the German authorities. The boy was immediately taken to the railway train and started for Belgrade, the Servian capital.

A dispatch from Cape Town, Africa, says that the Debers coal mine at Kimberley caught fire Wednesday evening. Eight hundred men were entombed. The work of rescue, which began at once, still continues. Hundreds have perished, including Mr. Lindsay, the manager of the company. The bodies of 25 white and 200 black victims were taken out.

Most doleful accounts are given of the ruin and misery wrought by the terrible weather in the East River District of China. Such rains have not been known for more than a hundred years. The town of Shikhung, the chief sugar mart of the province, has several times been flooded and many persons drowned.

The London Times learns from Rome that Cardinal Moran has had frequent interviews with the Pope on the Irish question, and that he has impressed the latter greatly, showing that it is not good policy to interfere with the politics of the Irish, who, he points out, have great power in the colonies and in America.

The Mexican electoral colleges voted on Sunday, re electing President Diaz. The result of the Congressional balloting is as yet unknown, but is expected to favor the administration.

Late advices from Leon, Mexico, the principal scene of the great flood, say that masses of people are packed in portals, stables, and every available place of shelter, averaging one person to less than a square yard of space, with piles of flag matting on the ground for beds, and a few miserable rags for cover. All able-bodied men have been sent away to work by the government. It is still believed that the bodies of many hundred people are in the ruins. Some three hundred were recovered, but the stench was so great that further search was abandoned.

The account of the great Prohibition meeting in Battery D Armory, in this city, on the 13th inst., was in some unaccountable manner overlooked in our last number. We can now only refer to it as a singular success for prohibition as a political principle. And this success was achieved more by the immense numbers present than by the argument of the able speakers. Addresses were made by the Presidential candidates, Fisk and Brooks, by Miss Willard and Mr. Harts, nominee for Governor. But the thousands present, overflowing with enthusiasm, and half astonished at their own numbers, were an argument that was simply overwhelming. That it was which convinced gainsaying, disputing, sneering Republicans and Democrats. They saw the success that succeeds in that crowd, and were awestruck before it. It meant votes, and votes are the arguments that carry a campaign.

Last Tuesday the Chicago police arrested three Bohemians, whom they expect to prove are a part of a band of conspirators sworn to avenge the death of the anarchists upon Judge Gary, Mr. Grinnell, who was then prosecuting attorney, and Inspector Bonfield of the police force. In the possession of these men were found revolvers, daggers, dynamite and a number of bombs. As no arrests have since been made it is not known whether the police suspect any others, though they have listed all who were members of the secret "groups" implicated in the slaughter of May, 1886. These arrests and the railroad conspiracy will go far to convince the public that there is no safety from the human monsters who can thus plot for wholesale and indiscriminate murder, but to act on the suggestion of an old army officer in the American Magazine, and make this dynamite business a capital crime, whether the plot culminates or no.

If the lodge magnates expect to gain an easy victory, and the control of the Prohibition party in New York, they will find themselves quite mistaken. The statement from Mr. Capwell, and the position of the Wesleyan Methodist, mean that the reckless action at Syracuse will lose the party thousands of votes. The nomination of a man so involved in secretism was not only weak, but wicked, and God will not show his favor toward party leaders who can so easily stifle their convictions. Let every patriot in the Empire State remember its history, and resolve that the memory of Seward, Weed, Holley, Riley, Bernard, Stearns, Crooks, Roberts, Spencer, Ward, Southwick, and a host of others, shall not be disgraced by their consenting to this iniquity.

One of the largest of their summer meetings was held last Tuesday evening by the Historical Society of this city. The particular attraction was the presentation of a life-size, bronze bust of Mr. Carpenter by his two surviving daughters, Mrs. Cheney of this city and Mrs. Hildreth of Los Angeles. Accompanying the bust was a fine photograph of the old Carpenter homestead, for more than a generation a landmark in Chicago. Mr. Carpenter was one of the founders of the Society, and left $1,000 to its treasury. This will be known as the Philo Carpenter fund, and the income will be used in binding books which will bear the imprint of the fund. In connection with the presentation, Rev. H. L. Hammond read a sketch of Mr. Carpenter's life, evidently prepared with much care, and more fully reviewing his remarkable life as a business man, Christian and reformer than any account yet published. The narrative was very faithful to Mr. Carpenter's labors as an Abolitionist and an opposer of the lodge, and gave him due honor for this evidence of the nobility of his character, the firmness of his convictions, and his prophetic faith in the triumph of Christian principles. This history will in time be published by the Historical Society. The Cynosure has also asked for a copy, and we hope to publish it next week.

The dynamite conspiracy on the Burlington road has now passed fairly into the hands of the courts. The examination before the United States Commissioner developed the fact that one of the arrested men was a Pinkerton detective, and another is mistrusted. The confession of Bowles, a striking engineer, who had been very active in buying, distributing and using dynamite, was hastened by what he took to be a threat on the part of another arrested man, who was chief of the "brotherhood lodge" in Aurora. Bowles confessed to burying a bomb near Galesburg, when he had been prevented by fear from putting it on the track. He was taken to the spot and the bomb was found. Two important arrests were made at Galesburg immediately after this. It is hoped that the bottom of this murderous conspiracy is reached. Arthur, chief of the engineers' order, was in Chicago last week trying to make some compromise with the Burlington managers. He was met fairly, and is using his influence to have the men vote the strike over and a failure. His deputies went out over the road, but have been thus far met with a strong negative vote. Nobody accuses the "Brotherhood" as accessory to the dynamite business, but the strikers are angry, and will stand by the guilty men. The devil may be cunning, but he is never wise. These men, befooled by their secret oaths, are putting themselves before the world as endorsing, defending and so becoming, after the fact, accessories in a horrible attempt at massacre.

The visit of the young Emperor William to the Czar and the undoubted manifestation of fraternal and friendly feelings between the two autocrats has started all manner of political conjecture. The two governments have been threatening war for a year, but there is nothing but peace now to be mentioned between them. It is even understood that William has projected a visit to the leading monarchs of Europe and will begin an earnest effort to secure a permanent peace by urging a general disarmament. But France does not take it kindly that the stripping process is to begin with her young republic. It is at least fixed that the German Emperor sailed Monday for Stockholm, and that in October he will, officially and by invitation, visit King Humbert of Italy at Rome. The Pope, whom our vicious American optimism declares is a benevolent old gentleman who has nothing to do with politics, has entered his objection to such a meeting. Leo declares that the presence of the Emperor of Protestant Germany will be an act of special hostility toward the Vatican, during the pending crisis in Italian affairs; and he has sent burning messages to his emissaries in Bavaria and Austria urging that those governments use every effort to prevent the meeting of Emperor and King anywhere in Italy. The Italian politicians are inclined to look with favor upon the project, as an aid, even a guarantee, of Italian unity. If William is really seeking the peace of Europe and the world by a plan of disarmament, may God's blessing be on him. He will prove thus a greater benefactor than Napoleon was a terror; and let the papacy fall amid the ruins of forts, while the machinery of direful war becomes transformed into the plows and engines of peace.

MASONIC FRAUD.

THE MANUFACTURE OF MASONIC DEGREES.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Next to the silliness and blasphemy of the degrees of Masonry and other orders, the facts that they have been invented by bad men for the worst of purposes, and that their authors have not hesitated to resort to the meanest and most outrageous falsehoods to entrap the ignorant and deceive and despoil the unwary, are additional reasons why they should be forsaken and reproved. The following in reference to the Rite of Memphis, or "Royal Masonic Rite," one of the popular forms of Masonry, is from purely Masonic sources, and shows at least how the brethren love and regard each other. The first part is from the Official Bulletin of the Supreme Council of the 33d degree of the Ancient Scottish Rite, and is from the pen of "Illustrious Fitzgerald Tisdall of the 33d degree of New York." The date is 1871:

"The so-called Rite of Memphis was concocted by J. E. Marcormis after his second expulsion from the bastard Rite of Misraim. He soon constructed his bantling and constituted himself its head and front. When he first introduced this mass of mystic rubbish he styled it the Rite of Memphis, or the Oriental Rite, and unblushingly declared, in a periodical entitled the Sanctuary of Memphis, that it was introduced into Europe by Ormos, a Seraphic priest of Alexandria and an Egyptian sage, and declared that Brother Marconnis De Negre, the Grand Hierophant, is the sole consecrated depository of the traditions of the Sublime Order."

On the 7th of April, 1839, he published the statutes of the order, and in the same year organized a lodge in Paris. The police finally interfered, and on the 19th of May, 1840, all lodges of the Rite of Memphis were closed. In 1850 he went to England, and after several attempts succeeded in establishing a Grand Lodge of the "Disciples of Mines."

In 1860 he came to New York with an assortment of diplomas, jewels, charters, etc., for the purpose of propagating his Rite. He subsequently secured a deputy in the person of a very worthy, but enthusiastic brother, David McClellan, a lithographer, and Past Master of Eastern Star Lodge in the city of New York. One brother was made (that is, took ninety degrees) while crossing on a ferry-boat from Brooklyn to New York. Brother McClellan did not find it profitable, and sold his diplomas, covered with pyramids, sphynxes, and other imaginary Egyptian symbols, to Bro. Henry J. Seymour of New York, who undertook the propagation of the Rite as a business. "The degrees as he received them numbered ninety-six, but nearly all were skeletons, and, as a good business man, he went to work to supply the deficiency. He secured the services of Henry J. Shields, who for $50 wrote the fourteen degrees of Hermitic Philosophers. He employed Bro. Thomas Picton, whom by letter he created a Sovereign Prince 95th degree, though Picton was as ignorant as a child unborn of what it all meant. Picton wrote the nineteenth degree, which was to be Egyptian in character." He got $50 for his job after suing for it. "Within the last few years, under the business-like guidance of H. L. Seymour, its present head and front, the number of degrees has been reduced from ninety-six to thirty-three, and its cognomen has been changed to 'The American and Primitive Rite of Memphis.' Picton's imagination suggesting the change.

It appeared subsequently that the 96 degree men would not be suppressed. A convention of Masons, held in Chicago, June 17, 1867, in the Masonic Temple, declared, "We are members of the 96 degree Rite, and have, by the authority of the 96-degree Rite, issued by the Grand Hierophant ninety-seven degrees of France, countersigned, acknowledged and sized and recognized by all the great and grand organizations of Europe and all other nations of the world where the work is known. We will not acknowledge or subscribe to such reduction of degrees," etc.

They called their body "The Sovereign Sanctuary of the Egyptian Masonic Rite of Memphis" for America, containing ninety-six degrees; ninety of labor and six official degrees, "which it is not in the power of any body of men or Masons to alter, abridge, condense or interpolate to any less number of degrees." The Rite is divided into four bodies: 1. Rose Croix, eighteen degrees. 2. Hermitic Philosophers, twenty-seven degrees. 3. Grand Council, forty-five degrees. 4. Sovereign Sanctuary, five degrees. The first teaches morality and ancient work. The second teaches morality and science. The third teaches religion, mythology, philosophy, theosophy, geometry and astronomy, etc. The fourth is official. No person can be admitted to the degrees who is not a Master Mason. The election of officers is held at the vernal equinox, to celebrate the revivification of nature. The Temple of the Grand Council represents the place of meeting of the twelve Deities of the Egyptian Mysteries. In the Vale of Armenthes is placed the veiled statue of Isis. In the Orient is displayed the symbol of Osiris and of Egyptian Theogony, the Kneph, or winged egg of earth. "The Sublime Dai represents Osiris. The First Mysatgog represents Serapis. The Second Mystagog represents Horus," etc., ad nauseum. The following caption shall be used at the commencement of all edicts, etc.: "In the name of the Sovereign Sanctuary of the Egyptian Masonic Rite of Memphis, in and for the Continent of America, setting in the valley of America."

This gives a very brief and imperfect sketch of the character of this order. It will be seen at a glance that it is simple heathenism. The old idolatries of Egypt are re-enacted. The organ of this Rite is called the Masonic World and is published in Boston. The editor, speaking of Bro. Arnold's "Story of the Gods," which proves Freemasonry to be identical with the ancient Egyptian idolatries, says, "He might have gone farther and shown that the religion or mythology of the ancient Egyptians was identical with the Christian religion of to-day."

Let us see now what their brethren of the Scottish Rite say of this Egyptian nonsense:

"The Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction has no war to make on the Rite of Memphis. If any one chooses to pay money for worthless degrees, certainly no Mason of the Ancient and Accepted Rite has any objection."

Perhaps not, but he ought to make objection. If Freemasonry, as it professes, teaches "piety, morality and science;" if, as we are told in the Entered Apprentice degree, "Truth is a divine attribute, the foundation of every virtue. To be good and true is the first lesson we are taught in Masonry;" then surely to invent lying legends, formulate worthless degrees and sell them to the ignorant, is not good Masonic conduct, and the "brethren" who do these things ought to be summarily punished. But there is an excellent reason why the Ancient and Accepted Rite should not make objection. It is unwise for the pot to accuse the kettle of blackness. By its own showing the history and origin of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite is as disgraceful, and its legends are as absurd, as anything in the Rite of Memphis. Nay, more! the whole structure of Masonry, from the Entered Apprentice degree to the Supreme Council, is based on a tissue of lying legends, with no foundation in history. They are only the inventions of the worst of men for the most selfish of purposes, designed simply to deceive the ignorant and entrap the unwary. There is as much truth in the story of "Ormus, the Priest of Alexandria," as in that of the legend of the "killing of Hiram," which is enacted whenever a man is made a Master Mason. And yet this tissue of falsehoods is not only the essential element of the Sublime (?) degree, but, says Dr. A. G. Mackey, "it lies at the foundation of every Masonic rite." The invention of recent lodge degrees, purporting to be of most ancient origin, has become to be largely the business of the shrewder class of men who took their first lesson in lying in "Ancient Craft Masonry."

Nor is this to be wondered at. Any system founded on falsehood may be expected to bring forth lies and liars. So long as Masons sell pretended secrets, which are no secrets, and secrets of pretended value, which have no value, they may expect their "brethren" to do the same or similar acts of fraud and wickedness. Has all sense of shame died out of the minds of the members of the Masonic order?

PASTORS WHO KNOW NOT THE POWER OF GOD.

BY E. L. MEADER.

The greatest enemies of the church of God to-day are not the openly-avowed persecutors, nor the indifferent worldlings who take no thought about the welfare of the soul, but they are educated theorists against the power of the Holy Ghost, high reasoning exalting itself above the knowledge of God; teaching for doctrine tha commandments of men; living in subjection to ordinances, "which all are to perish with the using." "Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ."

Many ministers and their people have the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. Their sermons and speeches are not seasoned with the grace of God. The idea is prevalent in many churches that a man must be educated and refined in the wisdom of this world before he is prepared to preach the Gospel. He must entrench himself behind volumes of man's wisdom, theories and doctrines of man's interpretation. These ministers are trained to appear well in the eyes of the world; having a man-fearing spirit, daring not to speak the truth only under the cloak of popularity, and then it is seasoned with worldly conformity. When standing before an audience they do not realize that they are there in Christ's stead—and too many, alas! are not.

There is a cause for this sad state of some churches. There are many pastors and leaders that have not clean hands and hearts. Their eye is not single; if it were their whole body would be full of light. Hundreds of our ministers dare not raise their hands to God and say they are free. Christ has not set them free. Why? Because they will not leave the things of the world. Christ says, "Beware ye of the leaven of Pharisees, which is hypocrisy." Ye are not able to preach the love of Jesus from experience, so you preach from theory, just as a lawyer argues a case in court. There is nothing divine about it. Ye cannot speak the truth, for if ye could the truth would set ye free. Christ says, "Ye are my witnesses." "The Spirit of prophesy is the testimony of Jesus." Again, "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." How dare you to take the position as an embassador for Christ Jesus without being first qualified by a baptism of the Holy Ghost?

I was attending camp meeting this last summer where a man was pointed out to me as a holiness man who had preached and enjoyed full salvation. I heard him pray long and loud and eloquent of words, but evidently lacking the power of the Holy Ghost. I thought I might be mistaken, but shortly after meeting him the first thing that met my eye was the sign of the "three links" on his vest, which is the mark of the beast. He was trying to lead the people into the light, and himself walking in darkness. How my heart sunk within me, and I wept, when alone, for the cause of my Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, my adorable Redeemer and Saviour.

They say, Will a man rob God? Yet they rob him. They take tithes and offerings from the people for work as ministers of Christ, when they are withholding from them the sacred truths of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus. Christ shows the inconsistency and stupidity of those that claim to be doing and living right, who yet belong to these secret societies, by asking the question, "Do men light a candle and put it under a bushel?" How ridiculous! Yet such ministers are doing the very same thing. "Thou art the man," whoever you are, claiming to be a Christian, and yet belonging to these hot-beds of hypocrisy, secret societies, Masonry in particular. Where is all your grand, glowing, high toned wisdom? and what does it all amount to when you cannot see more clearly the true light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ? Surely ye are "blind leaders of the blind."

Then there is the doctrine of heart purity, or holiness, which I believe in with all my heart. It is so mangled with great reasoning that the more we read the more we are confused, and if it were not for a blissful experience and godly assurance we might regard it a delusion. One has seven steps, another four, and another three; and one finds three great separate blessings from God, justification, sanctification and special power for work. Volume after volume are written on each subject, and after we have read them all we are as far from God as when we started. Many are trying to do the work of the Holy Spirit instead of crying, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world!"

Before the Lord revealed himself to me I felt that I was a great sinner and must have a Saviour. I determined to seek the Lord with all my heart. I arose and confessed my sins to God and before the world. I then knelt, consecrating all, and prayed for the gift of the Holy Spirit. I took God at his word. But I found something was between me and God that must be got out of the way. I was holding fast to a thing of the world. I at once gave that up, and the Lord Jesus revealed himself unto me in a most glorious manner. My sins were all pardoned, the blood of the atonement was applied by faith to my soul, and I was cleansed and saved. I was made a child of God, a joint heir with Jesus Christ, and could say, "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new, and all things are of God." God never baptized me with the Holy Ghost to sit down and do nothing, nor to put my light under a bushel. If I do not let my light shine I will disobey Christ's command, "Let your light so shine before men that others may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

O brother, honor the Holy Spirit, and seek the wisdom which comes from God alone, and is not of this world. Seek first the baptism of the Holy Ghost; then listen to his teachings, for "he will lead you into all truth." Be found much in your closet in sweet communion with your Heavenly Father, and O how graciously he will grant every wish that will be for your good. Bring in all the tithes and offerings into the storehouse of the Lord, and see if he will not open the windows of heaven and pour out such a blessing upon you as you shall not be able to contain. Come down from your lofty heights of man's reasoning, and as a little child sit at the feet of Jesus and learn of him. Separate yourself from everything of a worldly nature. Consecrate all to God. Become poor for Christ's sake. Open wide the door of your heart. Then how graciously he will fill you to overflowing with holy love and light and power. Your tongue cannot express the holy joy, the blissful assurance of your acceptance of God as his adopted child. Your tongue is silent. You weep for joy. The true love of God destroys all love for the things of the world, and when God reigns supreme in the heart the carnal will is subdued and the soul is willing to endure all things, suffer the loss of all things, riches, honor, fame—is willing to be counted as the offscourings of all things that they may win Christ. While these words may seem to be severe to those who are not walking in the light of God, yet it is the very truth I am speaking.

If these evils existed among the ministers alone and went no farther there might be some excuse for keeping still, as they have the open Bible before them. But their influence is great for good or evil, and there are thousands led on to eternal death through their ungodly influence. A very promising young man was under deep conviction of sin. I talked with and prayed for him, and he wept. One of the devil's embassadors got after him and got him to join the Masons. I reasoned with him, but he said it could not be wrong, there were so many ministers belonged to the lodge. God will require his blood of such deceived ones at their hands. I have delivered myself.

"Dr. James McCosh's address on retiring from the presidency of Princeton College after twenty years of service," says the United Presbyterian, "is remarkably interesting. It is a simple narrative of the work done during those years, but it holds close attention throughout. When he became president there were but 264 students. There are now 604. Three-fifths of the present students are professors of religion. Although they were pretty strongly entrenched, on becoming president Dr. McCosh courageously dealt with college secret societies. The disease has occasionally broken out since it was first suppressed, but now there are no societies of the kind in the college. The barbarous practice of hazing he also pluckily and successfully grappled with, and with rare exceptions at long intervals, it too has disappeared. Nearly three millions of dollars were contributed to the college during the doctor's presidency. He says the principle upon which the college has acted during these years has been 'never to contract any debt, and never to lay up any money.' Happy is the institution the liberality and devotion of whose friends are such as to warrant acting on that principle. It would not be strange if Dr. McCosh should find in the retrospect of Princeton's presidency profound satisfaction and joy. Who can estimate the importance of the work it has been the privilege of this revered teacher to do? Where is the civil public office that would surpass it in splendid and abiding results?"

GOOD TEMPLARISM AND PROHIBITION.

BY CYRUS SMITH.

I inquired of a man about Prohibition in his locality. He informed me that it was all right, that there had been a Good Templar lodge organized in the spring, and they was expecting an increase this fall. But I did not learn of anything being done for temperance, or that even one of the Good Templars would vote the Prohibition ticket.

I will not stop to argue that the best thing to be done for the cause of temperance in the present campaign is to make votes for the Prohibition candidates. Votes count. But the professedly temperance lodge will not, either secretly or openly, teach men to vote for any particular party. Why? Because, when a secret society tries to run any one political party it is death. The aim of the lodge is secret favoritism, especially in religion, politics and law. If the lodge can elect its own in every party, win each case in the courts for its members, whether right or wrong, and have the secret of their favoritism covered by the church of Christ, it would be the success they seek. According to "their fruits" we do "know them."

Shortly after Cleveland was elected I said to a Good Templar who boasted much of the "grand principles" of his order, "You should have voted for St. John." His reply was, "I would rather vote for Jeff Davis."

The members of the Good Templar lodge are as apt to be Republicans and Democrats as Prohibitionists. Any professed temperance organization that will not support Prohibition en mass is a deception, a fraud, a swindle, and is a failure as far as carrying temperance into permanent effect is concerned, though there may be in its make-up a large number of voters.

Water is of no force to run a mill if it cannot be turned onto its wheel. The temperance lodge as a flume to carry the right kind of power to turn the prohibition wheel is worse than useless, because "it is a broken cistern that will hold no water."

DeKalb, Iowa.

The Birmingham Free Press, in a review of Dr. Fulton's book, "Why Priests Should Wed," says: "It seems that there is a regular secret organization, with its signs and initiation, of women who prostitute themselves to the priests for their sole and special benefit. The initiation garb and signs are described. They are known as B. C.'s, or Blessed Creatures. Specific facts from the records of the courts, showing glaring perversion of justice, are given to indicate how much evil there is under the surface. But this book presents only one side of the picture, the licentiousness of the clergy and the moral nastiness of Romanism. The Papacy is also a political system sending out its ramifications into every country. In our own land, what is not under the control of the Masonic and other secret orders, is controlled by Rome. President Cleveland can be approached only through Col. Lamont, who is a Roman Catholic and has a private telegraph wire from the White House to Cardinal Gibbons's residence in Baltimore. Blaine is no better, parading the Romish religion of his mother. Gen. Harrison, the Republican nominee, is a Presbyterian, but so many of our public men will do anything to obtain power that we cannot trust them. Boston and the other leading cities of New England are ruled by the Roman Catholics. Everything would seem to indicate that we are soon to be called on to wade through blood to obtain another Reformation."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

KNIGHTS AND LADIES OF HONOR.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

[Concluded.]

Another objection to this order is because of its unrepublican and despotic character.

It restricts its membership to white persons, thereby excluding from its benefits a large portion of the citizens of the United States. One would suppose that a society organized "to promote benevolence, morality and science," ought to be based on a broader principle than caste.

The morality that the order seeks to inculcate is quite different from the morality of the Bible, which declares that "if ye have respect to persons ye commit sin;" and is not up to the standard of our civil law, which makes no distinctions of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

Its despotic character is manifest in the powers of the Supreme Lodge, in which are vested all authority to make "Constitutions, laws and rules of discipline and general laws for the whole order." This is composed of its officers, standing committees, representatives of Grand Lodges, Charter members, Past Supreme Protectors and Past Grand Protectors; and no other member of the order shall be admitted under any circumstances except as visitors, and then only when they have received the Suprem Lodge degrees. Thus the great mass of the members of the order are excluded from all participation in its counsels. They may be taxed, fined, or otherwise punished, but have nothing to say in reference to the laws to which they are bound to submit. The aristocracy of the order are the recipients of all authority and power, and the men whose money sustains the great machinery must keep silent.

The despotism of the order is further apparent in its methods of raising revenues for the Supreme Lodge. The sources of revenue are first for charters and supplies. These for a Grand Lodge are $50.00; for a Subordinate Lodge, $100.00. Twenty-eight different articles must be purchased exclusively from the Supreme Lodge, costing in the aggregate $54 15. Besides this there is a per capita tax of twenty cents per member, paid semi-annually, for all under the jurisdiction of Grand Lodges, and thirty-seven and one-half cents, also paid semi-annually, for all under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Lodge. This does not include initiation fees or assessments. Now one would suppose that under a free government a company of people might, if they chose, organize a society for the promotion of "benevolence, morality and science," without paying $100.00 for the privilege, and without the necessity of paying an additional tax of $1.15 per annum, for which tax they receive absolutely no benefit whatsoever, except that laws are made for their government.

This Supreme Lodge, that thus arrogates the right to tax others, gave nothing for its own charter, and is responsible only to itself for the use of the money it receives for the charters thus sold to others. There is not elsewhere to be found a greater absurdity in legislation than the practice of granting charters to "Grand" and "Supreme Lodges," with power to grant charters to subordinate lodges for such a price as they may choose to affix. There are a great multitude of these so-called benevolent societies, whose beneficence consists in selling to their fellow citizens the privilege of doing what they have a perfect right to do by the laws of the land. Thus we see men selling the privilege to organize temperance societies, farmers' associations, and multitudes of other things which these subordinate lodges have just as good a right to organize and carry on as the Grand Lodges from which they purchase these charters.

Then, too, the Supreme Lodge, in claiming the right to print all forms and furnish all fixtures and regalia for subordinate lodges, and compelling their purchase and use, exercises a despotism that would not be submitted to in the ordinary relations of life.

The injustice of the whole scheme is seen also in the forfeiture of all benefits by a failure to keep up dues. Law IV. declares that any member who may become three months in arrears for dues to the lodge shall not be entitled to vote or hold office, nor be entitled to benefits, and when six months in arrears for dues shall be suspended from the lodge, which suspension deprives him of all rights in the order. One would suppose that an order that had for its objects "to promote benevolence and morality," would at least pay back to those who could not conscientiously remain in its membership some part, at least, of what they had paid in; and that a person who had become delinquent because of sickness would be entitled to, at least, some share of the funds that he had previously contributed. But this benevolent (?) order simply says to such persons, "We have used you for our benefit as long as you were capable of being used. Now, go your way, and the State will provide for you in its almshouses, and furnish you with a pauper's grave." This is lodge morality and benevolence! There is also a curious provision in Section 2d of Law-III. It says: "No funeral benefit shall be paid by lodges except in case of pecuniary emergency of the beneficiary, and then only by way of loan, to be deducted from the benefits the beneficiary is entitled to." The burial of dead knights seems to be no part of the business of the order.

Of the comparative cost and advantage of this system of life insurance it may be said that it involves the support of an elaborate system of machinery, conducted by officers who receive such salaries as they vote to themselves in the Supreme Lodge. It also includes the certain payment of dues (initiation not less than three dollars and annual dues of not less than ten dollars) and uncertain assessments. The assessment plan of life insurance has not yet been proved a success. A large proportion of the companies organized on this plan have failed. If this order shall continue to do business, it will be because of the large number of suspensions and forfeitures, and not because of any merits in the plan. Whatever people may think of the general principles of life insurance, no honorable person would desire to receive benefits at the expense of the misfortunes of others.

Of the religion of this order, it may be said to belong to that class adopted and practiced by similar orders. It does not seem to be necessary that a candidate for membership should have any religious faith, or even to believe in the existence of God. It provides for a chaplain, and says his duties are "to offer up invocation to, and ask blessings from, the Deity, and perform such other duties as the laws, rules and usages of the order enjoin." It is not said whether the worship is Christian, Jewish or Mohammedan; but is presumed to be of that general character in which all people can unite. The only respect paid to Christianity is a law that no lodges shall be held on Sunday; but this is doubtless more because of the civil law than out of any Christian conviction.

In conclusion, I would say that many people have doubtless joined this order, scarcely realizing that they had united with a secret society, and were giving their endorsement to the whole secret-society system. They have hoped to secure a cheap and profitable life insurance system, and to make some wise provision for those under their care. To such I commend a careful consideration of its nature and tendencies. They will, I think, find it liable to the following objections:

1. It unites believers and unbelievers in a religious worship, contrary to 2 Cor. 6: 14–18.
2. It is exclusive and selfish.
3. It is founded on caste.
4. It is anti-republican and despotic in its government.
5. It is unjust in its laws towards those who are in arrears for dues.
6. It is a practical endorsement of the whole secret-society system, which, more than almost any one thing, hinders the progress of the Redeemer's Kingdom. For these reasons, and others, it ought to be abandoned.

The Grand Army Post at Meadville is making an effort to raise funds to erect a soldier's monument in the city park. The county has already three or four of these monuments. It will take $3,000 to $4,000 more to put up this one. The poor of our soldiers and their wives and children are needing bread and it is proposed to give them a stone or a pile of stones. That is the way too much of the so called "blessed charity" is going. You might cover Crawford county over with soldier's monuments thick as the stumps in some of her pine forests, and who would be the wiser, better or happier for this foolish and useless outlay of money that might be judiciously invested for some of the real wants of those who were our country's defenders in the hour of her peril.—Sandy Lake News.

One of our Western exchanges says that a practical revivalist requested all in the congregation who paid their debts to rise. The rising was general. After they had taken their seats, a call was made for those who didn't pay their debts, and one solitary individual arose, who explained that he was the editor, and could not because the rest of the congregation were owing him their subscriptions.

THE SITUATION IN NEW YORK.

A STATEMENT.

The New York State Prohibition Convention met in Syracuse June 26th and 27th. There was presented to it a resolution which was favorably received and referred to the committee on resolutions, asking that no candidates be presented by the convention for the suffrages of the people who were active and affiliating members of secret societies, and under obligations to them. W. Martin Jones was presented by the convention as a candidate for the office of Governor, on the ground that he was a Good Templar and a Royal Templar, and would, therefore, be able to draw the vote of the secret societies of which he is a member; by which it is assumed that the members of those societies will not be drawn by principle to the path of duty and reform, but by the ties of secret brotherhood. If this be true, as no doubt it is, it is also true that these temperance organizations are not very actively interested in the cause of temperance, if not willing to vote for Prohibition unless selfishly, because the candidate belongs to their secret brotherhood.

That such a sentiment should be allowed to control is wrong in purpose and practice; and to introduce such a sentiment in a party made up of men of such high professions as so many of ours maintain, is admitting a corrupt principle early in the history of the party's life. That secretism is a powerful element in the control of a political party, is clearly evidenced in the fact that the large majority of the Prohibition State Convention, and especially of the nominating committee, were evidently opposed to the nomination of a member of a secret society; but by the pertinacity of a secret combination, having a powerful leverage, the minority secured the helm and propose to steer the ship. This we deeply deplore, as there are large numbers of active Prohibitionists who cannot consent to vote for a pronounced secretist, one of whose avowed claims to the suffrages of his fellow citizens is, not that he belongs to a temperance society whose members will vote Prohibition without reference to their secret brotherhood, for Mr. Jones is nominated because he will draw secret society votes; not because he comes out on broad principles of American citizenship, and stands on a common footing with his fellow-citizens, but because he can give a grip, whisper a pass-word and operate in a secret ring.

This is rather early in the history of the Prohibition party to look for such an element, and a large number of conscientious citizens and Christian voters cannot submit to such a principle. They will feel called upon to adopt only that part of the State ticket which is filled by candidates who are not avowed secretists, and will fill the place of Mr. W. Martin Jones on the ticket with a candidate who is clear of lodge obligations, and has only the party to work for. F. W. CAPWELL.

REFORM NEWS.

THE NEW ENGLAND AGENCY.

SECRETARY STODDARD GETTING THE WORK IN ORDER.

BALTIMORE, Md., July 16, 1888.

Yesterday was a day of blessing at the N. C. A. rooms in Washington. Mrs. S. and I attended Calvary Baptist church in the morning, and, after the operatic performance was over in the gallery, enjoyed Dr. Green's sermon on mysterious providences very much. The children came in at 1 P. M. to Sabbath-school, and I notice a marked improvement in deportment. Some to whom the Bible was a sealed book a month ago now recite the Beatitudes, the Ten Commandments and the twenty-third Psalm readily. Most of them are bright, intelligent and eager to learn. Bro. Johnston was to have preached at 3 o'clock, but not feeling well requested me to speak in his place. The seventh verse of 2 Timothy, third chapter, suggested some thoughts on Masonic salvation. A conference meeting followed, in which a dozen or more took part to the spiritual benefit and edification of all present.

I should have been in Baltimore this morning, but the bursting of the boiler, seven miles out from Washington, delayed us until another engine could be procured, which landed us safely at 1:15 P. M. This is a fine commercial city, and the parts I have visited are nicely kept. Pastors are scarce just now, and I failed to meet a single one, though Rev. Wm. H. Glasgow, Reformed Presbyterian, was somewhere in the city. The U. P. congregation is "supplied," since Bro. Anderson accepted a call to New York, and removed there in April last. W. K. Carson, Esq., at 1421 McCullough street, received me kindly, and related several instances of craft interference in high places. He was once arrested at Mercersburgh, Pa., for espousing the cause of a young man by the name of Blanchard, who was mobbed for attempting to make an Abolition speech. Neither of us questioned the identity of the young Abolitionist with the senior editor of the Cynosure, and the elder expressed a desire to meet the friend of his youth.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., July 18.—Leaving Baltimore I reached Philadelphia at 9:30 P. M., in time to see the New York train "pull out," but not in time to "get aboard." At Crowell's Temperance Hotel I was comfortably accommodated, and at 7:30 A. M., the 17th, left for New York, regretfully postponing calls on friends until my return from New England. After a delightful ride I was soon pushing my way through the narrow streets of that great, throbbing center of commerce and humanity to Berlin Slip, and to the office of Thomas White, Esq. He sat at his desk in usual health, but showing that time, care and trials leave traces on the strongest, the bravest and most exemplary of men. As in Baltimore, so in New York my search for pastors and others I wished to see was unavailing, and concluding that the time was not favorable to calling in large cities I secured my ticket for Willimantic. A most hearty welcome awaited me on my arrival at the home of our Bro. J. A. Conant. We spent the evening reviewing the past, canvassing the present and planning for the future. He is still the staunch, uncompromising advocate of anti-secrecy and Prohibition. He is quite satisfied with General Fisk, but not so clear about Brooks. With many others he would like "more light." When W. T. Mills was here some two years ago he was the guest of Bro. Conant. When interrogated on his lodge relations, he said he once belonged to the Good Templars, but had seldom attended since his marriage. Subsequent developments led to further inquiry, and Bro. Conant would be glad to know whether or not he is in active connection with the Masonic or other secret orders. It is due to the cause and to its friends that they should not be left to distrust and doubt in so vital a matter. From here I go to Boston via Putnam and Worcester, and hope to meet Miss Flagg at her home on Friday.

WORCESTER, JULY 19, 1888.—This is the third point at which I have stopped since coming into New England. At each I find friends who say something more ought to be done to defeat the lodge rascality and enlighten the people, and express a desire to help. The plan of employing an agent for New England meets with favor. Bro. Buck at Putnam looks upon the movement as a Christian and also as a man of experience in legislative bodies. He holds strongly to the idea of a political anti-lodge journal in Washington as the best means of reaching the largest number of people. There ought to be a paper in Washington that should take the same attitude toward the lodge that the National Era did to slavery. He felt quite sure that such a paper would be sustained, and said he was willing to do his part. J. P. STODDARD.

LATER—MISS FLAGG ENGAGED.—From Boston Bro. Stoddard writes on Friday that he had arranged with Miss Flagg to begin the New England work August 1st. Her health is excellent, but a lameness yet remains from her accident of last winter. The New England friends will heartily endorse this engagement and support their agent with enthusiasm.

SCHOOL AND MISSION WORK IN WASHINGTON.

July 18, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have read in the past few months several articles by able writers on the charities and benevolence of Washington; and since coming to the city have been deeply interested in looking into such work, trying to learn whether the class of people who need it most have been reached. It is true that Washington, by its Christian people, is putting forth a mighty effort to evangelize the masses; many are taking up the street preaching, tent and hall work, thereby reaching very many who are strangers to the church; but underneath the surface, as seen by the workers and the casual observer, lies a mass of vice and sin unrebuked, hardly realized, and but little noticed. This is not confined to the colored people alone, though they far outnumber the white. Here, as in no other city, the poor people are huddled together in alleys over stables, verily in the by-ways and hedges. But few of them ever go to church or Sabbath-school. Many of the children are kept out of the public school, and if they hear the name of God it is only in profanity. Licentiousness is as common nearly, if not quite, as on the old plantations. One woman who lives at the entrance of one of these alleys, who, as a Christian, is trying to keep her daughters undefiled, said to me, "If you want a child ruined, you have only to turn it loose in one of these places. I would not live in the alley could I afford to pay rent elsewhere." A policeman, whose beat takes him through the alley near us, said, "But few people realize the depths of wretchedness, vice and degradation reached by the people in these back places of abode."

This is a terrible state of things. There is no use of trying to cover it up. Rather let God's people try to solve the problem and apply the remedy. It is almost useless to try to reform the adults, but with the children, if they can be gathered in and instructed, we may hope for large results; and this can only be done by personal effort; visiting in these by-ways and gathering them in, not in large numbers, but by having a school near every alley, conducted by Christian women. If they are made to feel that you have an interest in their temporal as well as spiritual affairs, you can then mould their characters as the potter does the clay. I am convinced more and more that the efforts now being put forth but touch the surface, while underneath is a seething mass of humanity that, could we see it as God does, we should start back with horror.

May the Christian people of this and other large cities be led to realize the true state of affairs, and reach down into these depths of iniquity, and pluck souls as "brands from the burning." Christ died for all, and we, his co-workers, must, if we clear ourselves and have stars in our crown of rejoicing, be up and doing, not refusing any work, however repulsive to our senses, remembering, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to the least of these, my brethren, ye did it not to me."

The school is prospering well, and is indebted to T. B. Arnold for a large package of papers donated, also to the Wesleyan Publishing House, and cards from Bessie, Louis and Ellen Kellogg, with a package of papers. Mr. Stoddard is in New England, and I am holding the fort with the help of the Lord. A package of papers just in by mail from Ella White, Wenona, Ill., aged 8 years. The Lord bless the children. Yours in Christ,

ANNA E. STODDARD.

REFORMS HAVE A TIDAL MOVEMENT.

DELAVAN, Wis., July 16, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There are some old proverbs that are untrue, or at least misleading. One of these is that "reforms never go backward." The truth is that all reforms have their periods of advance and and retrocession. They are like the waves of the sea: the tide may be slowly rising, but after each incoming wave there is a back-flow nearly equal to any that has preceded it. It has ever been thus—temperance, anti-slavery and the general cause of Christianity are full of illustrations. From the time of the adoption of the United States Constitution to about 1832, there was an almost steady decline of anti-slavery feeling. At the beginning of that period Virginia and Pennsylvania took the lead in agitation. At its close it was almost as much as a man's life was worth to be known in some quarters as an Abolitionist. In 1833 the tide began to rise, and in just thirty years it had burst all barriers and the legal status of the slave system was forever overthrown.

Nor would it be just to say that during the preceding forty years there had been less of the love of liberty than in the thirty that followed. The people of the nation had been occupied by other things. They were getting ready for their great task. Dr. Lyman Beecher was once asked why Massachusetts had repealed her "fifteen gallon law?" He said that that State had not gone backward in the temperance work, but "she had let go to spit on her hands."

There is here in southern Wisconsin, and largely all over the North, a partial suspension of the anti-secrecy agitation. Local organizations have been given up. Anti-masonic churches have removed their testimonies, and some orators that were both bold and eloquent against the lodge are now silent, if not indifferent. Has the cause gone backward? Only as the wave goes back that another may sweep still farther upward. I find the old friends of our reform all faithful and true. They have abated not one jot or tittle of their abhorrence of the secret lodge system. Every man is willing to respond to the claims of this most needful reform, and if some have "let go that they may spit on their hands," it is that they may grasp more earnestly and lift the harder. One popular movement usually absorbs public attention. The anti-slavery agitation was like Aaron's rod that became a serpent and swallowed up all the serpent-rods of the magicians. Anti-masonry, and to a great extent the temperance reform, were held in abeyance until that great question was determined. Just now Prohibition has come to the front. The best people, the Christian reformers, see in it the immediate pressing, practical issue of the times, and they propose to get rid of one enemy before assailing another. Yet they have not forgotten the plague-spot of lodgery. Like Wendell Phillips, they hold that this is to be "the next great popular movement."

I find some of our brethren are like the apostles, "troubled on every side, but not disturbed; perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed." (2 Cor. 4: 8, 9) I have visited our friends at Sharon, Delavan and Walworth. They all feel a warm interest in the work in the South. Because of the drought of last year they have little ability to give, and I have only added $45 to subscription in these places.

I preached twice on Sabbath, once in the Baptist church in Walworth, and once in the Union Congregational church, of North Walworth. The latter is a new organization, with a new and very nice house of worship. It is ministered to by Rev. Collier, the the long-time pastor of the Congregational church at Delavan. In both places I had full congregations, and a most attentive hearing, and my testimonies against the lodge system were most kindly received. But for the great press of the haying season I should have had some extra meetings. The Seventh Day Baptist church, of Walworth, is in sympathy with us—at least its pastor, Rev. Babcock, is—and would doubtless be open to us. I hope Walworth county will be visited by some of our lecturers after the fall election. Yours for Christ, H. H. HINMAN.

THE LOUISIANA BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION.

DAVENPORT, La., July 13, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left New Orleans on the 10th. After riding a distance of 330 miles we reached Shreveport near midnight. At Antioch Baptist church we met a cordial reception and a crowded house, patiently awaiting our arrival. Elder Luke Allen, the pastor, had a comfortable place prepared for each of the delegates; and, although not a delegate, yet I was comfortably entertained by sister Mary Hunt.

The Baptist State Convention was called to order at noon by the president, John Marks; and at a glance it was evident that the secretists were working hard to defeat Bro. Marks, and elect a secretist as president. There are about 15,000 inhabitants in this city, with ten colored and seven white churches, and legions of lodges. The elegant white Baptist church on Texas street has this inscription in its corner-stone,

"FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF SHREVEPORT, erected A. D., 1845—A. L. 5879."

From this you can draw a conclusion of what secretism is here. This city was the Confederate capital at one time, after the surrender of New Orleans. Gov. B. F. Flanders was appointed military governor of Southern Louisiana, and Gov. Allen of North Louisiana established his seat of government in Shreveport. This is Louisiana's second city.

Rev. A. M. Newman preached the annual educational sermon Wednesday night. His sermon was one of the most forcible I ever heard. Bro. Newman was hoodwinked into the Mason's lodge several years ago, but he very soon saw his error and renounced secretism. Rev. L. M. Luke, of Marshall, Texas, was introduced to the convention on Tuesday, and spoke fifteen minutes, and wound up with a hearty endorsement of the Odd-fellows and Immaculates.

Many handsome new buildings are going up here, at a cost of from $40,000 to $60,000 each. This is a very hilly city, with five different railroads. Most of the colored people are alike in most cities, that is, they are very poor. Wages are ordinary.

The election of officers for the convention took place on Thursday. Rev. A. M. Newman was unanimously elected for president and Rev. A. S. Jackson recording secretary and Rev. A. Hubbs treasurer. The secretists put up Rev. John Marks against Bro. Newman; but praise the Lord for our triumphant success. Although Bro. Marks has served with credit for the past six years, yet when the lodgcites saw they could not elect a Masonic president they quickly nominated Bro. Marks against Bro. Newman, but God overruled. Rev. Thompson, a delegate, after learning my mission here, began to abuse every man who denounced secretism. He said a man should not enter his house with a copy of the Cynosure;—neither should a man who leaves a lodge and speaks against it have a morsel of bread from his house, if he knew it.

I go from here to Boyce. Rev. L. Allen, pastor of Antioch church, is the only pastor here who openly opposes secretism. I expect to preach for Rev. Alexander's church Sunday night, and at Antioch church Monday night. FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

REPORTS FROM NORTHWESTERN OHIO.

FINDLAY, O., July 17, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While farmers are engaged in securing their grain, I am harvesting Cynosure subscriptions, and doing personal work. I see by my book that I have taken thirty-six new subscriptions thus far since coming to this section. It is a custom among successful farmers to first cut a swath around the field they intend to harvest with the cradle in order to secure all the grain possible; so in the reform field much preparatory work is needed before successful meetings and conventions can be held.

I have visited Kenton, Lima, Elida, Allentown, Wapakoneta, Mt. Cory and Cannonsburg. I addressed good audiences in Allentown, Elida and Cannonsburg, speaking twice in each place.

There are two United Brethren churches in Elida and Allentown. The erection of the new churches in these places was largely due to the refusal of a number to support a minister sent to them who was in favor of doing away with their rule excluding lodge members. The locking out of Bro. Floyd from the church at Elida by a minority of the trustees added new fuel to the flame. In short, they were compelled to erect houses of their own to worship God according to the old United Brethren way. Above the door of the neat and commodious edifice, which they have erected in Allentown, appears the following: "United Brethren in Christ, under the constitution and confession of faith of 1841, A. D."

Some years ago Rev. John Levington gave some lectures against the lodge in the U. B. church here. One evening a mob of secretists and sympathizers gathered. A large stone was thrown through the window, striking the stove near Bro. Levington. The hole still remains in the window and the dent in the stove.

I spoke in the United Presbyterian church at Cannonsburg. The secretists were much stirred. Many of the friends expressed a wish to hear me further when not so much pressed with farm duties. Wheat will not be over half a crop in this section. Corn and oats are very forward and bid fair to be a full crop.

This city is,as they say out West, "booming." It has advanced from a population of about five thousand to nearly nineteen thousand in less than two years. The discovery of vast supplies of natural gas and oil have given it this wonderful advance. I have been royally entertained by Mr. J. W. Wilson while stopping here. I expect to take the 1:20 train for Bowling Green and will report further work in due time. W. B. STODDARD.

A FORTNIGHT WITH BRO. HAWLEY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Adair I went to Dexter and called upon the United Presbyterian and Friends ministers; also upon J. C. Allen, a member of the U. P. church, who is deeply interested in our work. He gave a subscription in aid of the Iowa work.

From Dexter I came to Earlham, on the 4th of July. The Friends were holding their usual fourth-day meeting. I met with them and preached the Gospel of freedom from sin and Satan's power. That same day I went on to Van Meter, where there is a United Brethren church in the town and another in the country, about five miles distant. I rode first into the country. A violent rainstorm came on, and in the midst of it we reached the residence of Jacob Gutshall, one of the pillars of the U. B. church of that place. We were kindly received and sheltered for the night. I found him in hearty sympathy with our reform, and he cheerfully donated to aid in carrying it on. The next day I saw John and A. H. Shambaugh and A. B. Kirkpatrick, all of whom are members of the U. B. church. I gave literature to them all for distribution among their friends, and they each subscribed to aid the Iowa Association.

Leaving this country U. B. church, I returned with Bro. Kirkpatrick to Van Meter, and saw Bro. Charles Hester, one of the "old guards" of the U. B. church, who subscribed to the Iowa work, as did his brother, S. R. Hester; also G. E. Trindle and Eli Golden. I was introduced to the pastor, a young man who has labored earnestly to build up the church, but his eyes are holden so he does not see, as do the older brethren, the evils of the secret society system.

From Van Meter I went to the Bear Creek Friends' church, where I preached on Sabbath morning, July 8, and in the Friends' church in Earlham in the evening. On Monday I resumed the distribution of literature and my canvass for donations and subscriptions, friends Hightower and Nicholson cheerfully responding. At the North Branch meeting of the Conservative Friends Joseph Beezley, who sits at the head of that meeting, manifested a deep interest in the anti-lodge reform, and cheerfully contributed to aid in carrying it on, as did also Austin Mendenhall.

From North Branch I returned to Bear Creek and preached in the fourth-day meetings of the Progressive Friends, and also attended the meeting of the Conservative Friends at the same place. In the canvass that followed nine of the Friends and Bro. Eli Cronk, a member of the United Brethren church, gave substantial aid. I arranged with W. P. Smith to put several Anti-masonic books in the libraries of the monthly meetings of the Bear Creek quarterly meeting.

As the result of my two weeks' work I have thirty new Cynosure subscribers, each for one year. Nine of them are to members of the U. B. church; twenty of them are to Quakers, six of whom are ministers.

Brethren, pray for us. And you who owe on Cynosure subscriptions taken by me, and you whose subscriptions to the Iowa Association are due, will confer a great favor by remitting as soon as you can conveniently to James Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Jefferson Co., Iowa, treasurer of our State Association. C. F. HAWLEY.

A CYNOSURE NEWSBOY.

YORK, Pa., July 17, 1888.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—I received the package of fifty Fourth of July Cynosures on June 28, and the next day I began business as a newsboy. I did not cry aloud as the noisy newsboys do, but I cast loose my tongue, as an old sailor would say, and in three hours I sold out, at four cents per paper. And I am of the opinion that a New York newsboy could not have done any better.

York has about forty streets; and I sold out on three of the leading ones. By going from house to house all over York it would be very easy to sell eight hundred Cynosures, at four cents per copy.

I suggest that a good number be prepared for the best day in September; and that all readers of the Cynosure either order some to sell, or buy a few to distribute free to thinkers and readers. I hereby order two hundred copies for my September raid.

I have long been convinced that the anti-secret cause and the Cynosure could both be advanced if our friends will go to work in the right way. Pray, sing and talk; but don't forget to work! Yours, etc., EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

COLPORTEUR NOTES.

BELOIT, Wis., July 13.—We came to Beloit Wednesday evening, worked all day Thursday and Friday forenoon among the ministers of the place; were very successful. Out of the eight that we visited we got six. The Episcopal is the only minister in town connected with the Masons; others are connected with insurance societies. We have had the least opposition here of any place. We attended prayer meeting last night at the Baptist church; had a good meeting and were encouraged and strengthened. We will be in Rockford over the Sabbath. We feel encouraged about the work; are not getting very many names, but we scatter tracts and talk constantly. Yours truly, L. H. PARK.

MARION, Ind., July 19, '88.—Since Saturday noon we have traveled over forty miles on foot, visiting the following places: Fairview, Van Buren, Upland and Harrisburg. We held meeting at Fairview, a Wesleyan district some six miles out of town. We chose walking as the most economical and expeditious way for the places we wanted to visit. If it were not for our baggage we would go afoot all the time. We have finished the work in this county except Warren, which we expect to visit today on our way northeast. While at Van Buren Mr. Cochran told us of a convention of United Brethren churches to be held at Waterloo, Ind., July 31 to August 3, and advised us to be there. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss Masonry. We are planning to reach that place in time.

BRO. COUNTEE AND THE MEMPHIS SCHOOL.

WELLSVILLE, Ohio.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am here on the hilltops trying to recuperate my lost energies. I had no idea how or what was my condition until I reached this rural retreat, and here I am, and for eight days I have been under the daily care of a physician. My entire nervous system is let down, and now, away from toil and the bustle of my regular avocation, I am trusting Him who hath promised for a speedy recovery.

I have been here already ten days, and so far I have improved only sufficient to remain out of bed all day for two days. I am among kind friends, and God more than all cares for me. There are very few colored people here; not enough to have a church of any import.

One man came to see me yesterday, and he was a Knight Templar. He tried to have me recognize him as a Mason, and I could not do it. I refused all of his overtures for a while, and finally I gave him and his signs out to the family with whom I stopped, and they made him ashamed and angry, too. There is no colored lodge within fifty miles of this place, and this man, though a Mason, has not been in a lodge for over ten years. He was a poor excuse, and very ignorant.

I shall be here, D. V., until the 25th inst., by which time I hope to be able to take the field in the interest of our school at Memphis. This school is to be, like the Wheaton school, opposed to secret societies. Bro. J. K. Davis, of Concord, Mich., is to be Principal. The building now in course of erection is to be three stories, brick, and will be ready for occupation by Oct. 1.

Bro. Woodsmall was very much absorbed in this work, and gave the last of his days on earth to its uprising. The bulk of our people in the South, being members of secret societies, are opposed to the rearing and successful operation of this school. Last year the school work was done in my church, "The Tabernacle Baptist," and forty ministers attended for three months, and they have leavened the country for over one hundred miles, and we hope to have 100 in attendance this year. We need $6,000 to complete and furnish for occupancy, and we earnestly ask all who will to aid us is establishing a school that will do more good to thwart the evil influences of secrecy among an easily seductive race than all other influences combined. This school will also be an industrial or a technical institute for the young, and the Bible will occupy a prominent place in all branches of training pursued in this school. I am soliciting subscriptions, or expect to as soon as my strength will admit. I will visit Chicago, the Lord willing, by August 25, if not earlier. I ask the prayers of all those who love God. Yours as ever,
